This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

"I.C.S." Adopts the All-Slug Way

THE International Textbook Company, owners of the International Correspondence Schools (I. C. S.), Scranton, Pa., first introduced slug composition in their extensive composing room by the installation of a Model 8 (three magazine) Linotype, in March, 1912.

Since that date, the economy of the slug system over the single type method has become more and more apparent to I. C. S. officials.

Based on their own experience with Linotype economy the International Textbook Company has now decided to place its entire printing plant on an all-slug basis. They are therefore replacing their individual type equipment with

CONVENTION ARRANGEMENTS

Everything is in readiness for the sixty-third session of the International Typographical Union, which convenes Monday, August 13, at Colorado Springs, Colo. This year also marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the dedication of the Union Printers Home, which occurred May 14, 1892. Typographical Union No. 82 intends to go the limit in caring for the delegates and visitors during convention week, and has completed details that will insure every one a hearty welcome and enjoyable time while sojourning in the famous Pikes Peak region. Midsummer is always the best time of the year to visit Colorado, as it is a period of continual sunshine and mild temperature, and the altitude makes the atmosphere especially invigorating to those living in other sections of the country where the sultry heat is oppressive.

Several personally conducted tours to Colorado Springs are being arranged, among the cities represented being New York, Pittsburgh, Chicago and St. Louis. These tours will give every one contemplating making the trip a choice of routes, no two of which go over the same railroad lines. Each tour gives one the opportunity of returning by any route desired, and the return limit of the tickets is of sufficient duration to enable the traveler to enjoy an extended vacation if so desired. The fact that the Union Printers Home has just had an extension added to the main building and other improvements made will be an incentive to our members to visit the institution this year. The grounds and land under cultivation are said to have never before been in such fine condition for inspection, and Superintendent Daley will make a special effort to have the surroundings in perfect shape for the hundreds of visitors that will assemble in the Home city during convention week.

Headquarters will be at the Hotel Acacia. There are numerous other hotels in the city and immediate vicinity which give the tourist an opportunity to select one that will suit his purse. Those intending making the trip should communicate with W. I. Reilly, box 613, Colorado Springs, Colo., for all information as to hotels. He is chairman of the convention committee and will gladly enlighten any one in the matter of hotel accommodations, rates, etc.

There will be no special rate made by the railroads, but the usual tourist rates which are effective during the summer will prevail. Any local railroad agent can impart full information regarding this feature.

On arriving in Colorado Springs the delegates should immediately deposit their credentials with Secretary-Treasurer Hays at his headquarters in the Hotel Acacia. Committee assignments, with the exception of the laws committee, are made after the delegates have arrived in the convention city. If credentials are not deposited immediately President Scott will be unable to make selections that he otherwise would, were a full list in his possession. Delegates will please bear this injunction in mind and act accordingly.

The constitution of the International Union requires all amendments to be passed upon by the committee on laws prior to action by the convention. The committee will meet in Colorado Springs on Tuesday morning preceding the opening of the convention, which will be the following Monday. Propositions can only be submitted by accredited delegates or subordinate unions, and should be either mailed or handed in person to Secretary-Treasurer Hays, and they will be transmitted by him to the committee on laws. It is urged that all amendments to the laws or other matters intended for action by the convention be mailed immediately to Secretary-Treasurer Hays at his Indianapolis address. This will insure early and deliberate action upon them, as a proper record can be made of the propositions, and they can then be placed before the committee on laws immediately on its convening. A compliance with this request will greatly facilitate the work of the convention, and also give more time to consideration of the problems.

The reports of officers to the Colorado Springs convention, now in the course of preparation, and which will be mailed to officers of local unions and convention delegates about the middle of the present month, will show the organization, both numerically and financially, to be in the best condition in its history. The different funds show an appreciable increase, with the exception of the old age pension fund, and the membership has increased more than 1,100 during the year. Earnings of our members also are several million dollars more in the aggregate than they were the previous year. This indicates that employment has been steady and wages increased, which insures a good attendance at the silver anniversary celebration at the Union Printers Home.

Ignorance Is Bliss.

Statements made at the convention of the National Council of Women, in session at Winnipeg, Man., last month, are most surprising, in view of the fact that the International Typographical Union was the first trade union in this country and Canada to demand equal wages for its members, regardless of their sex. It was declared on the floor of the convention, while the subject of the union label was under discussion, that the typographical union did not stand for equal pay for equal work among men and women. Of course, our members know, as do many people not connected in any way with trade unions, that this was a bald misstatement of the facts. The declaration coming to the notice of M. N. Williams, a member of Toronto Typographical Union, he took occasion to refute the statement in a letter to the Toronto Star, in which he said, in part:

> Let me say that the International Typographical Union of North America has, for longer than the age of many of these women, stood most emphatically for equal wages and conditions for both sexes. Public speakers should be sure of their facts before making statements that cast a reflection on the chivalry of the men who form the greatest of trade unions.

War's Effect on Newspapers.

Paris newspapers are experiencing a great reduction in circulation as well as in size as a result of the war. Several had circulations of over a million copies a day a few years ago, and these figures have been cut more than half in some instances. The print paper crisis is also acute, and it causes one to wonder what effect our entry into the struggle will have on the newspaper industry in the United States, should the contest continue over a period now predicted in government circles, and reach the gigantic proportions expected. Paris newspapers for many months have been printing but four pages a day, and this will be reduced to two pages, and, unless the situation changes, it is said papers will begin to stop publication within a few weeks, and by November 1 all newspapers will probably have been suspended. France obtains most of its paper from Norway, and the submarine boats have forced the French publishers to look to America for an adequate supply of paper.

While on the topic of newspaper circulation, a statement by the editor of a Russian daily in New York city is interesting. He says that up to the breaking out of the Russian revolution the official paper of the Russian government, the Government Messenger, had a circulation of about 25,000. At the present time the paper is known under the name of the Messenger of the Provisional Government and its circulation reaches 2,250,000, a figure never achieved by any other newspaper in the world.

Hitting the Sawdust Trail.

On June 13, employes of the Charles Francis Press, New York city, three hundred strong, appeared in the Billy Sunday auditorium and formed a splendid array showing a cross made with French, British and Red Cross flags filled in with United States flags. In presenting this design those holding the cross flags of French and British stood up first, and then all those holding United States flags arose and waved "Old Glory." It was described by those present as a unique and very impressive picture. The employes were all taken up in the vehicles owned or hired by the company, and many of them struck the trail at the close. The hymn they called for was No. 297.

Colonel Pope's Patriotism.

That was indeed a brilliant outburst of patriotism made by Colonel Pope, president of the National Manufacturers' Association, when he said, referring to labor: "The manufacturers would prefer to work a ten-hour day, at the present scale of wages. This would be more economical for the government." Exactly so! And would it not be more economical for Pope and his ilk also?

This bombastic follower of the Post-Parry-Kirby doctrine would turn over his plant to the government, which would recompense him for its use and provide a small margin of profit besides. Under this brilliant plan, the stock of the concern would not be subject to taxation, nor would the concern itself be liable to a tax on its property. Pope would receive a substantial amount for depreciation of his plant, and he and the other stockholders would be allowed a margin of profit on the stock which they held. Briefly stated, the government would guarantee a profit to the manufacturers, but all labor would be placed on a ten-hour basis at the present rate of wages, which is based on either a nine-hour or an eight-hour day. The hours of work would be longer with no increase of pay! Indeed, a brilliant idea, when every day sees the cost of living mounting higher and higher.

In this connection there is comfort for organized labor to see that the clamor in certain quarters that enforcement of labor laws be suspended during the war is meeting with no success. President Wilson took a decided stand in opposition to the plan, and Governor Whitman vetoed the measure enacted by the state legislature in New York that would have allowed the Popes and all other hypocritical patriots of the employing class to place a yoke about the necks of the workingmen that would take years from which to rid themselves after the war is over.

Newswriters' Pay in Australia.

According to an article appearing in a recent issue of the Editor and Publisher, consternation is prevalent among the newspaper publishers of Australia, due to the award of the Federal Arbitration Court which granted an increase in salaries to editors and reporters which will take about $90,000 a year out of the pockets of the publishers. Forty-six hours is declared to be a proper week's work, with the following rates of pay: News editor, $60 per week on morning papers, $55 evening; editors of weekly papers, $60 per week; editorial writers, $60 per week; other classes of editorial work are rated from $25 to $60 per week, the latter figure for the managing editor. Reporters are placed on a sliding scale, $7.50 per week the first year, $13.50 the second and $16 for the third year of their training.

A feature of the award that will appear strange to American newspaper workers is the pay of the district correspondent, whose stuff will cost the papers 4 cents a line instead of 3 cents, as formerly. He is to have the sole right of his district to any reasonable degree, and his pay must not drop under $20 per week, while outside of his district he will receive $6 per day of eight hours, with $3.50 for half that time, time over four hours to rank as full pay. In his case, also, sick pay and a three-weeks' consecutive holiday annually are fixed, and if employed on Saturday sporting features for an evening paper, he shall receive $4.75 for the afternoon, with a fee of over a dollar for any special assignment, whether copy is published or not.

An annual holiday of three consecutive weeks with full pay is also a part of the award. Full salaries are to be paid for the first week of sickness, the second week half salary, and the third week one-quarter salary. After being on the staff for over six months, four full weeks' pay will be given in the case of sickness, four additional weeks at half pay, and the third four-week period at one-quarter pay. No differentiation was made between male and female employes.

Recruiting British Subjects.

The following letter received by the editor of THE JOURNAL, under date of June 19, is self-explanatory:

To the Editor of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL:

May I hope for space in your valuable publication through which to reach as many as possible of the British and Canadian subjects in this country?

A British recruiting mission has been established at 280 Broadway, New York city, for the voluntary enlistment of British subjects. The recruiting office has been open for two weeks and in that time close to 1,500 candidates for enlistment have offered themselves. This, however, is only a beginning. It is estimated that there are in the United States at least 500,000 British and Canadian subjects of military age. It is our purpose to reach them; to convince them that they are needed by their country, and to enlist as many of them as possible.

It is not our mission here to hunt out so-called "slackers," but to open the way for those loyal subjects who heretofore have not had the opportunity to enlist. Prior to the opening of our recruiting headquarters, a British or Canadian subject desiring to enlist found it necessary to pay his own expenses to the nearest recruiting depot in Canada, where he took the risk of being rejected and having to pay his own expenses to return home. Now it is different. When the United States entered the war with Germany, it was arranged whereby Great Britain could recruit her subjects here, and also have the co-operation of the United States recruiting machinery. It is now possible for British subjects to present themselves at United States recruiting depots nearest their homes and there be examined as to their fitness for service, and if accepted, be forwarded without expense to themselves to a designated point of mobilization and training. All obstacles have now been cleared from the pathway of the British subject who is willing to enlist.

Great Britain is calling her sons because they are needed and I feel sure there will be a generous and ready response to the nation's call.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

W. A. WHITE, Brigadier-General,
British Recruiting Mission.

Technical Press Resolutions.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted at a special meeting of the Technical Press chapel, New York city, held June 4, 1917, called to discuss the proposed increase of second-class postal rates and its imminent effect on the printing trades in the east. As employes of the Technical Press, a printing concern to publishers which prints over forty weekly and monthly magazines and employs over 200 skilled men, they are in a position to know what the ultimate outcome of these increased postal rates would mean, the firm already having lost several publications directly traceable to the war. The resolutions were sent to his congressman and senators by each member of the chapel:

Whereas, The proposed increased rates on second-class postage threatens to become a law, having already passed the house of representatives, as a part of the war revenue bill, and this bill is now being considered by the senate finance committee, which shortly will make its report to the senate, who in deliberative session will weigh with proper regard the urgency, necessity, and justice to raise the said postal rates, whose enactment would mean absolute destruction to a large part of the printing and publishing business, with the consequent loss of employment to thousands of men and women in the printing industry throughout the east; and,

Whereas, Publishers around the country of the public press, aroused by this menace to the circulation of their papers, have voiced in no uncertain terms the pernicious effect of such legislation, and the decrease rather than increase of revenue that would be the result of its enactment, while publishers of technical magazines and trade journals, already hard hit by the high cost of paper and production, have viewed with alarm the gradual withdrawal of their only means of subsistence—their advertising columns—due to a steady war economy, now face the added hardship of these contemplated increased postal rates, which to many must mean their suspension to the detriment of the manufacturing and technical trades, to whom, for progress, the dissemination of ideas in their various lines is essential; and,

Digitized by Google

Whereas, The organized printing industry, by agreement, pledged to a fixed wage scale for years to come, could not foresee the unexpected and arbitrary increase in the cost of the necessaries of life, which compact now means added hardships and privations on the altar of good faith, while the impending curtailment of publication activity threatens further the already inadequate earnings of its members and the total elimination of many through lack of employment—and this to a class heavy in the majority, by age and skilled training unfit for other hurried vocations—for both in its patriotic volunteers for the war (to whom it bows second to no other skilled trade), and the draft from whom its eligibles can claim less exemptions, have and will take its youth and brawn, while the remainder stand a unit, to face their share still to be incurred; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the Technical Press chapel, members of the International Typographical Union, Local No. 6, New York, in meeting assembled solemnly protest against any legislation tending to increase second-class postal rates, serving as it does to defeat its own end, by reducing the number of publications and their editions; by throttling the slogan of "Business as usual" and curbing the dissemination of news, ideas, business and otherwise taxing unnecessarily the right of free speech through the press, and therefore earnestly urge every senator and congressman to go on record against such proposed legislation, whose enactment would tend to this disastrous effect; and whose reflex will not only find its echo in the publications and the printing trades involved—but over the entire country affected in general; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes, sent to each of the publications printed by the Technical Press; that copies be distributed to every member of the chapel (day and night) to mail to his representatives, and that a copy be sent to senators and congressmen of the United States at Washington.

Labor Unions and the Church.

The Congregationalist and Christian World, in its issue for June, contained the following complimentary editorial on the stand taken by our official magazine on the relations of trade unionism and the church:

The magazine of the International Typographical Union, THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, always contains something of interest even to readers who do not belong to this particular most estimable craft. It is a pleasure to find in its leading editorial for May a plea for the method of conciliation and arbitration rather than the strike and the lockout in the solution of labor problems. It seems that there is a referendum pending on the subject among the members of the union, and the editors say: "We shall see when the votes are counted whether the union is to take a giant's stride along the road of progress, or whether we are to return to the primitive methods and policies of more than twenty years ago." They then proceed to show that the method of arbitration has thus far worked well.

In the same issue of the magazine we are glad to find a paragraph calling attention to a booklet published by the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church containing a report on the church and social questions and taking "an advanced stand on such leading questions as a living wage, the unequal distribution of wealth and child labor." "Of course," they say, "organized labor welcomes any assistance the church can give along these lines."

We are pleased to call attention to this friendly word in the official magazine of a labor union and to suggest that if church papers and labor union papers would each give more space to presenting the things on which they agree and can work together, it would go far to promote a better understanding among the readers of both kinds of periodicals. Charles Stelzle, of the Federal Council of Churches, is doing an excellent work in providing acceptable material of this character.

George Dabney Retires.

George R. Dabney's long service in the composing room of the Pittsburgh Dispatch came to an end last month, on his retirement from active work at the trade. No one has a greater acquaintance or a larger list of friends throughout the jurisdiction of the International Union. George Dabney's union record is an enviable one. The Pittsburgh district has experienced several stormy periods in trade union history, both in the printing and other trades, and it was due to the wise council of such men as George Dabney that the labor movement was not wrecked on the hidden shoals of fierce opposition from employers and unwise leadership in labor organizations.

The following is from the Pittsburgh Dispatch of Sunday, June 10, anent Mr. Dabney's retirement:

On the occasion of his retirement from active work, George R. Dabney, for forty-six years associated with the Pittsburgh Dispatch and the oldest employe in point of connection with the paper, was honored Friday evening by his fellow workmen in the Dispatch composing rooms with a presentation of a gold watch and chain. Mr. Dabney was born December 11, 1849, in Liberty, Clay county, Mo., served his apprenticeship to the printing trade in Columbia, Mo., and joined the St. Louis Typographical Union June 7, 1868. On April 11, 1870, he deposited his card in Typographical Union No. 7, of Pittsburgh, and since has worked continuously on the Dispatch. He served as president of No. 7 for eight years, represented Pittsburgh Union as a delegate to the International Typographical Union in 1885 in New York and was a delegate from the International Typographical Union to the first peace congress at Carnegie hall, in New York.

Mr. Dabney has always been active in labor movements, being a charter member of Typographical Union No. 7 when reissued in 1875, a charter member of the Iron City Central Trades Council and a delegate from No. 7 to that body since its formation. While president of No. 7 he made three wage scales with the newspapers and job printing offices of Pittsburgh without friction.

His retirement, due to failing health, is universally regretted not only by his associates on the Dispatch, but by the members of No. 7 and union men generally and by a large circle of friends. He intends to remove to Indianapolis, where he will make his home with a son. In his nearly half a century of residence here and employment with the Dispatch his many admirable qualities won him a popularity which makes his departure seem a personal loss to his co-workers and neighbors.

THE advertising section of a prominent newspaper trade publication gives sufficient evidence to prove that the publishing business is in bad at the present time. Sixty-three newspapers and six job printing concerns are advertised for sale in a single issue. Notwithstanding this condition, representatives of this industry are compelled to spend a large portion of their time at Washington endeavoring to prevent administration officials and congress from adding to the burden.

At the recent meeting of the Virginia State Federation of Labor, held at Roanoke, printers were very active in all the proceedings. Three of the principal offices of the federation will be filled by members of the typographical union the coming year. W. E. Doherty, of Norfolk Union No. 32, was elected president; secretary, C. P. Harwood, Richmond Union No. 90; treasurer, Frank Lyons, Newport News Union No. 353.

The official vote adopting the arbitration agreement with the Closed Shop Division of the United Typothetæ and Franklin Clubs of America appears in this issue of The Journal, pages 14 to 17. The majority in favor was 12,475. This is an emphatic endorsement of a plan that prevents strikes and lockouts in the book and job printing industry. The agreement is similar to that which has been in effect for many years with the newspapers.

F. W. Oestreich, of San Diego, Cal., writes The Journal refuting an item that appeared in this magazine last month, stating that his printing plant had been closed and the firm had retired from business. As a matter of fact, our correspondent must have been very much misinformed, as the Oestreich Printing Company has been very busy for the past five years, and, as the owner says, "is going to continue in business at the same old stand."

Students of the school for printers' apprentices of New York city have inaugurated an annual memorial for William Bradford, who was America's first public printer. It was recently found that the grave of Mr. Bradford in Trinity churchyard has been barren on Memorial day in past years. The students of the school visited the cemetery in a body on that day and placed a wreath on the grave. The apprentices also visited the vault in which Hugh Gain, America's first Irish printer, is buried.

Increases In Scales

An agreement satisfactory to both parties has been signed by Detroit Typographical Union No. 18 and the publishers of that city, a wage increase of 10 per cent taking effect immediately, and at the end of two years another advance of 5 per cent will be effective. Auxiliary typesetting machine offices are also parties to the contract. The pay of proofreaders and bankmen has been placed on the same basis as that for other journeymen, and a flat scale now prevails in all composing rooms. A bonus system, which has been in vogue on typesetting machines, is continued. Proofreaders and bankmen, by the new adjustment, had their wages raised $7 and $8 per week.

Representative Campbell has negotiated a new wage scale for Goldsboro (N. C.) Union No. 761, making the minimum wage $15 per week. This union has only been organized a short time, and while the scale is low, it is an increase of $3 over the wage paid under unorganized conditions. Mr. Campbell also succeeded in having a reduction of one hour a day made in one of the offices.

The newspaper scale at Newark, N. J., has been settled by mutual agreement after arbitration proceedings failed to compose the differences. Back pay dates from the first of last January, and the scale was placed at $30 per week for day work and $33 nights, to be in effect after the first of last June.

Secretary Kellogg, of Titusville (Pa.) Union No. 289, reports a new wage scale, as follows: Morning papers—Foremen, $22.50; machine operators, $21; handmen, $18. Book and job offices—Foremen, $18; machine operators, $18.50; handmen, $16.50.

An increase for the members of Kansas City (Mo.) Mailers' Union No. 7, amounting to $1.20 per week, divided over a three-year term, is the result of negotiations made with the publishers last month by Vice-President Smith.

Representative Pendergast assisted in securing a wage increase of $2 per week in the newspaper branch and $1.50 for the book and job printers of Sandusky (Ohio) Union No. 237.

An increase of $1 per week for foremen and hand compositors and $1.50 per week for machinist-operators has been secured by Bartlesville (Okla.) Union No. 648.

Fort Dodge (Iowa) Union No. 713 has a new wage agreement, operative for one year, the wage increase being $2 per week all around.

TORONTO (ONT.) MAILERS' UNION No. 5 has a new wage scale, with an increase of $2 per week over the old agreement.

AN increase in wages ranging from $2 to $5 per week, graduated over a period of two years, has been secured by Freeport (Ill.) Union No. 524.

HAND compositors get an increase of $1 per week and floormen $2 under the terms of a contract negotiated by Huron (S. D.) Union No. 561, to be in effect for one year.

A CONTRACT continuing indefinitely has been signed by the employing printers and Berlin (N. H.) Union No. 640, and wages are increased $2 per week under its terms.

A TRIBUTE.

"By their deeds ye shall know them."

Daniel J. Mahoney is dead!

On the morning of Tuesday, June 5, this sad announcement was heralded to the members of Minneapolis Typographical Union No. 42.

"Dan," as he was familiarly called, was one of the best-known printers in the middle west, having held several responsible positions, principally on the newspapers in the Twin Cities. At the time of his death he held the position of ad foreman on the Minneapolis Morning Tribune.

The members of the Morning Tribune chapel bow in sad submission to the divine act of the Ruler of the Universe, in His benign wisdom, in removing from the scene of his earthly activities their associate and fellow workman, realizing that in his death they have lost a stanch member of the chapel; one whose union principles were steadfast and whose stewardship was marked by an undeviating loyalty, fairness and justice, both to his employers and those under his charge. Toward his co-workers he was considerate and generous, and those of us who knew him longest appreciated his worth more as the years went by.

He was a friend whose heart was a treasurehouse of the great wealth of his native Irish generosity and whose character was of the highest unionlike order and in sympathy with everything pertaining to it.

It is with a feeling of pride that testimony is borne to his worth as a workman, and to his unfailing courtesy, kindness and thoughtfulness for those with whom he had been associated for years, and which have been exhibited on numerous occasions to the benefit of many a footsore and weary "tourist" printer in the "good old hand-set days" of long ago.

It has been said "that no man ever accomplished anything worth while without the inspiration of a good woman." Hence it is presumed that "Dan" Mahoney's tenacity of purpose in pressing forward to the goal of high ideals in character and workmanship has had splendid impetus from the influence of his wife; and it is to her and her dutiful son that we tender our sincere sympathy in their hour of bereavement, trusting that He who doeth all things well will bestow upon them that solace and consolation that will sustain and comfort them in the dark hours, thus enabling them to look beyond the shadows of earth to the higher day beyond. ATTENDANCE AT MEETINGS.

Reading THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL shows what seems to be a deep-rooted and general complaint as to attendance at meetings of the locals. It is not conducive to large and general attendance when a member will rise in his place and blurt out in a semi-audible monotone, "The gentleman that has just spoken occupies the time of the union unnecessarily and boisterously," and drops back into his seat as if a shell from the indomitable and ubiquitous submarine hit him broadside. You never hear from this style of individual unless he condemns in a growl some master mind that has struck the keynote and made the welkin ring with his vibrant vocabulary. The late lamented "Booth" Thomson (may the Lord succor him and give him eternal refreshment) used to say to the writer, "I don't care a tinker's dam for these picayunish enemies that harass me, but can not feaze me." Our president, the best in the land, gives these gentry short shrift, but as they indulge in a few words he generally ignores them.

Unions outside of our craft, but in harmony with the universal or cosmopolitan body, have classified their members as union men and card men, the members attending the meetings as full-blooded union men—unadulterated.

Cleveland, Ohio. H. ST. VINCENT HICKEY.

THE TOWN MEETINGS WERE AN INSPIRATION TO LIBERTY.

It is with considerable regret that I note that the baseball tournament for this year has been canceled. I assume, however, that it was felt that the war would affect the attendance, and that the outlook was of such a doubtful character as to both receipts and enthusiasm, it would be better to forego the printers' classic of 1917.

It seems to me that if there is any time in which the people in this country and on this continent should get together and take stock of their country's assets, its welfare and its safety, this is the particular year and time for such assemblages. Epecially is this true of the conferences of wage earners. We are going to have something more to say and a more important part to play in national affairs from now on. This has been and is true of wage earners of all the belligerent countries, and it will be true in this country. Why not, therefore, continue our conventions, our tournaments, our meetings generally? Why not devote time at each of these meetings to the welfare and safety of the country, and also to the coming reconstruction period? We must remember that there are enemies within as well as without, and that the enemies within are far more subtle and dangerous just now than are the enemies without. Food speculators come within this category; other speculators in the necessaries of life fall little short of it, and there are still others. The demon Greed stalks abroad in the land and he has the faculty of garbing himself in robes of patriotism to deceive and coddle the unwary.

Indeed, the people should get together in forums, in conventions, in mass meetings, in all kinds of public assembly, for it is the people who have the great stake.

So far as we are concerned, let us continue to hold conventions, including International, district and state. JAMES M. LYNCH.

HOW ABOUT A PENSION INCREASE?

What action will be taken at the next International Typographical Union session on the raising of the pension payment? Several members who have occupied space in THE JOURNAL have denounced such a proceeding as raising the pension assessment from one half of 1 per cent of the wages to a full 1 per cent, but I don't remember seeing anybody occupying THE JOURNAL's space in opposing scale raising, even when present scales are very comfortable wages for any man. Why not be consistent, printers? Most of you are getting from $2 up a week more than formerly. Can you not spare a few extra cents a week from that to help out your once fellow member in the printing offices? Think how little $5 is today after the average local union has soaked the poor down-and-outer for dues, generally "all the traffic will bear!" Have a heart, boys; and remember that you, too, will be a pensioner, in a few years, at $5 per, less big dues. Then the smallness of your former action in opposing a raise will dawn upon you. Do it now. ROBERT TIMMS.

EXPERIENCES AT THE HOME.

To the members of the International Typographical Union I think it about time for me to speak a few words in THE JOURNAL anent my experience at our Home. Hence I submit the following:

Twenty-eight or thirty years ago I was honored by being admitted to membership in the International Typographical Union. When the question of establishing our present Home was discussed in unions with which I was affiliated at different times, I was always an ardent supporter of the proposition to take care of our sick and aged brothers and sisters, for in the last analysis of things we are all brothers and sisters. I being a young, healthy, happy, care-free, devil-may-care pirate, never thought I could possibly need a home, but I knew of several others who did need such help as could be given through a place such as was proposed to establish. Years rolled by. My eyesight failed me, I could not work at my trade. I became a laborer in a linotype metal factory in the east. Learned a new trade and made a living by refining metal. The eight-hour strike came on. I renewed my card which had lapsed while I was a laborer in the metal works, and continued my work as a linotype metal worker. Being of a somewhat proud nature, I would not apply for admission to the Home, as I could still see well enough to earn my living, and did not think it just or honest for me to sponge or live off the efforts of others. I have been very successful as a linotype metal worker, earning good money, and, with the true spirit of the Missouri river pirate and tramp printers of bygone days—than whom there are none better—though there may be more wise and frugal people, I saved little from my earnings, but spent nearly all I made. I acquired a one-fourth section of desert land in the Salt River valley in Arizona and persuaded "old" Dave Gloss, a union printer, to do the same, and decided to improve it and make my home there when I could no longer work at my profession as metal refiner. During the eight-hour strike and since, I had kept my card paid up, though not able to work on the machine or in the adroom. I was happy in the thought I would soon be able to retire to live out the rest of my life as boss of my rancho.

Like a thunderbolt from a clear sky came the incident which has impelled me to inflict you with this, my first contribution to THE JOURNAL. I have for ten years made my headquarters here in Oakland, affiliated most of the time with No. 36. All these years I had been slightly troubled with hernia rupture. About October, 1916, I fell off a platform behind a machine, where I had refined some metal, and was barely able to reach my room. I had but few dollars in my possession and for a moment I thought "30" had been called for me. Especially when a doctor told me an operation, very dangerous to me, was the only hope for me to be ever able to work again. I had no money to pay for an operation or hospital attendance, and I thought seriously of making an end of it all—a cowardly thought, I admit.

Friends of mine of No. 36 learned of my plight and rallied to my aid, and with the sick committee persuaded me to make application for admission to the Home.

In due time I was advised of a vacancy at our Home, and that I could come at any time up to a certain date, allowing me about fifteen days to make the trip from Oakland to Colorado Springs.

Upon the notice from Secretary Hays of my admission to the Home, the executive committee of No. 36 held a special meeting and provided necessary funds to defray traveling expenses, and in due time I arrived in Colorado Springs, at 10:30 P. M.

I had been told that one must be a Catholic, a Wahneta, a progressive and a member of a few other secret orders to gain admission to and fair treatment at the Home. Judging from my experience, brothers and sisters, such statements are as false as they could possibly be.

I got a room near the depot, notified Superintendent Daley of my arrival the next morning, and Mr. Daley sent the automobile for me at once. When I arrived at the Home I was met by Mr. and Mrs. Daley and Mrs. Riley and welcomed as though I had returned home from a long journey. Well, I had. I had helped in a slight way in establishing the Home, was present at the laying of the cornerstone of the main building, and am proud of my small bit, and unspeakably thankful for the wisdom and foresight and the humane and unselfish spirit which led to the establishment and support of such a grand institution.

Fellow members of the International Typographical Union, go "home" in August and attend the convention, see with your own eyes what a grand work your 20 cents per month is and has been doing. If I had my way I would make Home dues $1 per month per member. When you get there you will meet four people whom I am sure were created for the places they occupied during the four months that I was a resident there. I refer to Thomas McCaffery, resident trustee; John C. Daley, superintendent; Mrs. Daley, matron, and Mrs. Riley, housekeeper.

Thanks to the surgical skill of Dr. McKenney and careful, scientific attention at our Home, friend, I am sound and well, able to follow my chosen occupation as linotype metal refiner for several years to come. But though I gave $100 per day to the International Typographical Union I could not pay for the benefit that I derived from my sojourn at the Home.

I wish to extend my most sincere thanks to John W. Hays for his very courteous and prompt attention to my case, to John Daley and his most estimable wife for their most considerate attention to my welfare and happiness, Mrs. Riley, housekeeper, and all the doctors, nurses and employes connected with our Home.

I will close this "spasm" by wishing the officers and members of the International Typographical Union, residents at our Home and all connected therewith, health, happiness and prosperity. May their shadows never grow less.

I hope sincerely to meet many of you at our Home in August. I will be there or break a leg. LOUIS W. ("COWBOY") JONES.

THE OLD AGE PENSION.

The communication of Mr. Davie in the May JOURNAL is timely. Instead, however, of cutting the $5-a-week pension or raising dues, why not raise the age limit from 60 to 65 or 70 years? It seems as though a great many members when they reach 60 years want to get on the pension roll. Now, my experience is that at 60 I was as good as at 40 or 50, and I stuck to my job until I was well past 74, and but for failing eyesight would be on the job yet. Raise the age limit and thus conserve the pension fund. H. F. BEARDSLEY.

UNION PRINTERS HOME ENDOWMENT FUND.

The executive council and the board of trustees of the Union Printers Home will present an amendment to the laws at the forthcoming convention which will provide an endowment fund for the Union Printers Home. The writer can foresee no better action by the convention than the adoption of this worthy proposition. At the present time all money donated to the Home goes into the current funds of the Home and is used to maintain the institution.

With the establishment of this endowment fund an opportunity will be given members of the International Typographical Union to contribute to a cause that will place the funds for the maintenance of the finest institution we have upon a sound financial basis. There surely is no better time nor place to commence the building up of this fund than at the 1917 convention, the silver jubilee of the Home.

To give impetus to this movement the writer wishes to place before the membership, and particularly before the delegates, a proposition looking toward the organizing of "dollar clubs" in each local, the money thus collected to be presented to the endowment fund of the Home at the convention in August.

Following this plan, a Chicago "dollar club" is being formed by the writer, a delegate-elect from No. 16, who will be pleased to receive contributions, not more than a dollar from any one member, to be presented, with the names of the donors, to the Colorado Springs convention.

It will be impossible personally to visit all the members of No. 16, and any donations sent to the address given herewith will be promptly acknowledged. ERNIE J. ZANDER.

THEY'RE REGISTERING TODAY.

Out from the hills and the valleys,
  Bathed in the summer sun;
Out from the streets and the alleys,
  Where the riot of trade is run;
From the shady dell and the peaceful vale,
  Where the shimmering rivulets play,
The youth of the land—the strong and hale,
  Are registering today.

They have heard the call of the nation's chief,
  In the crisis we're passing through;
Their determination was swift and brief
  To stand by the Red, White and Blue,
They are coming in thousands to show the world
  That they're willing to enter the fray,
And now the flag of their country's unfurled—
  They are registering today.

Let us hope that their valor may soon end the strife,
  That the carnage will quickly be o'er;
So the nations of earth may take on new life
  And the War God be heard of no more.
That the cause they espouse may be holy and right
  Each one of us fervently prays,
And when they emerge from humanity's fight,
  There'll be no more registering days.

UNIONIZING THE MAID.

He printed on her lips a kiss—
  Her "type" and "form" were fine—
And then he just inserted this
  "To be continued" line.
—Make-Up.

He printed on her lips a kiss—
  She thought he could do better,
For lo, the criticizing miss
  Perceived a wrong-font letter.
—Heading Man.

He printed on her lips a kiss,
  But is it not surprising
That this wee bit of spooning bliss
  Should need so much revising?
—Copy Holder.

When printing on her lips a kiss,
  Why did he not invite her
To have a "mat" made of the job
  By some good stereotyper?
—Printer's Devil.

He printed on her lips a kiss,
  But, if he put no slug,
I challenge her to find the guy
  Who thus defaced her mug!
—Galley Boy.

He printed on her lips a kiss,
  As well as he was able,
And then to have and hold the miss
  He used the union label!

THE CRITICAL PROOFREADER.

When authors get together they like to tell their experiences with proofreaders, writes Elizabeth Jordan in the New York Journal. At such times I usually speak up for the proofreader. I know something of his side of the matter. I even know one author who wholly rewrites her stories on the margins of her galley proofs!

Kate Douglas Wiggin tells a good story illustrating how critical a Boston proofreader can be.

In one of her stories she had written this sentence:

"Rebecca sat by the window, chopping hash."

The proofreader put an interrogation mark after it. Then he added, in pencil, this suggestion:

"As hash is the finished product, was she not, instead, chopping meat or potatoes?"

When the author rallied from the effect of the comment, she wrote her answer under the question:

"There is a psychological moment when the meat and the potatoes blend into hash. It was this moment I had in mind!"

SYMPATHY that begins and ends in lip service is of little help to any one.—Ex.

FROM LOCAL UNIONS

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

"Colorado Springs, the home of the Home, 1917."

Well, fellow sufferers, here we are again; if not with bells on, at least with the goods. There is an old saying that "he that toots not his own horn, the same shall not be tooted." Believing the saying to be true, I shall now proceed to spread a little more knowledge concerning the Pikes Peak region and the great convention by announcing the entertainment program for convention week:

On Saturday night, August 11, there will be the usual "get-together." Sunday will be pleasantly passed by an auto ride through Cheyenne Canon, Broadmoor, North Colorado Springs, the Garden of the Gods and Manitou. Monday evening a dance will be enjoyed at Stratton park. A railroad trip of 150 miles into the very heart of the Rockies will be the chief event of Tuesday. This is a trip that will be enjoyed by all who go. Of course, the biggest day will be Printers Home day (Wednesday), which will take place among our wards "out upon the hill." Thursday evening has not been decided upon as yet, but every one can rest assured it will be something worth waiting for.

MOTORING ABOVE THE CLOUDS.

Now, while No. 82 will do its best to entertain the delegates here in August, and while the program is "on us," there are so many things of interest to be seen in the neighborhood of Colorado Springs that we shall have neither the time nor the financial ability to show them all. Consequently, after we are through with you, there will still be many things left that you will want to see on your own hooks, as it were. Among these is the auto ride over the Pikes Peak highway to the top of the peak. When Zebulon Pike stood knee-deep in snow and first gazed upon the majestic dome which has since borne his name, he declared man would never reach its summit. Guess again, Zeb, old boy! "It's been did!" An ordinary burro trail was the first highway to its top; there followed a rough carriage road, which was later superseded by the cog road. But wonders never cease! Not content with seeing people hauled up to the land of perpetual snow in a stuffy, bumpy train, a bunch of "live ones" got together and built an auto road up the peak that Pike said could not be climbed by man. Think of it a moment, stranger, before you speak! A horseless carriage, a "tin Lizzie," an automobile—a machine that was claimed forty years ago to be impossible—actually ascends Pikes Peak, and carries a load of passengers; and, best of all, does it with absolute safety. Starting at an altitude of 7,415 feet, these massive, powerful cars glide swiftly and surely over one of the finest roadways in the world to a level of 14,109 feet, a rise of 6,694 feet in eighteen miles; and does that at an average grade of 7 per cent. Talk about "up in a balloon, boys;" this has got any balloon or aeroplane backed off the map for safety, comfort and scenic grandeur. And if you should make the trip on a cloudy day, it will be veritably a trip above and through the clouds, for in Colorado the clouds hang very low and frequently blow into our windows. The scenery you pass through on the way up is so grand my feeble pen falters in trying to describe it. Indeed, I feel that I must leave you either to guess the most of it or to go and be convinced that you have traversed the most marvelous roadbuilding achievement of the age. Huge rocks and boulders, still showing the fire marks of an active volcano, whose extinct crater is still to be seen, surround the visitor to the summit of the peak; deep valleys filled with perpetual snow lie at your feet, and though the day be August, and warm and pleasant at the Springs, you will need your winter underwear and an overcoat to be comfortable on the peak, where it is so cold timber will no longer grow. As to what you will see from this lofty summit besides the peak itself is hard to describe, except to say it is a view of "magnificent distances." If the day is clear, the visitor can locate several surrounding towns by their smoke; but Colorado Springs, right below you, looks to be no more than a market garden, its streets representing the rows of vegetables. Think of it—so far up you can not distinguish the largest buildings; if cloudy you may look down upon a mass of clouds resembling the waves of a stormy sea. The young and the athletic walk up, some ride burros, others take the train—but the wise man takes a seat in a luxurious auto, glides up the world's greatest highway, and sees it right.

Louis Albrecht was elected local delegate to the August convention; E. D. Woodworth, alternate.

This union has recently purchased a $100 liberty bond. Several members at the meeting also subscribed. No. 82 also donated $10 to the Colorado Springs boy scout movement, of which W. I. Reilly, chairman of the convention committee, is a member of the executive body.

A silver golf trophy, recently offered by the Y. M. C. A., was won by J. C. Patton, machinist of the Gazette, and member of the Gazette chapel golf club.

On behalf of the convention committee, I want to thank our sister unions for their assistance so far in making the convention a success. Many of them have come through like princes, and we'll try to show your delegates how we appreciate it when they visit us in August.

A. Alan Bulkley.

HACKENSACK, N. J.

Hackensack Union, having changed its meeting night to the second Monday, a session was held on that day, June 11, at the new rooms at Central Labor hall, Main street. It was well attended and officers were elected and installed.

No. 642 is not behind the door when it comes to patriotism, having authorized its officers to purchase a $100 liberty bond.

"Bill" Nestel, our new president, is a capable man, and we hope he will do as good as his predecessor, George Grathwol. Leslie R. Meade, Jr.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

So many of our members are moving from the island to the mainland that it has been suggested that the August meeting take the form of a picnic in the forests off shore. The suggestion was taken kindly to by all.

Claude MacMoran, an operator on the Press, was married on Saturday, June 9, to Miss Mary Brown, of Philadelphia.

The members of the Press and Union forces all subscribed to liberty bonds. I have not heard just what other printers here have purchased them.

Frank Hoover has quit the Globe and taken the foremanship of Theodore Ferschke's office.

The next meeting (August) will be nomination month. Lester, of course, will be re-elected financial secretary without opposition, but at present writing it is said that President Bright will not be a candidate for re-election. Yours truly will not accept another election as recording secretary. E. T. SCHEERER.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

The election, on May 23, passed off very quietly. There being no contest for president, vice-president and secretary, the interest naturally settled in the next important contest, which was for International delegates. Notwithstanding the interesting trip to our Home city, with an opportunity to see all of the beautiful scenery in Colorado, there was the smallest field of candidates in years—four from the newspaper branch and three from the book and job. As anticipated, three of the newspaper candidates were pretty evenly matched, there being but eight votes separating John C. Maher, of the World, elected, and Peter J. Corcoran, defeated. James W. Keller, of the Sun, received top vote in this branch, with 214 votes over his nearest opponent. When one considers that there was a total vote cast of 5,977, this is about the most evenly contested election in years. In the book and job contest, Richard F. Cavanaugh, of the Federal Printing Company, carried off the high vote, which was also the high vote in both branches, and he is therefore chairman of the delegation. Tom Johns was a close second, while John J. Brosnan was nearly six hundred votes behind. Every candidate proved he had a bunch of followers and friends who desired his election. James A. L. Hughes was re-elected to the board of trustees by a majority of 1,352. The auditors elected were: Meigs L. Davis, Peter J. Flanigan and Thomas L. Rea, jr. The book and job arbitration agreement received a majority of 265, notwithstanding the fight put up by its opponents. The vote was 2,982 for and 2,717 against.

During your idle moments does the question ever arise: "Whither are we drifting?" Today we have a grand organization, a large amount of money in the various funds and have established good union conditions throughout the trade. This was not accomplished in a day. In fact, it has taken years to gain these things and has cost many a sacrifice to those of the previous generations, a small percentage of whom are left to tell the tale. The writer has frequently endeavored to fathom the present generation of printers. First, there does not seem to be the brotherly feeling and unity of action that existed in years gone by, when it was a case of fight for everything that was received. There is no doubt but that things that are troublesome to get are more appreciated than those that are received without trouble or effort. While we are today enjoying good working conditions, there is little doubt in the mind of the writer that we could have a much stronger organization with better pay and conditions were there more interest taken by the rank and file with a more harmonious spirit. These conditions—or lack of interest—exist not only in New York, but throughout the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union. In speaking of harmony, I do not for a moment intend to convey the impression that there ever will be a time when human beings will have a uniform opinion, and especially printers. But while we are bound to disagree, there should be harmony insofar as to work for the advancement of the organization and not for its retardment. To our labor organization we are much indebted. First, for the living wages, and second, the good working conditions. Were it not for the organization we would be working longer hours, receiving less money, and for the working conditions it is not necessary to explain. Just the same as exists where unions do not exist. Yet we find a large percentage of our members giving their talents and efforts in behalf of fraternal organizations in preference to that from which they owe so much and derive so much benefit. In Typographical Union No. 6 those active compose a very small percentage of its membership. What is the result? The small percentage make many sacrifices, for they conduct the affairs of the organization (at their own expense), while the great majority sit idly by and derive all of the benefits. When election time is at hand, whether for officers or on a referendum proposition, knowledge and judgment is naturally lacking, and ofttimes sentiment prevails. How much better would it be were the greater percentage of the membership to take an active part in conducting union affairs, and therefore be in a position to know what was best for the organization, and work to that end, rather than allow themselves to be told what to do or allow sentiment and good fellowship to guide their hands at elections. There is another phase that is gradually making its appearance that is bound to work to the detriment of our labor union. By a majority vote we place men in office to guide the destinies of our organization. It has always been my belief that after election, no matter whether the successful candidate was our choice or not, we should give him every aid in conducting the affairs of the organization. But this apparently has not been the belief of an element in our organization, which has endeavored to place every obstacle possible in the way of our officers. The recent referendum vote was an instance. The proposition did not affect the local membership one iota; the officers explained that they wanted it for organization purposes; that no local union was compelled to take the proposition unless it wanted it, yet this jurisdiction was flooded with literature advocating its defeat, some of which was vicious in its misleading arguments. Good, solid difference of opinion is healthy, but when our officers are practically accused of collusion with the employers' organization to the detriment of the membership, it is about time to compel them to produce evidence to support their accusations or be erased from the list of members. We have three classes among our members—the sincere active, the desire-for-office-at-any-cost active, and the inactive. Those of the latter class, who read this letter, should take the matter up with themselves, look the matter squarely in the face and figure whether they do not owe more of their time, study and attention to the organization from which they make their living.

The school for printers' apprentices held its closing exercises on Thursday evening, June 7, when the following scholars received prizes: W. Dugan, first prize in English; F. Herbert, second prize in English; F. Sohl, first prize in typography, while P. Holliday was awarded the Charles Francis medal for the greatest progress in typography.

From conversations with various newspaper printers, it is evident that there is going to be a determined effort to get a substantial increase in the scale of that branch of the trade at the termination of the present agreement with the publishers. The newspaper printers of this city have been advanced very slowly and have not, by any means, kept pace with the advance in the cost of living. In the past fifteen years there have practically been but $3 added to their wages, for while the scale fifteen years ago was $27, a great percentage received from $3 to $6 above that amount. When the scale has been raised since, there has been some concession given to offset the paltry raise. And it is about time that those connected with the newspaper branch receive a clean-cut raise, or better still, a reduction in hours. According to the report handed up at the recent meeting of the newspaper publishers' association, in session in the Waldorf-Astoria, and which the writer referred to in the last New York letter, the newspaper proprietors of this city could give both shorter hours and a substantial increase in wages without turning a hair. According to that report, their profits have increased wonderfully. Yet they have all been practicing the cheaper kind of economy in their composing rooms. Some of the first editions would make Horace Greeley and Ben Franklin hold their heads in shame were they able to pay us a visit today. The pride in the newspaper composing room is almost a thing of the past, and today it is a case of put it together so it is readable and let it go at that. Today the managements seem to brush everything aside that interfere with the money-making end of the game. Every dollar increase received by the printers has cost a hard fight, and as said above, has been received at the cost of concessions, which in most cases has been the means of reducing the force and putting some of our members on the street. It is to be hoped President Rouse will appoint a strong scale committee that will go about its work just as a good mechanic does—with a determination to do a good job.

On May 23 George Morris was elected chairman of the American and Journal chapel. Mr. Morris served as vice-chairman during the past year. The other officers were: Secretary, Al Benny; first vice-chairman, Charles Shoemaker; second vice-chairman, William Perkins. Other chapel chairmen elected were: Abe Isaacs, jr., re-elected as chairman of the Sun; John Guarigli, chairman of Laplante & Dunklin; Alex McKee, chairman of McCall's; C. H. Reinbold, chairman of Scribner's; J. Jefferson Hughes, chairman of the Brooklyn Standard-Union. Malcolm L. McLeod was re-elected chairman of the Globe without opposition.

At the May meeting of No. 6 five probationary, nine new members and one for reinstatement were voted on favorably, while one was rejected and ten withdrew by request. A motion was made by S. Oppenheimer to appoint a committee to revise the newspaper scale and was passed unanimously. George Bolster, Frank A. Skiffington, Charles Jones, Lockhart S. Burdick, John J. Cassey (A.), Edward Hentze, Henry R. Murray, William J. Smith, Arthur E. Wells and John Patterson were endorsed for the International old age pension, while George A. Haywood, Henry F. Burnham, S. A. Clifton and James Cosgrove were passed on favorably to go to the Union Printers Home. The application of John F. Binning for the local old age pension was also endorsed. A committee was ordered sent to Albany to protest to Governor Whitman against the bills that affect labor laws. A communication was read from the Central Labor Union of Brooklyn relative to buying stocks in a union label goods store. A communication was read from the labor sanitation conference requesting No. 6 to write a letter to the mayor in reference to mobilizing industrial sanitation. Three delegates were ordered sent to the state allied printing trades council, which meets at Syracuse, N. Y., on Monday, July 9. Those representing No. 6 will be Peter J. Corcoran, Fred N. Cornell and William J. Robinson. Several propositions were received relative to the purchasing of liberty bonds by No. 6. It was finally decided to purchase $5,000 worth of these bonds. Thomas Johns, chairman of the last baseball committee, made a final report of the committee, which showed the largest amount ever turned over to the hospital fund by a like committee. The report showed that the fund would be richer by more than $3,600.

William Murphy, of the City Record, and at one time chairman of the office, has resigned to take charge of the office of Chappman & Co., a calendar house at 1013 Grand street, Brooklyn. The well wishes of many friends go with Mr. Murphy to his new labors.

The Central Labor Union of Brooklyn is planning for a big Labor day, and on invitation of Park Commissioner Raymond V. Ingersoll, the exercises will be held in Prospect park. Secretary of Labor William B. Wilson will be chief speaker. A dinner will be given at night in the Labor Lyceum, which will be $1.25 a plate, with a galaxy of prominent national and local speakers. The "Big Six" band will be a prominent feature, while Litte's Casino band will also be in attendance. Other music will be furnished by the park commission.

On Saturday, June 2, the annual installation of officers of the Charles Francis Press chapel was held, when the following took the oath of office: Chairman, John J. Donovan; vice-chairman, Arthur L. McMullen; secretary, Richard W. Leroy; auditors, Herbert Wilson, James P. Smith and Joseph Gillig. After newly-elected officers were installed Chairman Donovan was intrusted with the honor of presenting the retiring chairman, Meigs L. Davis, with a beautiful Japanese signet ring set with a diamond and emerald. The present was a token of the high esteem in which the chapel held the retiring chairman. Mr. Davis reply to the presentation speech of the chairman gave evidence that though he had done his duty as an officer he thoroughly appreciated the token and good wishes of his chapel members. Mr. Davis was further honored at the recent election by receiving the unanimous vote of his chapel for auditor of No. 6.

The Query club has published a sixteen-page pamphlet outlining its convention trip, which leaves New York city by special train on Thursday morning, August 9. The trip will unquestionably be an interesting one. A brief synopsis of the tour: Leave New York at 8:35 A. M., on the above stated date, via the West Shore railroad, stopping at all the principal cities en route, arriving at Buffalo at 8:15 P. M., allowing about three hours in that city. Arrive at Chicago at 11:50 A. M., on August 10. The balance of the day and evening will be spent in that city, with luncheon and dinner at the LaSalle station. Leaving Chicago at 10:15 P. M., party will proceed direct to Denver, making a brief stay at Omaha, August 11, for independent sightseeing, and arrive at Denver the morning of August 12. The entire day will be spent here and a special side trip over the famous Georgetown Loop to Silver Plume will be included. Party will leave Denver at 11:15 P. M., and arrive at Colorado Springs at 1:50 A. M. From Monday, August 13, to Saturday, August 18, inclusive, will be spent at Colorado Springs, attending convention and visiting the many points of interest. The sleeping cars will be parked for occupancy and may be occupied by those desiring to do so while at Colorado Springs. The return trip will commence at the close of the convention on Saturday, August 18, making stops at principal cities en route. The first stop will be Kansas City, on August 19, where the day will be spent. St. Louis will be reached on August 20, where the morning will be spent sightseeing. On the 21st the party will arrive at Buffalo and proceed to Niagara Falls. After breakfast at hotel they will board special cars for trip over Gorge route, there taking Canadian steamship lines to Toronto, where special automobiles for sightseeing will be in waiting, arriving back at Niagara Falls in the early evening. After dinner at the hotel, party will again board special train, arriving in New York at noon on August 22. Arrangements can be made to accompany the Query club one way and return as they see fit. The rate of fares for the round trip are:

Owing to the war the Union Printers' National Baseball League has called off its annual tournament this year. Match games are being arranged, however, between teams representing Boston and New York, which will be played the latter part of July or the first part of August. The first two games will be in New York.

The employes of the World top the list as purchasers of liberty bonds, the amount subscribed being $130,000. It is said that the management is quite proud of the patriotic spirit displayed by its employes. Much interest was taken by the management of other papers. It is said that bonds amounting to $14,500 were purchased by the composing-room employes of the Sun and $35,000 by those of the composing room of the Herald.

Harry F. Ryland, an old member of No. 6 and chairman of the Brooklyn Standard-Union chapel for the past year, was stricken while at work on May 24 and was taken to Brooklyn hospital, where an immediate operation was found necessary. But this proved of no avail and Mr. Ryland passed away on Sunday, June 3, and was buried in Evergreen cemetery. Mr. Ryland was born at Centerville, Ind., March 13, 1862. He had been connected with the New York Tribune and Brooklyn Standard-Union for many years, and had many friends throughout the city who mourn his loss. He leaves a wife and sister. Preamble and resolutions were passed by the Standard-Union chapel, which show the high esteem in which he was held by his chapel members. Other deaths recorded were Ed H. Boardman, Thomas B. Lennie, Joseph H. Bowring, J. S. Cannon, Michael Horan, C. C. Shike, Harry A. Browne.

At the June meeting of the night chapel of the Federal Printing Company John A. Moosman, the newly-elected chairman, was installed, after which the retiring chairman, John V. Murphy, was honored for the faithful manner in which he has performed the duties of his office during the last two years with a gift of $50 in gold. The usual speeches that go with such occasions were indulged in. Mr. Murphy retires with the good will of the office representatives and men.

On May 23 the Machinist Branch of Typographical Union No. 6 also held their annual election, when President Louis Fisher was reelected for another year. His opponent was Emory C. Pratt, a former president of the branch. The other officers chosen were: Secretary, F. B. Gilmore; executive committee, G. Terry, J. McKirdy and L. Seijas. Harry Delle was again selected to represent the branch on the executive committee of No. 6.

At the May meeting a motion was passed providing for a committee of three to go to Washington and enter a protest against that portion of the postal revenue bill calculated to menace the printing industry, which increases rates on second-class matter that would practically wipe out many small publications. The committee selected was President Rouse, Secretary O'Connell and Organizer Theodore F. Douglas. The committee left for Washington on May 21. They immediately started out on their mission, interviewing first the chairman of the senate committee on finance, Senator Simmons, of North Carolina, in whose custody the bill was at that time. The committee made it very plain to Senator Simmons the evils that would befall the printing industry if this bill was enacted into law. They followed this up by holding conferences with Senators Caldwell and Wadsworth, of New York; Senator Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey; Senator Warren, of Connecticut; Congressmen Egan, Gray and Hamil, of New Jersey; London, Lunn, Chandler, Carew, Caldwell, Oliver, Hicks, Maher, Riordan, Fitzgerald and many others. They returned on Wednesday, the 23d, in time to vote.

graphical Union No. 6, and for several years past connected with the state labor bureau, has presented to the public library, Forty-second street and Fifth avenue, books and papers which it has taken years to accumulate. Mr. Murphy has taken great care to inscribe the various volumes. They were delegated to the memory of the various presidents of "Big Six," from Horace Greeley to Charles M. Maxwell. Some of the papers should be most interesting to the printers, and especially those of the hand-set generation. There are twenty-five volumes of the Inland Printer, beginning with volume No. 2; the Union Printer, from January 12, 1895, to January 30, 1897, which was given in the memory of Eugene O'Rourke; the Union Printer, from February, 1892, to January, 1895, in testimony of George A. Stevens, state statistician, and an old typographical union member, who compiled the history of No. 6 for the state labor bureau; about twenty-one bound volumes of the Unionist and Union Printer are listed to Typographical Union No. 6. The collection also contains International Typographical Union souvenirs from 1896. Mr. Murphy has catalogued his donation, which contains several hundred volumes.

The arrangements committee has almost completed its work for the outing and games of the Isaac Goldmann Company employes' mutual aid society, which is to be held at Witzel's Point View, College Point, on July 28. Those attending will leave the office, 80 Lafayette street, by automobile at 9:30 in the morning, proceeding to Battery Landing, where they will embark on the steamer Commander for Point View, returning the same way at the end of the day. Refreshments and music will be served on board the boat.

FOND DU LAC, WIS.

The chairmen of the various chapels report work as fair.

No. 31 goes on record as having purchased a $50 liberty bond. It helped.

If this local is in position to send a delegate to the state federation of labor convention, to be held in Madison in July, Van Allyn will be the delegate, with Rorabacher as alternate.

Mrs. M. M. Schulz is subbing at the Commonwealth as operator, after having filled a similar position at Baltimore. Miss Purcell, machine operator, Commonwealth chapel, enjoyed her Memorial day holiday at Madison. Miss Lina Draves is helping out on the job side, Daily Reporter, while LeRoy, formerly a member of Neenah-Menasha Union, has a steady "sit" as night operator. The Courier Publishing Company has installed an intertype. Two members of the Reporter chapel are erecting new residences. Supterintendent H. C. Berndt has his located on Main street, while "Mike" Wettstein is erecting one on Amory street. Both are strictly modern, of seven-room capacity. Mrs. Grace Boshard, nee Kolb, a former employe at the Record office, is visiting his parents and friends in this city. She is accompanied by her little son. Mrs. Boshard is now a resident of La Crosse.

"Red" Sinski has a "sit" on a new sheet just started at Watertown, as operator, while Edward Haessley holds the position of make-up on the same paper. Both are Fond du Lac boys and are doing fine.

Messrs. Martin, Burus and Kinkel made a flying trip to Milwaukee to gather "tips and pointers" in connection with the arbitration board. They got their "tips" all right, but were in such a hurry to return home that it was utterly impossible to look up Worm, Grenning and Baker. Their time was limited.

The scale committee has everything settled with the exception of the scale proposition. That goes to the arbitration board.

Many thanks to Vice-President Barrett for his timely suggestions and efforts in behalf of No. 31. He certainly is a worker and did all in his power in behalf of the new contract. The employers, however, wish to arbitrate. O. G. RORABACHER.

HARTFORD, CONN.

No. 127 voted at its last meeting to subscribe for a liberty bond.

Al Rodenburg, formerly machinist of the Hartford Times, is now agent for the Forti-fied metal feeders in Connecticut and Massachusetts.

Business is fair here in both job and newspaper offices. Everybody working.

William Quinn, formerly of the Springfield Publishing Company, is now representing the Mergenthaler Linotype Company in this district.

John Rogers has succeeded Harry McInnis as chairman of the Times office. His assistant is William Clapp.

Abbot Smith is now chairman of the Courant night side, through the resignation of George Clintsman.

There was great rivalry in the race for delegate to Manchester. Four members were out for the "sit." Frank Flynn, president, and George Clintsman were elected to look after the welfare and interest of No. 127.

Paul Pfeiffer, jobman, and family journeyed to New York in his "five-pica" Reo and spent a few days there seeing the sights.

Through the efforts of affiliated organizations, the allied printing trades label is now appearing on a large number of milk ticket stubs.

BOSTON, MASS.

Boston Typographical Union subscribed for $2,500 worth of liberty loan bonds and members of the secretary's chapel subscribed for $500 worth of the same. Alexander Aronson, chairman of the municipal printing office composing room, sold over $500 worth of liberty bonds to members of his chapel, and the members of the Christian Science Monitor chapel subscribed for a fifty-dollar bond and presented it to the Union Printers Home.

Boston feels very proud of one of its typographic artists employed at the University Press, who has been awarded the second prize in the Inland Printer cover-page contest. The design was by Cornelius Spaans and executed by Charles Torosson, chairman of the University Press composing room. Considering that there were nearly five hundred designs submitted, we think this speaks very well for this section.

At the graduating exercises of the Wentworth Institute, Boston's most important trade school, held on June 7, five students in the class of the printing department were given certificates for the satisfactory completion of the one-year course in typography. Dean Charles R. Brown, of Yale University divinity school, in the course of his address emphasized the high moral purpose with which the United States had entered the war and drew lessons for the youth of today from the life of Lincoln.

Percy B. S. Thayer, who was employed on the Boston Herald for about forty years, and who was a pensioner for one year, died Sunday, June 3, after a short illness. His remains were interred in the family lot in Wildwood cemetery, Winchester, Tuesday, June 5. The funeral services were held at the First Universalist church in West Somerville and were attended by a very large number of friends from every newspaper office in the city. The pallbearers were: President Edward M. Martin, Vice-President Maurice A. Adler, Treasurer Malcolm A. Knock, Trustee Robert J. Kane, William A. Ward, John Kinnure, James Pym and Assistant Secretary Thomas C. Stephenson. Mr. Thayer had been a continuous member for fifty-three years and ten months. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Nellie Thayer, and two sons, Percy E. and Shelley E., and a sister, Mrs. Joseph Elm, of Roslindale. Percy B. S. Thayer was born in Charlestown, under the shadow of Bunker Hill monument, August 12, 1845. His parents were Daniel and Catherine Thayer, of Dresden Mills, Maine. At the age of eight he accompanied his family on a voyage to Rio de Janeiro, his father being captain of the vessel. On the return the vessel was wrecked on the coast of Cuba, but without loss of life. After living in New York a few years, the family moved to Missouri, and at St. Louis young Thayer went into the printing business. The civil war broke out two years later, the elder Thayer going with General Siegel, and the young man worked a year on the gunboats that were built at Carondelet, a suburb of St. Louis. In 1863 he went to Washington, where the family was then located, and worked on the Chronicle during the latter part of the war. After that he went to New Orleans, still following his family, and stayed there till 1868, when he located in New York, working on the Herald. In 1871 he followed his family once more, and Boston was the destination this time. He found no place that suited him so well as Boston, and he was not long in getting work on the Boston Herald, under William J. Quinn. Here he was night foreman for twenty years, retiring to the proofroom eventually. His activity in union politics was very pronounced. He held the office of president two terms, was secretary, treasurer, trustee, and was delegate to the International Typographical Union held in Boston in 1875 and 1893 at Washington. He was a member of the Franklin Typographical Society and three local printer benefit societies, as well as a member of Winter Hill lodge, A. O. U. W.

Charles Hertenstein, president of St. Louis Typographical Union and chairman of the Efficiency Board of St. Louis, attended a convention of the Civil Service Commissioners of the United States, representing his city, at the Copley Plaza hotel, Boston, June 12-16.

William R. McCarthy, of the Post chapel, has received an appointment from Mayor Curley as a member of the Boston public safety committee. Mr. McCarthy has been prominently identified for many years with the uplift history of Boston Typographical Union and is well known in the Tenean Beach section of Dorchester, where he has been very active in civic and social affairs. He is a deep student of economic affairs and during the Spanish war was in Argentine, where he rendered great assistance to the American consular authorities in many trying situations. He was a great admirer of Premier William E. Gladstone and was in Buenos Aires May 20, 1898, when Mr. Gladstone died, and was instrumental in having the flags of that city placed at half-mast on that occasion.

On account of the tournament of the National Union Printers' Baseball League being called off, the Boston and New York clubs are negotiating to hold a series of three games in New York and three games in Boston the latter part of August. Although the weather has been very unpropitious, the Boston boys have been taking just as much interest as though the tournament was going to take place, and have been practicing on an average of three times a week. John McSweeney, of the Wright & Potter chapel, who has played in the last four of five tournaments, will be missed, as he has joined the navy as a first-class printer.

The father of George A. Gibson, of the Transcript, died June 12. He was a carpenter by trade and held several important offices in the carpenters' union.

Massachusetts is holding a convention, for the first time in sixty-three years, to revise its constitution; 320 delegates have been elected to attend, among whom are twenty labor men. In 1914 organized labor in Massachusetts secured an adequate statute relating to the issue of injunctions in labor disputes. In 1916 the supreme court declared the measure to be unconstitutional. Whether that decision can be overcome, or the difficulty met in other ways, remains to be seen. The initiative and referendum have been urged upon successive legislatures for eighteen years. It will be the principal bone of contention between the liberals and the conservatives in the convention, with chances in favor of its enactment.

Charles R. Shea was married Monday, June 18, to Miss Catherine Reedy at the Mission church, Roxbury.

J. E. Berg, of the American chapel, read a paper before the Malden Spanish war veterans, Friday, May 18, entitled "The Linotype and Getting Out a Newspaper." He handled the subject in a masterly manner and was highly complimented by those present.

"How does your garden grow?" President Marsden G. Scott's timely article entitled "Plant An Acre of Land to Aid Families of Soldiers," certainly did a lot of good in this section of the country according to reports received by the writer. It is reported that in the small town of Arlington, with a population of 18,000, there are over 1,200 extra gardens planted this year, and from the looks of the surrounding country the same conditions prevail wherever you go.

John Heshion, well known all over New England, returned on the Servian Prince Saturday, June 9, from a trip to Brest, France. He reports having one of the best times of his life and says that there was a good bunch of fellows on the ship to work with.

C. W. Shovelier, Post chapel, has joined the United States service and is now in training at Plattsburg. Walter J. Killion, apprentice member of the Post chapel, and John C. Baker, son of Frank Baker, also employed in the Post counting room, both joined the navy the first of May. William A. Griffin, jr, of the Atlantic Printing Company and Post chapel, enlisted May 21 in the navy as a first-class printer.

Frank M. Flaherty enlisted in the United States cavalry Friday, June 8, and is now stationed at Fort Slocum, N. Y. His letter states that "they expect to be in France in three months and see some real fighting." John Finley, of the Boot and Shoe Recorder, also joined the United States cavalry on June 8. Edward B. Geldert, Ginn & Co.; John D. Crockett, L. E. Grosscup Company; William B. Chase, ex-chairman George H. Ellis Company; I. Judson Potter and Ernest Harcourt have also enlisted. Lewis D. Moore, an apprentice member at the Riverside Press, joined the Harvard unit base hospital on June 6. Loyd C. Greene, formerly of Fall River, joined the United States navy May 31.

A. Evangelista, of the Globe chapel, and Thomas J. Pickels, of East Boston, both lost their mothers by death recently. THOMAS C. STEPHENSON.

TAMPA, FLA.

"Jimmie" Baker enjoyed a week's vacation down at Pass-a-Grille the past month, accompanied by Mrs. Baker.

The report that S. J. Triplett has re-entered the newspaper field was incorrect.

Kelly Jones flivvers around over this end of the state nowadays in an Overland. He and Mrs. Jones were calling on Tampa friends recently.

J. W. Bushaw is the largest buyer of liberty bonds of the local union. Walter Patrick has gone to his home in the New England states. He is destined to be prominent in newspaper circles ere long, because of his cartoons and original style of writing comic stuff. Charles Leidy and J. L. Sauls are among the latest builders of homes in the Macfarlane subdivision. At the recent local election Charles Bardin was elected delegate to the Colorado Springs convention, and F. B. Hill alternate. This local has maintained a one-half of 1 per cent assessment for some years in order to have representation in the state federation of labor and the International. J. I. Carruthers is tickling the ivories once again, after being laid up with a broken arm, as the result of an auto hitting his motorcycle.

J. A. Lyle's oldest son, Joe, won a scholarship in the University of Virginia in the recent competitive examination, and the father is entitled to the great pride he has in the young man's achievements.

Why not arrange to hold the Southern Printers' Conference in Memphis or Chattanooga, just before the International convention, so that we could save transportation; and let the International Typographical Union delegates from the southern locals act as the representatives? Then, if the matter had to come up before the International convention, each of those delegates could give the convention the benefit of first-hand information.

Because the president of a local shipbuilding concern (a German of about twenty years' citizenship in this country) refused to buy a liberty bond, the entire force walked out—and then "Cap" Herrington, Tom Atkinson and other organized labor workers got busy and organized them. Among the strikers were "down easterners," Florida "crackers," Russian, Spanish, Italian and negroes. Their strike was without any persuasion, so it is evident that the most of us are loyal Americans down this way. Joe Lyle's young son, Charlie, had just begun his apprenticeship a few days prior to the walkout, and it is needless to say he was "there with the goods" when it came to action. CHARLES BARDIN.

LA CROSSE, WIS.

Business has been fair among the shops in town during the past month, but with the hot summer weather on hand, work no doubt will slacken as usual during the summer months, although everybody is working.

Final arrangements are all complete for the big printers' picnic, which is to be held at Goose Island June 17. The picnic will be "wrote up" in the next issue of THE JOURNAL.

No. 448 has a number of members who registered on June 5. Some are single and a number of them married—no "slackers," though.

No. 448 purchased $100 worth of liberty loan bonds, the printers being the only union in La Crosse which purchased the bonds.

The Serres-Eddy typesetting plant is now in full operation and work a-plenty. John Serres has the day shift and John Eddy the night shift, and the prospects are that within a short time another operator will be required.

A few tourists were here during the month, but as there was not enough work to be given out to extra help they continued on their way.

The printers were greatly grieved early one morning during the past month when word was passed that Roland B. Gelatt, publisher of the Tribune and Leader Press, had passed away. Mr. Gelatt had published a daily newspaper in La Crosse for many years and up to the consolidation of the Leader-Press and Tribune on January 20, 1917, was publisher of the Leader-Press, but since the consolidation has been publisher of the combination. Although not in the best of health, he was at his desk every day. The day he passed away he was at the office until about 5:30 o'clock. Mr. Gelatt had the honor of signing up the first working contract which No. 448 presented to the proprietors about sixteen years ago, and he has always been favorable to trade unionism, as he carried a card in his younger days. The entire Tribune and Leader-Press shop marched in a body to his house and escorted the remains to the Burlington depot, where they were shipped to Kansas City for interment. HENRY J. HOELZER.

LOWELL, MASS.

"Make the world safe for democracy." If you can't go to the front line of battle, hoe and spade in the front line of home gardeners and embryo farmers.

In anticipation of the selective draft law taking away from the case and the machine several of our members, the union has voted unanimously to pay all dues of men who enlist in the service of the United States. That is as it should be, and Lowell Union, while not the largest in point of numbers, is nevertheless in the forefront in point of progressive ideas and beneficial legislation locally, and this is no idle statement, either, not the musing of a dreamer or the vaporings of one prone to exaggerate. My intimate acquaintance with the activities for years, my knowledge of the men who constitute its membership, and my contact with them in the shops, in the meetings and amid the workaday tasks of all, convinces me that we have in Lowell the finest union in the state, even not barring Ed Martin's hosts in Boston.

But ere you say that you are "tired of this showy seeming," I digress, and in digressing find that from without the avalanche of ballots at the May election our executive committee and allied council delegates have been chosen, while some who participated in the contest and who, perforce fell by the wayside, good fellows all, also ran, some well, and some not so well. The successful ones on the executive committee slate were Messrs. George F. O'Meara, George J. Noonan, C. Percy Foster and Charles E. Sheldon, a great quartet of live wires, with Vice-President Mozley as the chairman and presiding officer. The allied council list was a formidable one to pick from, and Fred A. Spead, C. Percy Foster and Charles E. Sheldon scored the three places, a fine trio, who ought to make things hum for next year. The four chairmen in the big chapels conducted the election with dispatch and completeness, and they gave their services free in an effort to save money in these troublous times.

Just because the members felt that the proposed increase in postal rates on newspapers and periodicals, which was part and parcel of the finance bill before congress, was unfair and unjust and would raise havoc with the printing industry throughout the country, the union voted its disapproval of this inequitable feature of the bill and communicated its decision to Congressman Rogers and Senators Lodge and Weeks.

The proposition to establish a branch Home far away from the present Home in Colorado Springs, can be dismissed forthwith just now as ill-timed, expensive and not wholly necessary, if more will do just a little charitable work among the members who may be unable to work any longer. 'Twould seem to be good policy if correspondents would devote their talents and their time to devising ways and means toward enlarging the scope and usefulness of their locals in their localities and stop this continual exposition of ideas and ideals, which, however splendid and altruistic they are—and I am not minimizing the splendid idea of a branch Home nearer us here in the east—are in the first and last analysis a source of prodigious initial and great subsequent expense. The civilized world is undergoing a change. No man knows where or how this frightful world strife will end or how it will find us. Consequently, it behooves us to hold fast to the sound policies that have obtained in the International Typographical Union for a generation, and shoo away, if we can, those haunting specters—though they glitter like a diadem in the morning sun—of branch Homes, increased mortuary benefits, increased pension and increased whatnots, that nowadays belonged essentially to the mentality of the man who averred that a pot of gold was at the end of the rainbow.

A delegation of our members attended the convention of the New England Typographical Union in Manchester, N. H., and report all things in fine shape and a fine representation of printers from all over the jurisdiction. Our delegates, Messrs. Cull and Sheldon, showed up splendidly in the deliberations, and served with characteristic faithfulness on important committees.

The officers were installed at the June meeting. Many happy speeches were made, short and to the point, and good feeling and jollity reigned supreme. The president announced his ways and means committee for the year, as follows: Edward P. Draper, Gabriel Audoin and Fred Potter. Messrs. Draper and Audoin are ex-delegates to the International convention. On the label committee were appointed Michael Labelle, chairman; William J. Pendergast, Fenwick M. Umpleby, Arthur Papz, William Hodgdon and I. August Lambert. It is confidently expected that the label committee will inaugurate a label campaign in conjunction with the allied council, matters in this regard having lain dormant for some time.

Our union's vote was overwhelmingly in favor of the arbitration agreement with the American Typothetæ, for we can see in its enforcement the death-knell of the "open shop" and the coming into our ranks of those whose personal diffidence and in some cases where shop conditions hold them back a while from joining with us. It is a healthy sign of the times, this mutual arbitration agreement between the master printer and the journeyman. It betokens a contented set of employes the world over or wherever our union penetrates, and will make for a wider, a large and a more influential Typographical Union. Success and long life to the new idea.

JOHN V. DONOGHUE.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS.

The regular meeting was held Sunday, June 3, and was fairly well attended. Four new members from Chippewa Falls were obligated. At this meeting it was decided to buy liberty bonds with some of the surplus cash in the treasury. It was also decided to pay the dues of any member of the union who enlisted for the war.

A. E. Marten, an operator on the Telegram, has enlisted in the hospital corps, and is now awaiting call to the front.

Frank Winiecki, of the firm of Johnson & Winiecki, has decided that single life was not meant for him any more, so on the morning of June 12 he was united in marriage to Miss Frances Falch of this city. They took a short honeymoon trip through the state and are now at home to their many friends. Members of No. 558 unite in wishing them much happiness.

GEORGE A. STEBBINS.

TORONTO, ONT.

War conditions, the high cost of living, and the efforts of the scale committee, were the combined factors in raising the book and job scale from $20 to $24 at one kick for day work. Night work in book and job offices is now $27.60. At a special meeting, held June 7, the foregoing scale was unanimously adopted on the recommendation of the scale committee. Congratulations were tendered the committee, and some tangible expression of appreciation was offered, the chair refusing to accept such motion on the grounds of being unconstitutional. Approximately eight hundred men are affected by the increase, which is for a two-year period, and the sum of $332,800 will circulate in different channels for at least that period.

At present writing the newspaper scale committee is negotiating its new contracts, and before THE JOURNAL reaches its readers, it is likely a settlement will be reached.

The official statement of the number of men in Canada liable for service warrants the belief that the necessary reinforcements can be obtained from the first three classes mentioned in the service bill, allowing for all exemptions. This country has a fairly large reserve of available man-power. In view of this fact it is likely the delegates to Colorado Springs (Robert Elliott and John Welsh) will experience little difficulty in crossing the border in August.

Ten days after he returned to his battalion from a field hospital where he was taken suffering from contusion, Private Percival Nixon, a former linotype operator on the Star staff, was killed in action. He fell May 31. Writing to his friends, May 22, Private Nixon said:

I was buried alive with a chum of mine and it happened that I was the lucky one. I was forced to go to a rest hospital for seven or eight days, but my chum was not so fortunate. They got him out and worked over him for two hours, but the life was practically crushed out of him. If they had been one minute later in digging me out I guess I would have been along with him. I wish to thank the boys very much for their extreme kindness. When I joined my battalion after coming from the hospital I found the parcel waiting for me, and believe me, I certainly appreciated it.

Private Nixon, whose mother lives at 12 Division street, was a member of the Tenth Grenadier fife and drum band for ten years and was always an enthusiastic soldier. He enlisted about eighteen months ago and went overseas in May, 1916, with the battalion commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Barker. He had been at the front about ten months. This makes the second member of the Star staff to fall in action, "Bill" Anderson being killed last September.

The Greater Toronto labor party held another meeting at the Labor Temple Sunday, June 17, when the stand taken recently in favor of complete national conscription was reaffirmed. A letter from Sir Robert Borden was read, in which he stated that the suggestion that labor men should be represented on the boards that are to select men for active service, also that a labor deputation be sent to Great Britain and other places in Europe to interview the military authorities with the object of obtaining first-hand information of the actual situation at the front, would be discussed by the cabinet at the earliest opportunity. Sir Robert said in conclusion: "Pray inform the Labor Party Association that their suggestions will be attentively and carefully considered."

Warwick Bros. & Rutter recently installed a monotype caster in their composing room. The machine is in charge of Frank S. Rabjohn, the well-known expert.

Fred McNeillie is the new man on the board of auditors, taking the place of John Welsh, retired; and "Jim" Cunningham is the worthy acquisition to the executive committee.

Andy Gerard and T. Stevenson will represent No. 91 at the annual sessions of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, to be held in Ottawa in September.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

At the annual election, W. V. Southwick was reelected as president. He received a big majority, which shows the members approved of his past record and ability to safely steer the ship of state for another year.

Larry Sutton, "the comma chaser," from Newark, N. J., was here recently and renewed many acquaintances with old-time friends. He is now scouting for Matty's Cincinnati Reds, which assures them of the best material available. Larry dug up two-thirds of the stars on the Brooklyn National League club.

Frank Haggerty, of the Hempstead Press, has been seriously ill with an attack of pneumonia. He is slowly recovering, which will please his host of friends hereabouts.

Eddie Wagener stopped off here for a few days on his way west. His old pals were sure glad to see the old boy again. Eddie has been with the Wade & Thompson Company in New York city for the past year.

John Quinn, make-up on the Press, has joined the ranks of the married men. Mr. and Mrs. Quinn are receiving congratulations and well wishes from their many friends. Jay is well known as being "on his toes" any time a big rush hits the office.

James Yarwood has left for Colorado Springs and the Home to recuperate his failing health. "Jimmy's" many friends are hoping for his early recovery.

Edward L. Hempstead, one of our members, has purchased the Binghamtonian job printing office from James Treat. The office name has been changed to the Hempstead Press. This is one of the finest equipped job printing plants in this part of the state. The continued success of this office is assured with Ed at the helm.

The Vail-Ballou Publishing Company is installing five new model 19 Mergs.

Work is slowing up somewhat. Cards received: George Pomeroy, Thomas H. Wheaton.

MISSOURI SPECIAL TO COLORADO SPRINGS CONVENTION.

Reservations received and inquiries coming in, indicate to the promoters of the Missouri special to the Colorado Springs convention the train will be a success—a means whereby delegates and visitors can make the trip in comfort, with some little pleasure and good fellowship thrown in. The train equipment will consist of Pullman sleepers, diner and library club car. It will leave St. Louis Friday, August 10, 9:30 A. M. Those who can so arrange, are requested to arrive in St. Louis Thursday, August 9, by noon, if possible.

From Kansas City comes good news for members of the special. It is that No. 80, headed by its new president E. L. Traylor, has decided to entertain. What form the festivities will take we are not as yet advised, but it's a sure thing the good fellows of that union will make it worth while. And for that purpose, there will be a slight change in the schedule, as previously announced. Arrival in Kansas City will be 6 P. M., while leaving time will be about 11 P. M., and no stop will be made at Limon, Colo.

Every one going with the Missouri special will purchase ticket from his local agent at the regular fare, join the special at either St. Louis or Kansas City. But be sure to have going coupon routed via Rock Island lines from either of those two points. It is the official route of the Missouri special—not of No. 8 or any other local. There could not consistently be any such designation by a local union. Make the returning coupon as wished. Limit is October 31, while stopovers are permitted at pleasure.

A considerable amount of information as to sightseeing trips at Colorado Springs and Denver has been collected and will be available to members of the train, if not before. In regard to hotels and rooms, the Plaza has promised to take care of a number of the party, while the convention committee has plans to provide for others.

Send inquiries, for further information, to

NASHVILLE, TENN.

H. P. Hanson, southern representative of the International Typographical Union, was in Nashville on official business during the past month.

Phil Edwards, of the Brandon chapel, accompanied by his son, attended the United Confederate Veterans' reunion at Washington in June. He visited several other points of interest during his absence and reports an enjoyable trip.

Joseph T. King, of Louisville, was a visitor to Nashville recently, and renewed several old acquaintances among the membership of No. 20.

The membership will learn with regret that Ellis Allen, one of our best-known members, has been seriously ill and confined to his home for several weeks. At this time he is but little if any improved.

Thomas J. Dougherty, of the Ambrose Printing Company, recently made a combined business and pleasure trip to St. Louis, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati and other cities.

S. B. Shearon, one of the oldest and best-known members of No. 20, and a confederate veteran, with other members of his company, attended the United Confederate Veterans' reunion at Washington. We regret to report that since his return his health has been failing, but trust he may soon recover.

Otho J. Thrasher, a former member of No. 20, who for the past six or seven years has been holding a Merg. situation in Atlanta, was here shaking hands with his host of friends recently. This was his first visit since leaving Nashville, and all were glad to see him again. He was on his way to visit his family, now in Virginia.

While in Washington recently the writer met Harry Wall, an old Nashville boy and former member of No. 20. Harry is looking after the monotype casters on the Washington Herald, and has a pleasant situation. Many will be surprised to learn that he has recently acquired a charming Washington bride, whom the writer had the pleasure of meeting. Congratulations yet being in order, on behalf of No. 20, here's luck and long life to them.

It was decided at the June meeting of No. 20 to refer the matter of whether or not our members should take part in the Labor day parade to a referendum vote. The vote has been taken and the result was not to parade. The trouble is that so few of our members turn out in these parades that it shows the organization up in an unfavorable light. If all could be gotten in line we could make a good showing, but as there seems to be no way of doing this, the result of the vote is not surprising.

The eighth annual picnic given employes by the Brandon Printing Company was held at Smith's Grove on June 16. The outing was largely attended, being shared by employes of every department. A handsome program was issued, and judging from the list of after-dinner speakers with the various subjects as announced, Demosthenes and Cicero would pale into insignificance. The occasion was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

Teddy Theobald, of Chicago, a number of years ago a resident of Nashville and member of No. 20, was here the past month visiting relatives and old friends.

By unanimous vote at the June meeting No. 20 purchased liberty bonds to the amount of $500. A large majority of our members also invested in the bonds in amounts ranging from $50 to $250.

The race for delegate to the International convention was one of the liveliest ever witnessed here. A great deal of interest was manifested, and each candidate was sure of winning. There were six in the race and at the count of the votes Lytton Alley led, with Braden Murphey and H. P. Newton tied. In the run-off next day Mr. Newton was successful. With Messrs. Alley and Newton as delegates No. 20 will have two splendid representatives at Colorado Springs.

The annual memorial service to our dead was held at the Orpheum theater on Sunday afternoon, June 3, and was very impressive. A quartet of trained vocalists rendered several songs beautifully. Chairman T. M. Alexander, of the memorial committee, made appropriate introductory remarks, after which prayer was offered and a splendid memorial address made by Rev. T. A. Wigginton, of the Broadway Presbyterian church. After the address the roll of departed members was called by Chairman Alexander. The service throughout was beautiful and appropriate, and it is regretted that the audience was not larger. Our members should all attend these services.

The newspaper scale, which has been hanging fire for several months, at this writing remains unadjusted. There appears to be a disinclination on the part of proprietors to accept the new scale as submitted by the committee. A special meeting of the union was held on the afternoon of June 15, and it was decided to request President Scott, of the International Typographical Union, to come to Nashville and endeavor to bring about an amicable adjustment. It is hoped that this may be accomplished.

E. Roy Moore.

MIAMI, FLA.

The marriage of Chester D. Erwin, linotype operator on the Herald, and Miss Violet H. Blessing, of Carrollton, Ky., occurred June 15. Both are deafmutes and were children together in Kentucky. They will be at home to their friends at 419 Fourth street.

The local union, at a recent meeting, guaranteed to keep in good standing during their active service all members who enlisted in the defense of their country.

At the June meeting of No. 430 it was voted to subscribe for $200 worth of the liberty loan bonds.

At the present writing business is good in all the offices, and there are no unemployed printers. Calls were received for printers last month from West Palm Beach and Fort Lauderdale, but Miami had no surplus printers to supply the emergency call.

The employing printers of Miami all signed the new contract and scale submitted to them in April. The new scale, which went into effect May 1, calls for an increase of $2 a week for both day and night workers alike. When it was shown that the old wage was inadequate to meet the high cost of living here the scale was signed without a protest from any one.

M. H. Kanaga has resumed his labors at the Herald office after a few weeks' vacation spent in the north. During his trip he visited his old home, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Chicago, Chattanooga, Atlanta and other cities on his way back.

Caspar Hefty, proprietor of the Hefty Press, charter member and ex-president of No. 430, was a candidate for mayor of Miami at the June municipal primary, but was defeated by 170 votes. His opponent, Hon. J. W. Watson, present representative in the state legislature, is an ex-mayor of the city. Mr. Watson's work at Tallahassee during the past session of the legislature won him many labor votes. The principal labor bills for which he worked and voted were the labor compensation bill, the plumbers' bill and the minimum wage for women bill.

William A. Glenn, foreman of the composing room of the Metropolis, joined the army of benedicts on May 31 and immediately left for the north on his honeymoon trip. He expects to return after a four-weeks' vacation and resume his duties on the "Met." During his absence, M. Courtney is acting as foreman.

When the time arrives for the establishment of a branch Home in the south, don't forget that Miami, the magic city, is on the map, and that a desirable site is ready to be donated for that purpose. There is not a more desirable place for such an institution than Miami, which is the present home of twenty-five millionaires. Government weather reports prove that no more equable climate exists than that accorded this vicinity. The summers are delightful and the winters are mild. Let me repeat: When the time arrives to choose a location for a branch Home in the south, remember Miami is on the map and that it is a most desirable place for the Home.

W. S. Thompson, who spent the winter in Miami working in Denicke's printshop, took out a traveler lately and has returned to the north.

PITTSBURGH PIKES PEAK CLUB.

The Pittsburgh Pikes Peak club will leave Tuesday, August 7, at 6 P. M., arriving at St. Louis Wednesday morning, where the day will be spent enjoying the sights. Leave St. Louis Wednesday night and arrive in Kansas City Thursday morning. Sightseeing will be the order of the day, and the party will leave that night for Denver, arriving Friday noon, leaving Saturday noon for Colorado Springs. Any delegates interested in this trip should get in touch with W. M. Dawson, 249 Meyran avenue, Pittsburgh, who will cheerfully furnish all information regarding the club and trip. The club will return via Omaha and Chicago, where stopovers will be allowed.

Pittsburgh, Pa. W. M. Dawson.

MOOSE JAW, SASK.

The "dollar-day" is a well-known institution in the commercial circles of this sunlit prairie burg, and the honorable body of typos will, ere these notes appear, have held its "dollar-night," with what measure of success remains to be seen. It is anticipated, however, that there will be a bumper attendance. This should be a welcome change from those meager gatherings that have been the rule for many moons.

Our annual election has been held and the officers for the ensuing year are: Harry Falconer, who again fills the president's chair; Tom Stark, occupying the vice-president's chair; Len Bailey, who enters upon his third year as secretary-treasurer; Messrs. Macdonald, Marchant, Spence and Woodhouse forming the executive committee.

At our June meeting a hearty vote of thanks was accorded Messrs. Falconer and Stiles for their work as delegates at the Western Canada convention held at Regina in May.

R. D. Sullivan (Lewiston) has deposited his card. F. Grindrod (Times) has gone to Regina Beach for a few months to recuperate, his eyes having troubled him a great deal of late.

The baseball bug has now a firm hold on the printers of Moose Jaw, the Saturday afternoon swatfests being eagerly looked forward to by our budding Cobbs.

I must not forget to mention the fact that the Times has generously granted their typos a dollar increase on account of the unusual economic conditions prevailing. This increase was not due until the fall, so the boys are greatly appreciative of the firm's consideration. Herbert Gray.

KINGSTON, ONT.

Charles Woods, of Ottawa, came home last month to see his son, Gordon, before the latter started for France to uphold the honor of Canada in the European war.

William Moors is at present operating a machine in Smith's Falls. H. H. Crooks, former president of No. 204, is now located at Saskatoon, Sask. The limestone city union will miss him, as he gave splendid service to the craft while a resident here.

At the June meeting a resolution was passed to discontinue the meetings during July and August. It is always difficult to get a quorum during these months.

J. S. Lyons was elected president of No. 204 to succeed H. H. Crooks.

"Somewhere in France" has a special interest in Kingston, as Stuart Quick, one of the casualties, was employed for some time at the British Whig. This little booklet tells a tale of wonderful sacrifice and patriotism, and is appreciated to the full by Canadian unions. President Scott is to be congratulated on its issuance. The local papers have commented favorably on it.

Baseball has taken hold of the printers and several games are anticipated during the season.

GOLDMANN COMPANY'S BONUS.

A more surprised lot of folks you never saw in your life than when the cashier of the Isaac Goldmann Company passed little white envelops around on Tuesday, June 12. They felt kind of heavy, and upon opening them it was found that each of them contained a twenty-dollar gold piece with a card "in appreciation of faithful services for the past year." Of course, there was not much work done after that; every one was excited—you could see the men standing in groups. It was lucky that it was near quitting time, else there might have been some "call downs."

Next day a special meeting of the different chapels was called to draft a set of resolutions. This matter was entrusted to William Albert, Louis Schonberger, Emil A. Flugrath and Martin Hellenbrecht, of the composing room; Ben Lynch and John Delafield, of the pressroom.

The resolutions adopted were as follows:

Whereas, The Isaac Goldmann Company, in appreciation of faithful services performed by its employes, distributed among them, of their own volition, a bonus,

Therefore, The employes, at a special meeting of their chapel, held on Wednesday, June 13, 1917,

Resolved, To tender their heartfelt thanks for the appreciation shown by employers to employe;

Resolved, That we assure the Isaac Goldmann Company that, as in the past, we will in the future do our utmost in the interest of our employers;

Resolved, That as in the past the most harmo-

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be submitted to the Isaac Goldmann Company, and a transcript published in the next issue of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

These resolutions were signed by all those participating—seventy-seven—meaning that that many have been with the firm one year and over (not a few from fifteen to thirty years).

Nathan Goldmann, the directing genius of the firm, was delighted to receive the resolutions and expressed himself as happy to be able to give some tangible proof of how the firm appreciates the loyalty of the men and hoped that in the years to come he would be able to do as well if not better by his employes.

In conclusion, I will mention that the Isaac Goldmann Company mutual aid society will have its annual outing and games at Witzel's Point View Grove, L. I., on Saturday, July 28. The preparations for same are well under way and the net proceeds promise to swell the funds of the society with not a few dollars. The society has now 125 members and a fund in bank amounting to $1,400. LOUIS SCHONBERGER.

HALIFAX, N. S.

The June meeting of No. 130 had to be held in Plumbers' hall, as the building in which the monthly meetings have been held for some years past was destroyed by fire. Luckily, no effects of the union of any value were destroyed. The secretary-treasurer had to secure a new frame for the charter. The fire has necessitated a hunt for suitable quarters, and advocacy of a labor temple has again started. The trades and labor council has appointed a committee to report on ways and means, and all depends on the interest and enthusiasm of the organized workers of Halifax.

A large number turned out at the June session of No. 130, and a great deal more vim and enthusiasm were manifested than at the previous meeting. The new executive committee was named and with the various chairmen soon to be appointed the union will be off again on another year's start. The most important matter with which the executive committee will have to grapple will be the new scale, but as employers as well as men see the need of the printing industry providing a higher scale, everything points to a quiet and amicable time when the year draws its veil around 1917.

One of the important items before the members at the last meeting was a resolution relating to conscription. It was unanimously passed that no form of conscription should be submitted by the government unless it carries with it provisions for the nationalization of the food supplies of the country, the conscription of surplus wealth and the control and operation by the Dominion of Canada of all industries essential to the carrying on of the war, the whole question to be submitted to the people to be voted upon. The trades and labor council has also passed a resolution to the same effect, only more comprehensive in its scope.

Business continues fair in all the offices. One member unemployed. Some changes are slated to go into effect soon in the official staffs of some offices. "Art" Fry has accepted the foremanship of the Anglidile Print. George Scriven has retired from the Lino Print.

The working people of Halifax will soon enjoy the privilege of riding on the street cars during noon and evening hours for 3½ cents, thanks to the efforts of the trades council. George W. Harris is chairman of the municipal and legislative committee. The fare in the morning is 2½ cents. Each time embraces two hours.

The daylight-saving scheme was defeated by a vote of the people. Ward 6 did the trick. The ten-hour men and their wives were strong against the measure. If daylight saving is to be a success, it must be by Dominion-wide enactment.

J. E. SCHAFFER.

MISSOULA, MONT.

Ray d'Atremont, of Butte, came down from Butte recently and accepted the foremanship at the New Northwest.

Bryant James, who has as many friends in Montana and Washington as the next, toured recently from Everett, Wash., to Butte and Great Falls, and paid us a visit of a few days.

Charles E. Anderson, formerly secretary of Butte Union, but now owner of a Drummond paper, recently motored to Missoula.

Ford White and Warren Jones have succumbed to the wanderlust. Billy LaFleur, of Helena, visited his old stamping ground the past month.

Many Montana printers will be glad to know that Charles J. Fisk, of Helena, has escaped the grind and is now traveling for the Intertype Corporation, with headquarters in southern California.

George Rich, of Spokane, is working at the Bureau of Printing. FLOYD BUSHNELL.

WHEELING, W. VA.

Typographical Union No. 79 held a very interesting meeting Sunday, June 3. Among the most important business transacted was a vote of $2,000 for the purchase of liberty bonds. Provision was also made to keep in good standing in the organization all members who join the United States army. Their dues in the union will be kept up through assessments on the stay-at-home members.

President Ned Sims had prepared an interesting history of the union from its inception, showing that it has always been patriotic. The first instance he mentioned was in 1812, when printers in New York organized a company of artillery composed wholly of printers. He mentioned the fact also, that the printers of Philadelphia assessed themselves a day's wage in 1814 to assist in building fortifications for the protection of that city. Mr. Sims then referred to some of the history of the local union, and of the Union Printers Home, which was very interesting.

Considerable comment from outside citizens has been made in regard to the purchase of liberty bonds by this union.

The West Virginia Patriot, the only German daily published in this state, has suspended publication. The last copy was issued Saturday, June 2. The Patriot has been quite an influential spirit among the German-American citizens of Wheeling and throughout the state for a number of years. The final editorial of the Patriot admonished all its readers to be faithful to their adopted country, which it styled the "New Fatherland." They had sworn allegiance to the United States and, while German blood flowed in their veins, they were in all honor true American citizens.

Everett Cody, of the Register force, has made application to join the aerial corps of the United States army and is expecting to be called very soon. We'll bet on Cody to be some flier.

Wheeling printers have done well in subscribing for liberty bonds. From all reports about one-half of No. 79's members have "done their bit."

James Ritz, of the Intelligencer, has resigned his position on account of ill health. He reports he is feeling much better, and expects to be back to work soon.

Work for printers in and around Wheeling is very good. Calls are coming in daily from the city and outside territory.

Charles Layman, a member of No. 79, who was a candidate for chief of police under the new city government, came near landing the job.

R. S. Meek, foreman of the News, has returned to his desk after a ten-days' vacation.

Joe Zitzmann, formerly foreman on the West Virginia Patriot, is working on the Register.

Smith Wickham, of Pittsburgh, was visiting among his old friends here last week.

Arrivals: Eston Plum, W. J. Shroads, V. E. Sawyer, William Neill, W. F. Osborne, Harry J. Fulton, John P. Bierkortte, E. M. Brast, Martin Nithmann. Departures: James D. Harvie, Albert B. Squeri, Charles H. Scherer, V. E. Sawyer, William Neill, Eston Plum, Martin Nithmann.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.

At the regular June meeting it was voted to place a monthly assessment of 25 cents on each member throughout the coming year, in case North Adams is successful in landing the N. E. T. U. convention for 1918.

An interesting experiment was tried out at the Transcript a short time ago when a dictaphone and a linotype figured in the composition of several news items. A reporter talked into the receiving mechanism of the dictaphone, the completed record then being transferred to the producing part of the machine. An operator on the linotype then set up what he heard, wearing a headgear arrangement. As an experiment it was a success, but would hardly be practical.

George Larkin, who last year attended the citizens' training camp in Plattsburg, N. Y., has gone there again to train to be an officer in the army.

Andrew Boland, with a Schenectady, N. Y., traveler, was a visitor in town last month. Barnett Greek deposited a Springfield traveler and has caught on at the Herald. James Brannigan, who has been operating at the Herald the past couple of years, took a traveler during the month. No. 316 is to be represented on the battlefields of France by Chester J. Bronson, one of the younger members of the union, who has joined the Berkshire ambulance corps, No. 13. He expects to be sent to Allentown, Pa., for a course of intensive training before leaving with his corps for France. Charles Hamel was called to Holyoke during the past month by the death of his father.

A "tourist," looking for an "open" shop to work in, blew into town during the past month. He claimed to have belonged to the International Typographical Union at one time, and to prove he was a printer, produced a thirteen-em composing rule. He looked more like farm help, and as he didn't have the necessary credentials to secure charity on his travels, perhaps he is now pitching hay.

The many friends of Miss H. A. Houghton, who has been taking an extended period of rest after hospital treatment, are pleased to see her able to be around again.

LEWISTON, ME.

Lewiston-Auburn Union No. 532 is growing beyond our expectations. Members are taking more interest and meetings are well attended. The June meeting was an interesting one. Representative Dallas was with us and reported that his talks with the employers looked favorable for an early signing up of contracts. Mr. Dallas' work in Lewiston and Auburn is commendable and he has made many friends who consider him an ideal organizer. J. T. Morrissey was elected delegate to the New England convention at Manchester, N. H.

The Imperial Valley Press has changed hands once more, the new owner being Robert W. Weeks, who has made quite a number of changes in the paper, and who seems desirous of making the Press the best paper in the valley as well as the oldest.

The May meeting was enlivened by the presence of Representative Charles T. Scott, of Los Angeles, who gave the boys an excellent talk. "Scotty" is a great admirer of Imperial Valley—particularly in the summer time.

L. F. Brooks, until recently mechanical superintendent of the Press, has been compelled to quit work owing to poor health, and has made application for admission to the Home at Colorado Springs.

MADISON, WIS.

Typographical Union No. 106 has reached an agreement with the employers of this city, which states that all members of the union who enlist or are drafted into the army or navy will be reinstated to their positions when released from military duty. The union also voted to pay the union dues of all members that are taken into military service.

Frank Schillinger, secretary of No. 106, has been elected delegate to the state federation of labor convention, to be held at Ashland, Wis. Money has been appropriated by the union to pay the cost of two I. T. U. courses for Levi Martin and Harry Hesselbrook, apprentices in local offices. One hundred dollars was invested in liberty bonds by the union.

There have been a number of withdrawals from the union during the last month. Ewald C. Raasch, of Milwaukee, who won an industrial scholarship at the University of Wisconsin last year, has accepted a position as linotype instructor at the William Hood Dunwoody Institute, Minneapolis, Minn. Raasch has just completed a successful year at the university. He worked part-time on the State Journal, in that way earning part of his expenses. Raasch says that the past year has been the best year of his life, and that there is nothing like getting an education.

Paul Huntziker, junior in the college of engineering at the university, has left with a party of student engineers for Devils Lake, Wis., where he will do research work for the government.

Clarence Summers, owner of the Weekly Madisonian, celebrated his entrance in the union by becoming a "war bride." Clarence is not a slacker, either.

Miss Irene Griffin, linotype operator on the State Journal, left for Blaine, Wash., where she will spend the summer.

Edward Delebarre, make-up man on the Daily Cardinal, published by the students of the University of Wisconsin, returned to Terre Haute, Ind.

E. C. Patterson, formerly with the Quality Printing Company, of Chicago, is in charge of the I. C. U. Printery's composing room. DAVID WEISS.

Work is scarce at the present writing, with more than enough members to take care of it.

We elected no delegate to the convention. The members seemed to lose interest on account of being a small local and not being able to pay a delegate's expenses. The writer, for one, is trying to save his money and is going to the convention as a visitor, if possible. We have another visitor or two from this local. Two of the members have recently purchased machines and have declared their intention of attending.

We do not expect to lose many of our members by Uncle Sam's draft law, as only two or three were of the age required to register.

JOHN T. WALLACE.

DULUTH, MINN.

N. W. Reeves, of the News-Tribune chapel, carried off the honors at the recent election held by No. 136 and will represent this union at Colorado Springs this coming August.

Juls Anderson, formerly of St. Paul, goes to the federated trades assembly in Duluth from this union and will also represent us at the convention of the state federation of labor when it assembles at Faribault.

A long-standing feud between the picture machine operators' union and the management of the Rex and Lyric theaters in this city was finally settled and brought to a satisfactory conclusion through the good offices of a committee from No. 136. Edwin Anderson, Russell Henry and John Barron were the members who handled the work of getting the belligerents together and bringing the conferences to a successful conclusion.

As a result of several conferences between the officers and the city commissioners all of the city printing of Duluth will carry the allied label in the future.

At the last meeting the matter of protecting the situations of members who may be drafted was before the union and the enforcement of the International law covering the matter was unanimously favored.

Another phase of the war condition was considered after hearing a report that one printing firm was intending to import female help from the country offices for the purpose of training them in the run of the shop and thus cover any vacant situation that may arise in the event of a compositor being drafted out of that particular office. It was the unanimous opinion of the members that all of the apprentice rules be enforced, and that the employment of non-union help be vigorously opposed until all of the resources of the International Typographical Union had been exhausted. The incident is indicative of what the typographical union may be called upon to face in the near future in case the war is of long duration or there is a heavy draft made on the membership.

Work continues fair and subbing is good.

WILLIAM E. TOWNE.

READING, PA.

The Eastern Pennsylvania Typographical Union convened in quarterly session in this city on Sunday, May 27. There was an attendance of nearly two hundred delegates and visitors. An informal "get-acquainted" gathering was held on the Saturday evening previous. Sunday morning the visitors were entertained on a trolley ride over Neversink mountain, which was greatly enjoyed, the weather being ideal for the trip. The convention went into business session at 1:30 P. M. Sunday, President Corless in the chair. Being so close to Memorial day, a memorial service was held for all members of the craft who died the past year. James E. Norton made the address.

James H. Maurer, state legislator and president of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor, spoke on the labor movement and especially of the fights on labor bills in the legislature. Fraternal delegate from the New Jersey Printers' League, Charles J. Smith, told of the work accomplished by that body. The usual encouraging reports were read. Short speeches for the welfare of the body were made by Messrs. Bowen, Boyer, and others. The next place of meeting has not been decided, being left in the hands of the officers.

No. 86 at the June meeting adopted resolutions entitling any member who is drafted by the government to his priority and directing that all dues and assessments be paid by the local union while in service.

The union invested $100 in liberty bonds, while individual members have been "doing their bit," subscribing to bonds to the tune of about $5,000. Who says union printers have no patriotism?

One apprentice was admitted to full membership at the June session and one apprentice member elected. The auditing committee reports 149 members, with a small percentage in arrears.

Charles E. Miller No. 1 is the delegate to Colorado Springs. He is familiarly known and is one of the "live wires" of No. 86 and always ready to do his "bit" for the local.

The "Typo Bugs" held another supper and social time at the Eagle's Mountain Home on Mount Penn. These affairs are held at intervals and are for the purpose of promoting sociability and friendship among the members of No. 86. The click of the Merg. and the cares of the office become memories when the "Bugs" begin buzzing. The only thing to revert the mind back to the office is when the "King Bug" calls "time" on some "Bug" talking shop.

Conrad Komorowski has left for Scranton, where he intends opening a machine composition office doing work for the trade. He bought a model C intertype. Mr. Komorowski has the best wishes of the boys in his new undertaking.

Paul Reifsnyder, of the Eagle jobroom, surprised his friends by quietly marrying Miss Mary B. Barth. The ceremony was performed on a Saturday afternoon, when the plant is closed, thereby giving them a chance to spring the surprise.

1918—Scranton—1918. Start packing your grip. It's all over but the shouting. Everybody is going to Scranton in 1918, when the International Typographical Union meets, and partake of that genial Scranton hospitality as dished out by Messrs. Langan, Nelmes, Walton and others.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

Please take notice that St. John has not been obliterated from the map and that No. 85 is still vigorous and healthy, although she has not been tooting her horn vociferously for some time past. The measure of prosperity being enjoyed by the members of No. 85 will compare favorably with that of other sections of the International jurisdiction. A progressive scale of wages has been assented to by the employers, which is as follows:

Floormen and admen—1917, day work, $18, night work, $20; 1918, same as 1917; 1919, day work, $19, night work, $21.

Book and job men—1917, $18; 1918, same as 1917; 1919, $19.

Foremen, machinists and operators—1917, day work, $20, night work, $23; 1918, day work, $22, night work, $25; 1919, same as 1918.

In addition to this, time and one-half is to be paid for statutory holidays and double time for Sundays.

We are also delving into the apprentice question pretty deeply and hope to achieve a considerable measure of success in this line. Of course, we can not expect to attain the hights of perfection enjoyed by the great offices of the larger centers, but at least we can pave the way for a general improvement in the conditions of the craft in the future, as well as secure for the present generation of printers at least a modicum of the success which our enterprise and application to the principles of unionism entitle us.

Along the lines of the apprentice question, No. 85 has a vigorous committee which is digging into the problem with a will, and one of the strong features of its endeavor is the pressure it will bring to bear on the apprentice to take the I. T. U. course of instruction. Should its efforts along this line be fraught with a reasonable amount of success, the benefits to be derived within the next few years will be incalculable. The present haphazard training of the apprentice is not conducive to good workmanship for the future. In the contracts provided for the employers to sign there is this clause relating to apprentices and the pay they shall receive: "Apprentices in their third year shall receive two-fifths of the floormen's scale; in the fourth year one-half of the floormen's scale, and in the fifth year two-thirds of the floormen's scale, provided they measure up to the standard of the International Typographical Union." It will thus be observed that our union is working along correct lines in the apprenticeship matter at least.

Last month we moved into new and elegant quarters in the Market building on Charlotte street. The hall is richly carpeted and the walls profusely illuminated with pictures, while two large chandelier clusters of electric lights suffuse their radiance over the whole.

A. E. McCoy, a member of the Times chapel, who has been seriously ill for some months, is now in the convalescent stage and on fine days his smile is noticed around the green spots on King square.

Several of the members of No. 85 have heard the call of empire and are now serving their country on the battlefields of Europe. The latest of this class to put on the khaki was our old friend Stephen H. Frye, who for several years had amused himself pounding the keys of a linotype in the Times office. The chapel presented him with a handsome smoker's outfit and an abundance of well wishes.

Anent the war and the members of No. 85 who are actively engaged in it, members of the craft elsewhere may be interested to know that at the end of each month an assessment is made on the members for the benefit of those who are fighting our battles on the other side of the Atlantic.

A. D. COLWELL.

VIRGINIA STATE TYPOGRAPHICAL ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Virginia State Typographical Association was held in the city of Lynchburg Sunday, June 3, with about twenty-five delegates present, nearly every local in the state being represented.

The conference was called to order by President Harwood, of Richmond, and his annual report and that of Secretary Fentress showed marked progress had been made during the past twelve months, with prospects favorable for continuance of the good work being accomplished by this wide-awake organization.

Norfolk, Roanoke and Newport News reported wage increases during the past year, and Richmond reported the addition of quite a few new members to that organization.

Representative Campbell was present and a plan was mapped out for organization work in this state during the coming year. He reported contracts having been signed with the two dailies in Petersburg last year, and several contracts signed with job shops under the jurisdiction of Fredericksburg Union.

The Virginia association was organized three years ago and has obtained wonderful results, and its influence is being felt throughout the entire south.

After the morning session Lynchburg Union invited the delegates and visitors to an elegant dinner in the private dining room of the Virginian Hotel, and every one declared it one of the finest affairs of this nature ever attended.

The old officers were re-elected without opposition, and glowing tributes were paid to their efficiency and faithfulness during the past two years.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted, and ordered printed in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL:

Whereas, During the administration of Marsden G. Scott the printing industry has passed through the most critical period of its history, due in a large measure to increased cost of nearly all materials used therein, and especially white paper; and,

Whereas, Notwithstanding these conditions the grand old International Typographical Union has continued its steady growth, and remarkable progress has been made in securing advances in wages in a large number of locals in the jurisdiction; and,

Whereas, This growth is due in a large measure to the safe and sane policies pursued by the president of our International Typographical Union, Marsden G. Scott, ably assisted by Vice-President Barrett and Secretary-Treasurer J. W. Hays; and,

Whereas, These officers have made a special effort to improve conditions in the southern section of our jurisdiction, and have met with marked success; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Virginia State Typographical Association, in fourth annual convention assembled, do heartily endorse the administration of Marsden G. Scott and his two able assistants, Vice-President Barrett and Secretary-Treasurer J. W. Hays; and, be it further

Resolved, That we call upon all the local unions in the southland to use their best efforts to the end that these gentlemen may be re-elected to office and the International Typographical Union continue its onward march of progress; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to Messrs. Scott, Barrett and Hays, and a copy be sent THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, with the request that they be published therein.

Resolved, That the action of President Marsden G. Scott in the attitude he took in regard to the sympathetic strike of the street car employes in New York city, in which he took the stand that all union printers in New York city live up to their contracts, be heartily endorsed by the convention of the Virginia State Typographical Association at its meeting held in the city of Lynchburg, June 3, 1917.

The convention adjourned to meet in Petersburg on the first Sunday in June, 1918. R. L. WOODY.

LONDON, ONT.

Possibly the event of greatest interest to printers in this jurisdiction for a long time was the Conference of Ontario Typographical Unions, which convened in this city on June 7, extending to June 9, inclusive. No. 133 endeavored to do itself proud and carried out the entertainment on the International Typographical Union convention plan in miniature, which included a trip to Port Stanley, on Lake Erie, a banquet, theater party, etc., with a grand finale on Saturday, when the convention accepted an invitation to visit the great Carling breweries, where they were entertained by the president and directors of this famous institution in a royal manner. Michael Powell, of Ottawa, was the orator of the day for the printers, and the manner in which "Mickey" handled the hifalutin words was enough to tear the binding off Webster.

The convention was conceded by all to be the best, from every viewpoint, yet held in Ontario, every union but one being well represented. Chief Factory Inspector Burke was present for the entire session, and gave illuminating addresses on lighting, ventilation and sanitation of printing offices, and assured the convention that they could depend on his hearty co-operation in attaining the desired results for their comfort and welfare. The large volume of business, which increases noticeably with each succeeding year, was handled with an intelligence and dispatch that was remarkable. Major Kinskey, of Buffalo, and Representative Drury, of Montreal, represented the International Typographical Union and gave highly interesting reviews on the work being accomplished in the province. Among those in attendance who deserve special mention for their enthusiasm, and who can always be found at every gathering of union printers from the International Typographical Union convention down to the cross-roads chapel, were: J. D. McDougall and Albert Rogers, of No. 91; George M. Crooks, of Brantford; Fred Preece, of Ottawa; George Campbell, of Hamilton; Michael Powell, of Ottawa; C. H. Whitehead, of Brantford; Charles P. Doughty, of Guelph; J. G. Gallagher and E. W. Wood, of Mailers' Union No. 5, Toronto; John W. Hockney, of Stratford; George L. Myland, of Peterborough, and a host of others. The following officers were elected for the year 1918: Charles P. Doughty, Guelph, president; George L. Myland, Peterborough, secretary-treasurer, and H. B. Arther, London, vice-president. Guelph was selected as the next meeting place of the conference.

Convention notes: The beautiful souvenir autograph passes over the L. and P. S. railway by Mayor Stevenson were much appreciated by the delegates. Michael Powell declares that the weigh scales in London are all wrong. George Myland was confined to his room with his grip and nearly missed the trip to Port Stanley. McDougall was mistaken for President Wilson. The photos were fine; send addresses.

Roy Jenkins, night foreman of the Free Press, has severed his connection with that journal to accept a similar post in Brandon.

Al Fogan, a long sufferer from stomach trouble, is now in Victoria hospital, where he expects to undergo an operation. His position at the Press is being filled by William McKenna, recently of Kitchener.

John Arthur Hateley, of the Charleston Press chapel, has joined the ranks of the benedicts and is now enjoying a honeymoon in Montreal and vicinity.

The executive council of No. 133 will meet in the Dawler block on the Saturday afternoon immediately preceding the regular meeting, every month, at 4 o'clock, during the summer months. The chairman requests that the secretaries turn over all business to come before them at that time.

Business conditions are the best, with the high cost of living still holding its own.

A. H. WHEATLEY.

GREAT FALLS, MONT.

For the first time in its history this local will be represented at the annual convention of the International Typographical Union. Charles E. Cole was elected delegate and F. W. Schmidt alternate. To say that this union will be well represented in its initial entrance into the convention would be putting it very mildly. Mr. Cole has been president of this local for the last four years, and through his activity in that capacity the local has progressed as never before. He is a man of sterling qualities and genial disposition, and will undoubtedly make many friends among the delegates. Any legislation that will be beneficial to the small unions and the International Typographical Union in general is sure to receive the support of the delegate from Great Falls. Here's hoping that when this local receives the report of the convention from Mr. Cole that it will be so enthused as to make suitable arrangements for the sending of a delegate each year. It is our opinion that if the small unions would put forth stronger efforts to send a delegate each year they would make the conventions more interesting and probably be able to pass more legislation that would be of material benefit to the smaller unions.

Two members of this local have enlisted in the military service of the United States. They are Walter T. Neubert, formerly secretary-treasurer, and Walter Hillstrand. Both boys were members of the Tribune news chapel.

At the last regular meeting the executive board was empowered to purchase $500 worth of liberty bonds. This union also voted to pay the dues and protect the situations of all the members who have enlisted or may enlist in the military or naval service of the United States.

Since the last correspondence to THE JOURNAL the allied printing trades council held its annual banquet. The affair was held in the banquet hall at the Elks lodge, owing to the fact that the cooks and waiters of the two large hotels of the city had been locked out. The program was well arranged and included talks by L. W. Wendt, president of the allied printing trades council; Charles E. Cole, president of the local typographical union; Louis Knuckle, president of the pressmen's union of this city, and Thomas Riley, representing the bookbinders. These talks were interspersed with selections by the Gibson mandolin club, after which there were addresses, Toastmaster E. H. Cooney, editor of the Leader, calling on most of the employers, who all responded with very appropriate talks. There were seventy-two at the tables and all were of the opinion that the get-together meetings should be oftener.

The scale committee, which has had that matter in hand for the past couple of months, has the work about completed. The new contracts go into effect on June 11 and call for increases from 25 cents to 75 cents per day.

Work continues good. Arrivals for the past month were Rex L. Griffin, J. A. Kelly and William H. Dawson. Marion Ashton has departed.

L. W. WENDT.

SASKATOON, SASK.

Delegates Morrissey and Moore, who were in attendance at the Western Canada Conference convention, held in Regina last month, presented a lengthy report of the proceedings at the June regular meeting. The report was discussed clause by clause and created so much general discussion of interest that it was found necessary to hold over part of the report for another meeting.

I see our good brother down in Regina refers to a local in a neighboring town on account of its apparent neglect of the proofreaders in its jurisdiction. We are having our troubles just now over a situation which has developed in a local office through taking in a proofreader a year or so ago.

Alfred Brett, a member of No. 663, and Jack Rivett, an apprentice, both on the Star, have enlisted in the cycle platoon and are now making their headquarters in Regina preparatory to going overseas.

W. J. Tiplin, a member of No. 663, who is holding down a "sit" at North Battleford, was in town over the week end attending the sessions of the Saskatchewan Methodist Conference meeting here.

The work of installing a ventilation system in the Phœnix office has been commenced and the members of this chapel are hoping that the system will prove adequate.

Cards received: J. H. Gyde, from London, Ont.; H. T. Richards, Port Arthur. Cards issued: A. B. McCallum and T. A. Curry, both gone to Regina, and L. A. Small.

R. J. MOORE.

CHARLESTON, W. VA.

At the May election we elected the same officers as before—Clyde Fraser, president; Howard Jarrett, recording secretary; Bill Roberman, secretary-treasurer, etc., and in a three-way battle of ballots for delegate Guy Williams won out, with C. M. Crawford as alternate.

While there have been no real enlistments among our boys, yet they are doing something, several volunteering for registration service, and some training men in the evenings after work in the duties of a soldier.

Work is only fair here, with plenty to handle everything.

For the second time the tag day cards came out with the label on them, in deference to the expressed wish of No. 146.

Ed Taylor was in the hospital for several days in the early part of June. Wirt Hacker, of the Mutual Printing Company, was laid up for several days with his eyes.

SCRANTON, PA.

"The Electric City, 1918."

Hon. John R. Farr, congressman, and member of Scranton Union, addressed Columbia Union, Washington, D. C., in that city, recently. Our congressman-printer gave a very interesting talk, and closed his remarks by urging the members to boost Scranton for the 1918 convention. Among other things, he said:

Get this fact right in your minds. The convention is to meet in Scranton in 1918. The fact that such a convention has never been held in Scranton should be an incentive for printers to go east and visit our hustling, progressive city. The attractions and hospitality of our city would be a revelation to visitors. In inviting other conventions we have always said: "If you don't concede that you've had a better time in Scranton than anywhere else, we'll give you the town," but you'll notice we have not had to give it away as yet. We say the same things to the typos, so come and try.

The election of delegates and boosters of No. 112 to the Colorado Springs convention was a hotly contested one, from the opening of the polls at 4:30 P. M. until they closed at 6 P. M. M. W. ("Commodore") Walton and Frank McTague were chosen as delegates, while William H. Hughes, chairman of the 1918 convention committee, and A. J. Langan, secretary of the same committee, were elected as boosters. For local offices, President William H. Hughes, Vice-President C. M. Corless, Secretary-Treasurer C. A. Keller and Recording-Corresponding Secretary A. J. Langan were unopposed for re-election.

Word has been received in this city of the death of the wife of former President Sauber, of No. 112, which occurred at Harrisburg, Pa. Mr. Sauber left us some years ago and located at the state capital. He was a very sincere and conscientious worker for the craft while acting as president of our local, and the members of No. 112 were sorry to hear of his recent bereavement.

"Tom" Sullivan, of Carbondale (Pa.) Union, was in the city during the month in conference with President W. H. Hughes, of No. 112, in regard to union matters.

the Reading Union, the recently appointed fire marshal by Governor Brumbaugh, was on the "firing line" every hour of the day during the session, looking after every desire of the delegates and visitors, as were also Ezra H. ("Judge") High, Chairman William Rohrbach, Secretary H. A. Sherman, George Goelz, Claude Shelley and Edward Barth, of the committee. The trip on the morning of the convention to Neversink mountain was a treat, the view from the top of the mountain of the "City of Red Tops" being one to inspire the visitors of the scenic beauty of the Schuylkill valley. The line of entertainment handed out by Reading Union, was surely on the order of "big league stuff."

For the first time in several years, the pension members of No. 112 failed to vote at the annual election on May 23. John H. Ross is residing at Syracuse, N. Y.; William H. Neuber and Thomas Henry make their home at Philadelphia; H. G. Bacon's postoffice address is Oyster Bay, L. I., N. Y., while Marshal Preston, of this city, was too ill to go to the polls. Recorder of Deeds P. W. Haas and City Inspector of Weights and Measures W. L. Janssen were around and voted early, shaking hands with former co-workers, and making new acquaintances. Congressman John R. Farr sent word that, owing to pressure of business at Washington, he would be unable to be present and cast his vote.

James P. Bowen, Philadelphia's versatile correspondent of THE JOURNAL, was spreading good cheer among the delegates and visitors at the Reading quarterly conference. "Jim" will carry the credentials as high man of the Philadelphia delegation to the Colorado Springs convention, which is a fitting tribute to Mr. Bowen's work for the advancement of No. 2. Charles Miller, Reading's delegate to Colorado Springs, also did his "bit" toward making the stay of those in attendance at Reading a pleasant and profitable one.

James B. Skeoch, of the I. C. S. chapel, accompanied by his wife, visited Philadelphia, May 31. Mr. and Mrs. Skeoch attended the graduating exercises of the class of the Hahnemann Medical College, which was held at the Garrick Theatre in that city. Among the graduates to receive high honors was their son, James R., a young man who has many friends among the printers of Scranton.

The numerous friends of W. C. Trump in this city were pleased with the news that he was one of the successful candidates for delegate at the election in Boston. "Shorty" Trump is everything that his name implies. His work as president of the New England Typographical Union is a fine record, and proves his loyalty to his fellow-craftsmen.

Scranton Union, at its regular meeting June 8, instructed its officers to subscribe for $1,000 worth of liberty bonds. The Scranton Republican gives No. 112 credit for taking the initiative among the local unions in this section for investing in war bonds. The members of our union have been very liberal in their individual subscriptions, the amounts ranging from $50 up to $200.

W. G. Boyle, whose home is in this city, but who is on the road a great deal of the time in the employ of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, returned recently from Philadelphia, where he was engaged in overhauling the linotype machines in the Public Ledger office. Mr. Boyle installed two new model 19 linotypes at the I. C. S. Printery during his stay in his home town.

Scranton printers had the pleasure recently of meeting R. M. Keller, the only surviving charter member of No. 112. He was on his way to New York, after visiting his mother at West Pittston, Pa., and stopped over here for a few hours. Mr. Keller has been in Scranton only twice since leaving here in 1869. All his former co-workers with whom he toiled in this city in the late '60s, have passed away or left for parts unknown. He recalled M. W. ("Commodore") Walton as a "cub" working at the case (standing on a soap box) in the old Republican office. Mr. Keller visited the union rooms and inspected the old charter, which he signed fifty years ago next January. The years have dealt very kindly with Mr. Keller, and he promised the writer to be with us, without fail, when we celebrate the golden jubilee of No. 112. He has been employed on the Brooklyn Eagle for the past seventeen years, thirteen of which he has worked as a reader in the proofroom.

The action of the executive council of the International Typographical Union in subscribing for $50,000 of liberty bonds has been very highly commended by the printers of Scranton. The printers are certainly following the example set by our executive officers, and doing their "bit" for their country.

Lou Sinker, a former member of No. 112, but now of "Big Six," was the guest recently of Secretary-Treasurer C. A. Keller, of the local union.

QUERY CLUB SPECIAL.

The transportation committee of the Query club (Typographical Union No. 6) has arranged for a special train with the New York Central lines, Chicago and Northwestern, Union Pacific, Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, and Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis lines to the annual convention of the typographical union and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs, August 13-18, 1917, on the all-expense plan.

This tour has been arranged at the request of a number of our members who traveled to the Pacific coast in July, 1915, and from which all returned enthusiastic in their praise. In arranging for the special tour of this character, the committee has endeavored to select a route that, we believe, will meet with the approval and patronage of all members of the International Typographical Union who contemplate attending this convention and anniversary.

The arrangements provide privileges that can only be secured by special train facilities and by traveling together in a well-organized party. The party will be personally conducted and the train will consist of equipment of the highest grade; nothing will be left undone to insure the greatest degree of pleasure and comfort to every one on the trip.

Our special train will leave New York at 8:35 A. M., Thursday, August 9, 1917, via the West Shore railroad, stopping at all principal cities en route to pick up members from those points, arriving at Buffalo at 8:15 in the evening, allowing about three hours at Buffalo, and arriving at Chicago at 11:50 noon of August 10. The balance of this day and evening will be spent at Chicago, with luncheon and dinner at the La Salle station. Leaving Chicago at 10:15 P. M., the party will proceed direct to Denver, making a brief stop at Omaha, August 11, for independent sightseeing, and arrive at Denver the morning of August 12. The entire day will be spent here and a special side trip over the famous "Georgetown Loop" to Silver Plume will be included. Party will leave Denver at 7:45 P. M. and arrive at Colorado Springs at 10:20 P. M. the same evening. Monday, August 13, to Saturday, August 18, inclusive, will be spent at Colorado Springs attending the convention and visiting the many points of interest. The sleeping cars will be parked for occupancy and may be occupied by those desiring while at Colorado Springs.

At the close of the convention on Saturday, August 18, party will board train for homeward journey, making several stops at principal cities en route for sightseeing. The first stop will be Kansas City, where party will arrive on the morning of August 19. After spending the day here, train will proceed to St. Louis, arriving there the morning of August 20. Here, the morning will be spent visiting points of interest. On the morning of August 21, party will arrive at Buffalo and proceed directly to Niagara Falls. After breakfast at hotel, they will board special cars for trip over the Gorge route, thence taking the Canada steamship lines to Toronto and return, luncheon being served on steamer; on arrival at Toronto, party will take special automobiles for sightseeing trip about the city, arriving back at Niagara Falls in the early evening. After dinner at the hotel, party will again board special train, arriving in New York at noon, August 22.

The round trip rate is $130 from New York, including sleeping car and meals except during stay in Colorado Springs. NATE NEWMAN.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA.

Mrs. B. W. Bellamy, of Medicine Hat, was in Winnipeg during the month attending the annual convention of the National Council of Women. She addressed a meeting of the wives of the members of No. 191 in the Industrial Bureau. Mrs. Bellamy introduced a resolution in favor of the union label on their printing to the National Council of Women, which, however, was defeated by vote of 137 to 111, the opponents of the resolution dishing up the usual clap-trap which has been proved false time and again. However, the question is not dead, as the council appointed a special committee to inquire into the whole question of trades and labor unions and the union labels.

The number of Winnipeg printers killed in active service now amounts to nine. They are: Harry Huartson, apprentice machinist, Telegram; Harvey Montgomery, Telegram; D. J. Madden, Telegram; Joe Wilkinson, Telegram; Jim Masterton, Bulman's; J. T. Evans, Kingdom Printing Company; F. R. Kenndy; Roy Fowler, Free Press; and D. R. Whyte, Free Press.

Mrs. D. J. Madden, whose husband was killed in action in France on March 29, and who is left with two young children, is now in receipt of a government pension of $44 per month. Danny received a regular burial in the military cemetery, somewhere in France. His grave is marked with a cross with his name and identification number. A brother of one of the members of the Telegram chapel buried him, and a Roman Catholic clergyman read the burial service.

Albert Kirkley, of the Stovel chapel, is now on the fighting line in France. He resigned a soft staff job in favor of more active service.

George ("Big Sandy") McKenzie writes from France that they are having quite a strenuous time, and says that Fritz is certainly getting it in the neck. He met Danny Madden and Joe Wilkinson just before they went up the line for the last time He states that Lieutenant Creighton is somewhere on the fighting line and that Abbie Coo is still in England. Evans Ross is in England taking an officers' course.

At the annual elections, May 23, Harry Strange and C. Ryan were re-elected president and vice-president, respectively, by acclamation. H. J. W. Powers was elected secretary in place of Walter Wakefield, who resigned in order to take charge of the government printing school for returned soldiers. New blood has been infused into the executive committee in the person of W. Matthews, from the Free Press job.

Delegates Ryan and Pomeroy to the Western Canada Conference of Typographical Unions, held at Regina, May 23-26, report a very busy session. Owing to the large volume of business it was found necessary to have morning, afternoon and evening sessions. A comprehensive report of the convention appeared in the Winnipeg Voice, and the Regina newspapers were very generous in the amount of space they gave to reporting the proceedings. Among the delegates to the convention were a number of ex-members of Winnipeg Union, viz., R. J. Brown and W. M. Laing, Calgary; Charles A. Watson and Oliver Walton, Regina; and Bill Burgess, Medicine Hat. C. Ryan was elected vice-president for Manitoba, in place of E. G. Smith, who retired.

George Britton has retired from the executive committee after a year's strenuous activity. He is now putting in all his spare moments in the greater-production movement on his farm.

George Howard has been re-elected secretary of the allied printing trades council.

Sam Saunders, of the T. Eaton Company, is suffering from a nervous breakdown. The doctor ordered a complete rest for a period of three months. Unfortunately, the Winnipeg scale does not provide for rest periods, and Sam is back at work again. He has been given a job on the floor, as being less strenuous than linotype operating.

J. K. Grant is also suffering from a nervous attack and has been forced to desist from keyboard operating. He is resting in the proofroom.

The allied printing trades are to have a picnic at Grand Beach on July 28. Bill MacLaren is on the committee, which is assurance that the outing will be a grand success.

H. Simmons is the proud possessor of a ninety-pound home-grown squash. He extends a cordial invitation to all members of No. 191, in good standing, to visit his garden, which he claims is easily the best in the St. James district.

Charles Usher, who up to a few weeks ago had charge of the linotype department of the De Montfort Press, is now employed on the Free Press day side.

Patrick J. Stowe, A. M. C., left for England June 14. His brother, J. F. Stowe, who left Winnipeg with the Sixty-first battalion, a year ago, is now numbered among the wounded.

James Hopper, who took out an honorable withdrawal card in 1900, and who held the position of king's printer for Manitoba for twelve years, has now deposited his withdrawal card and is employed in the Columbia Press.

Miss A. M. Bastien, the Telegram's only woman operator, will be married July 5. Miss Bastien was the recipient of a handsome present from the members of the Telegram chapel.

The Telegram had a narrow escape on June 10, when an adjoining block took fire and was completely gutted. The pressroom of the Telegram was flooded and several thousand dollars' worth of newsprint destroyed. The Press came to the rescue and printed the Saturday Telegram.

W. J. Rouleau, one-time superintendent of the Pioneer Press, St. Paul, is now foreman of the Winnipeg Telegram. Harry Ferguson, late of the Telegram, Tribune and Telegram job, is now located at Lethbridge. E. F. Woodbury deposited a traveling card from Moose Jaw, and is now slipped up at the Telegram. Carl Jensen has quit the Farmers' Advocate after five years' service, and is subbing at the Telegram. Ben Duffield has pulled his slip on the Free Press night side and is now slipped up on the day side. F. E. Griffin, late foreman of the Telegram, is now with the American Type Founders Company. J. G. McMurray, Dolph Warren and W. J. Prittie have taken out traveling cards. CHARLES RYAN.

RUTLAND, VT.

Capt. Omar Smith has passed away, much to the deep sorrow of his many friends all over the country. Captain Smith was always a dependable friend to the needy, as many can readily testify who have come in contact with him. He was born January 21, 1846, and became a member of the typographical union in 1869. He had a continuous membership of forty-eight years. He died at the home of Fred Gates, another old member of the union.

Tom Alwill, who has been working in Chicago, is taking life easy for the time being here in his home town.

Many tourists have been coming this way of late. Those contemplating a trip in this direction will do well to detour, unless they are quite sure they can exist on pure Vermont air.

FREDERICK C. STEARNS.

TEMPLE, TEXAS.

A. I. Lingo, who is an out-of-town member of this union, is getting out a publication called "The Limit." He is located at Rogers, Texas, where he is connected with the Rogers News. W. H. von Tiercks was elected delegate to the Colorado Springs convention. At our last meeting the following were appointed as an apprentice committee: Sam Cass, Ed Wensley and Rudolph Nelson. Miss Mabel Steffey, an apprentice on the Telegram, made application for membership at our last meeting. Secretary-Treasurer J. P. Black is riding around these days in a sure-enough automobile which he has recently purchased.

This local has voted to carry all of its members in good standing who are called on to do military service. We voted against the proposed postage increase on second-class mail and communications were sent to Washington in regard to the matter. We had the largest attendance at our last meeting that we have had for several months.

The central trades council has appointed a committee, of which the writer is chairman, to investigate the feasibility of organizing a label league, and it looks as if it will be in existence very shortly. We will appreciate any information from those where they are successfully operated.

No. 688 is the proud possessor of a liberty bond, and may have two before this is in print. We hope so.

Charles Williams, machinist on the Telegram, has invented a chutespring that is the best we have ever seen, and we predict that before many months pass after he puts it on the market all the offices in the country will be using the spring.

Charles W. Ingram, who is with the Telegram, and Miss Florence Elnor Irvin, were united in marriage recently, and after a brief wedding trip will be at home in Temple. Congratulations.

The writer is a candidate for the 1918 convention and has appointed Andrew McBeath as his campaign manager. STUART SHAW.

RALEIGH, N. C.

Otto Eischele, who has been holding a situation as lockup for over two years, was called to his home in New York by the death of his mother recently.

F. L. Morris is visiting with relatives in Maysville.

Captain Clark, of local Company B, spoke to the employes of the Edwards & Broughton Printing Company, June 12, during the lunch hour. His subject was "The Value of the Army Y. M. C. A."

Jerome Jones, of Atlanta, Ga., a member of Typographical Union No. 48, has been secured as our Labor day speaker by Raleigh Central Labor Union. The members of the committee are to be congratulated on their selection.

For a while at the June meeting of No. 54, it seemed as though the members were trying to emulate the example of the recent "expenditure session" of congress. Among the items of expense voted on at this meeting were: Two hundred dollars to defray the expenses of L. A. Bristow to the Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs (in addition to this expenses were allowed up to the time of departure); $250 to defray the expenses of Delegate-elect William Huffham to the Colorado Springs convention; on motion, it was agreed to pay all dues of printers enlisting in the army or navy during the present war with Germany, and, to "cap the climax," $250 was voted to purchase liberty loan bonds. It is to be hoped that the funds thus voted out have not been spent amiss.

Robert G. Wicker has responded to the call to the colors and has enlisted in the navy.

The Edwards & Broughton team in the "Muny League," has given a good account of itself so far, and has met with but one defeat to date, June 15. A number of good teams have been met and defeated, but the postoffice team finally "put one over" on them. L. R. HASTINGS.

LAWRENCE, MASS.

No. 51 at its June meeting voted to buy a liberty bond of large denomination, and was the first organization in this city to do this. Others since have followed suit, but it remained for No. 51 to start the ball a-rolling. Several of the members have also squandered their hard earnings on a bond and are well pleased with their investment.

Business is going along pretty well, all of our sixty-three members being on their jobs and even copping a little overtime. The label is the cause of much discussion and the members are collecting printed matter around town and sending it back to the purchaser with a request that the label be called for. In most cases the answer comes back that as it was a union shop they brought it to the label should be on without asking. And that is just the point that every typographical union should bring home to each of its members. They are to blame more than the purchasers of the unlabeled printing. Members of No. 51 have been ordered to use the label more freely.

Mark Laffey is in our midst and Bob Harper has taken his departure. Both were guests of Commissioner Robert S. Maloney while here.

No. 51 is represented on the ball field by a pretty good team this year and has already taken a few scalps among the best semi-professional teams in the city.

The attendance at the union meetings is all that can be desired by the officers of the organization. We have the rebate system in vogue and it has worked very well, but still the best we can do is about thirty members of our membership of sixty-three. The meetings are at times pretty lively affairs. An outing next month is now on the tapis and elaborate arrangements are being made for the big event.

But to get back to attendance at meetings and the rebate system, the following item from the Chicago (Ill.) representative hits me just right: "If any member has such little regard for his card, his union, or the great principles upon which the International Typographical Union is founded that he will not attend the meetings of his union, I believe it is useless to fine such member for non-attendance." B. J. Keaveny.

LIMA, OHIO.

At the regular meeting of No. 296, held on Sunday, June 3, it was unanimously agreed not to hold any regular meetings until the first Sunday in September, for the reason that during the torrid months the attendance at meetings has been very light in the past. The board of directors will handle the regular routine business for the time being. It was also decided that No. 296 should pay the International dues and assessments for members that will be drafted under the new military selective law.

The secretary of No. 296, F. L. Van Pelt, was selected by Gov. James E. Cox to represent organized labor on the military selective draft board for Allen county and the city of Lima.

The marriage of Miss Blanche Phillips and Gerald Fess was solemnized Wednesday evening, June 6, at the home of the officiating minister. Miss Phillips is a graduate of Lima high school. Mr. Fess is also a graduate of the same school and is a linotype operator on the Daily News. Mr. and Mrs. Fess have the best wishes of their many friends.

By the time this appears in print No. 296 will have another addition to its union printshops, the Brown Press Company having signed a contract and label agreement.

Labor day preparations are already being made by the trades and labor council. President Calkins is looking after the interests of No. 296 in this celebration.

The Republican-Gazette has placed an order for a model 14 linotype which will be installed by the first of July, and will make a battery of four machines, two of them being three-deckers. The South Side Commercial Star has also placed an order for a model 14 Mergenthaler. The Star is a semi-weekly.

Arrivals: W. E. McConnell, Earl Coburn, George H. Ely, John A. Wilcox, James P. Kenefick and Charles E. Ralph. Departures: W. E. McConnell, Earl Coburn, John A. Wilcox.

The printing trade is fair, with everybody working. F. L. Van Pelt.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Absence of election day "scenes" and the largest vote ever cast by No. 80, are the arguments in favor of election by chapels. Out of 447 votes cast, E. L. Traylor, for president, received 367, and "Tony" Duke, for secretary-treasurer, got 361. The large majorities for these two candidates was a testimonial to their efficient and conscientious labors in behalf of this union. Carl Reed Taylor, who is rector of St. John's Episcopal church, was high man in the delegate race; George Bancroft and Charley West, the other two. The last two are job printers. Guy Perrin was elected vice-president; Henry Parson, recording secretary; C. B. Mundorff, Harry Kinkle and Ray Kincaid, auditing committee. The new president, after taking the obligation, said he hoped the members would devote their time in fighting the non-union printer instead of quarreling among themselves.

Ed Logue at the Post is suffering with a carbuncle on his right arm. President Traylor has just got over the mumps. Walter Andrist was taken into the union at the April meeting and his first day as a journeyman had a finger nipped in the proofpress, and has not worked since. Many printers bought liberty bonds, the Star and Post selling them to their employes at $1 a week and giving the interest to the buyers.

The Smith-Grieves Company will equip its plant with new linotypes in the near future. The Post has installed two Ludlows. The Spang-Truog Company is to add another linotype.

Ed Sims and Harry Stuck have returned.

W. K. Michael, Frank McQuaide and Norman Ray, of the Star, joined the officers' reserve corps at Fort Riley, Kan. F. L. Starks.

NOTES FROM THE UNION PRINTERS HOME.

Colorado Springs Typographical Union No. 82 has inaugurated a campaign to secure the convention of the International Typographical Union for this city every other year in the future, alternate years the assembly to be convened in Indianapolis, the headquarters city. The proposition, I understand, will be submitted to the convention next August, and if the delegates will only refer it to the membership for a referendum vote, I am sure it would be adopted by a very large majority. The prevailing custom of holding these conventions in different cities, scattered all over the country, is antiquated and out of date. Congress, or the Canadian parliament, might, with quite as much reason and excuse, adopt the practice of holding annual sessions in the different capitals of states or provinces. Where the customary business of a corporation, public or private, and where its physical assets are located, there, it would naturally be supposed, its legislative meetings should be held. In the headquarters city, where the business offices of the International Typographical Union are at present located, are kept all the records and documents necessary from which to acquire a complete understanding of the union's workings and needs, and here, in Colorado Springs, are its physical exhibits which are always so necessary to be examined when measures concerning them are up for intelligent consideration. The prevailing custom of transporting records of needed information from headquarters to the various cities where conventions are to be held, looks like a piece of extravagance that might be lopped off every other year by holding these assemblages at Indianapolis, and by convening at Colorado Springs on alternate years, the expense would be more than compensated for by delegates to such conventions posting themselves on the operation and management of this great and beneficent institution. It is hoped that the efforts of the local union in this direction will meet with favorable consideration.

Another movement toward economy and up-to-date business simplification seems to be growing among the more advanced thinkers in our craft. That is to have the headquarters of the International Union moved permanently to this city, where all its property assets are located. Here we have the ground upon which to erect an administration building of our own, the cost of which would hardly exceed the price of three years' rental now paid for quarters in Indianapolis, with accessories such as heat, light and water. Our transportation facilities here are almost, if not equal, to those enjoyed by the Indiana city, and our lines of communication are just as complete and reliable. True, we are not so centrally located, but that does not matter materially where most of the official business is transacted by mail or telegraph. Social conditions are as good as in any other city of the country, and our markets are supplied with everything that can be purchased elsewhere. Besides, we have the adorable Colorado climate, not to be found elsewhere on the American continent. Why, then, should not the International Typographical Union establish its official home here, as well as its home for the aged and infirm members?

Mrs. H. Burnett, teacher, and a dozen pupils of the state deaf and blind institute, visited the Home one day last month.

A gold linotype slug has been sent to the local committee in charge of the forthcoming souvenir annual for the International convention, to be held next August. It is from the printers composing the chapel of the Butte (Mont.) Daily Miner. The slug is for the payment of the space in the publication to be used by the chapel in which the names of its members will be printed. It was cast in a No. 19 Mergenthaler machine and bears on its face the sub-heading of the paper, "The Butte Miner." The metal weighs three ounces and is valued at $75.

Not to be behind its neighbors in patriotic sentiment, the Home this year has put in a twenty-acre field of grain just east of the cow barn, and is also cultivating a vegetable garden directly north of the main building. Notwithstanding the backward spring, if we have a favorable season, a good crop is expected.

Philip Scott, a member of Boulder (Colo.) Union No. 708, Mrs. Scott and Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Rossman, all of Boulder, were visitors at the Home May 14. Mr. Scott expressed himself as highly gratified and astonished at the magnificence of the institution and proud of his connection with a labor organization that had evolved it and provided so lavishly for its maintenance.

Hugo Ackershauser, of New York Union No. 6, and M. Borris, of Denver Union No. 49, accompanied by the latter's wife, paid the Home a brief visit since my June letter was written.

Mr. and Mrs. William Hamilton, of Milwaukee, Wis., were visitors here the latter part of May. Mr. Hamilton is an old-time union printer, and at present is business manager of the Milwaukee Daily News.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Wright, of Evanston, Ill., stopped over for a day, May 23, to visit Mr. Wright's brother, W. H. Wright, who is a resident here from Chicago Union No. 16. They were on their way home from California, where they had spent the winter.

Wednesday, August 15, has been designated by the committee to arrange entertainments for the convention as Union Printers Home day. It will be featured by music, oratory and an elaborate barbecue. The other social and entertainment features of the convention, as outlined by the local committee, include many attractive excursions, dances, and sight-seeing expeditions.

The Rocky Mountain Interstate Sportsmen's Association last month issued a general invitation to the Home residents to attend its annual trap shooting tournament at Broadmoor on the 29th, 30th and 31st of May, as its especial guests. A number of the old sports took advantage of the invitation and spent an enjoyable occasion at the association's rifle range.

Miss Ella Eggebrecht, a very popular Home nurse, resigned her position here the first of June, to accept a more agreeable one with the family of W. J. Bryan, jr., to take care of the three Bryan children. The Bryans reside at Tucson, Ariz., where Mr. Bryan is a leading attorney, but the family generally spend their summers at Grand Lake, Colo.

About sixty residents, including their friends, and employes of the Home, on Memorial day took advantage of an invitation from the C. S. and C. C. Short Line Railroad to enjoy an excursion in a special car to the greatest gold mining camp in the world. Owing to the backward spring this year, the weather was anything but balmy, and the train ran into two slight snow storms in crossing the mountains, the second one as it stopped at the Summit station (10,006 feet altitude) for luncheon. Arriving at Cripple Creek, the terminus of the road, another short snow storm was encountered, but afterward the sun came out and gave the excursionists an opportunity to stroll through the town and view some of the huge dumps of broken rock pulled up out of the bowels of the earth. There are scores of mills and hoisting works scattered all over the district, some of which are lifting ore from a depth of more than 3,000 feet below the surface. The surrounding hills are covered with innumerable prospect holes, looking more like enlarged "gopher holes" than anything else. All the mines that are being worked seem to be paying expenses, while some of them are yielding handsome dividends to their owners. The Portland mines are said to be the most extensive ones in the district, the total workings in their different levels amounting to something like sixty miles. The excursionists arrived home about 6:30 P. M., tired but all loud in praise of the enjoyable outing.

Charles B. Harris, of San Antonio, Texas, who left the Home about two years ago in improved health, was readmitted May 19. He was glad to get back.

George W. Martin, a former resident, who left the Home some four years ago to live on his pension and enjoy the society of his friends and relatives in New York city and in the south, returned to this haven of rest and comfort the first of last month to spend the remainder of his days. Mr. Martin is 78 years old, an old confederate veteran of the war between the states, having seen and participated in that great struggle from the beginning to its close, and is full of interesting wartime reminiscences, which he frequently relates with becoming pathos but without rancor. George is a delightful story-teller, an agreeable companion, and was welcomed "back home" by everybody who knew him with warm and hearty greetings. He comes here from Atlanta Union No. 38.

The season of flowers and fragrance has again got around to us after having been delayed a month on the way by the hoary breath of old Winter, as he "lingered in the lap of Spring." All nature in this region seems to be putting on summer garments. The sun has discarded his veil of clouds, the breezes have been tempered with their usual June warmth, fruit trees are laden with fragrant blossoms, bees and birds are filling the air with glad music, and all animate creation is singing songs of thankfulness that a long and tedious winter is passed and that another season of flowers and fruitage is here to greet us. The Home grounds are clothed in their customary flowery robes and the trees on Nob Hill are abundantly covered with a leafage that affords a grateful retreat on a warm day.

There are no "slackers" in the Union Printers Home. In the hospital and solarium colony thirty-five patients between the ages of 21 and 30 registered, according to law, for the selective draft. It is not probable, however, that they will have to answer their country's first call to duty in this war.

Mrs. George Locker, of Lincoln, Neb., is again in the Springs, so as to be near her husband, a sanatorium resident.

Five sanatorium residents have attacked the high cost of living on a triangular piece of waste land near the alfalfa field, by cultivating it. The individual plots are cast up to nonpareil.

Sunday evening, June 12, the Fink orchestra gave a complimentary concert in the Home library. The entertainment consisted of instrumental and vocal numbers and was a most enjoyable affair and largely attended.

Besides those already mentioned in this letter, the following persons registered here as members of the International Typographical Union during the month ending June 14: June 1, Ray Jordan, Hopkinsville, Ky.; June 4, M. E. Hess, Tulsa, Okla.; June 12, Fred E. Thomas, Oklahoma City No. 283; June 10, Miss Pauline Anderson, Rock Island No. 107; Angelo Noce, Denver No. 49; June 6, Frank Butler, New York No. 6.

Former Secretary-Treasurer J. W. Bramwood, of Indianapolis No. 1, was a guest of Superintendent Daley at the Home June 10. Mr. Bramwood came out to Colorado to spend a vacation of several months, leaving his printshop and business in charge of his son, Garner Bramwood, but the young man, shortly after his father left home, was suddenly stricken with the war fever and enlisted in the navy. This occasioned the "old man" to cut his vacation short and hasten back to answer the call of duty.

The management of the Mount Manitou Incline Railway gave a half-fare excursion to Home residents, June 12, over its line to Manitou Park, one of the greatest attractions of the Pikes Peak region. The park lies at the summit of Mount Manitou, 9,000 feet above sea level, and consists of a thousand acres of beautiful woodland, natural rock formations, and delightful scenery where the eye is permitted to range over ten thousand square miles of mountains and plains in three states. Forty-three residents took advantage of the generous invitation, and as the weather was propitious all were highly delighted with the trip.

About thirty more acres of prairie east of the cow barn have been broken up to be added to the cultivated ground on the Home ranch.

Following are the vital statistics of the Home for the month ending June 14, 1917:

ADMITTED.

U. G. Graham, Omaha No. 190, May 18; R. O. Daenell, Fort Wayne No. 78, May 18; Charles B. Harris, San Antonio No. 172, May 18; Benjamin R. Utter, Omaha No. 190, May 20; Horace E. Luckett, Texarkana No. 313, May 21; C. A. Howland, Colorado Springs No. 82, May 24; Frank Wharton, Chicago No. 16, May 25; Louis A. Wenzel, Denver No. 49, May 26; Paul M. Coss, Waukegan No. 294, May 26; John James Graham, Wilkes-Barre No. 187, May 27; Axel W. Carlson, Chicago No. 16, May 29; F. M. Sprague, Independence No. 584, May 31; George W. Martin, Atlanta No. 48, June 2; Frank A. Livingston, Providence No. 33, June 3; W. A. Crockett, Hartford No. 127, June 4; Oscar W. Humphrey, Pittsburgh No. 7, June 9.

VACATED.

Albert Bergseth, May 19; U. G. Graham, June 1; Frank Nartonwicz, June 8.

DEATHS.

Mort R. Cole, Youngstown No. 200, died May 31; Benjamin R. Utter, Omaha No. 190, died June 5.

Daniel F. Keenan, Home resident from New York Union No. 6, has succeeded in obtaining in Colorado Springs and at the Home 320 signatures (with more to hear from) to the petition gotten up by the Irish World newspaper to President Wilson and congress in behalf of Irish independence. Dan is a veteran of '67 and feels that the spirit of Easter week, 1916, still lives. B. F. SMYTHE.

LYNN, MASS.

The annual election of officers and memorial services of No. 110 were held in Elks hall, May 23. President Cahill said it was possible that before another annual meeting is held some of the members would be at the front, and he expressed the hope that they would return safely and with honors. The union, besides electing officers, voted to purchase a $100 liberty bond and send it to the Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs. A vote also was taken on the arbitration clause in the union's working agreement extending arbitration to the book and job offices, giving them the same privileges as now accorded the newspaper offices. The vote was unanimous in favor of extending the privilege to the book and job offices.

Following the meeting remarks were made by Stephen S. Paul, of the Lynn News, who told of the wonderful improvement made during the last few years in linotype machines and the years spent by the inventor, Ottmar Mergenthaler, in perfecting the machine. Mr. Paul worked with the inventor of the typesetting machine and is considered by printers as one of the most expert linotype mechanics in the business.

Other speakers were Charles Chase, Harry Burdett, Mrs. Mary McGrath, James Neilson, Gerald Weiner and Oliver C. Wilcomb, past president of Lynn Union. Edwin Russell, former treasurer of the local union, now a member of Boston Typographical Union No. 13, interested the members when he brought back memories of the olden days in the printing industry in this city.

The following was the program of the evening: Remarks, President Edward L. Cahill; prayer, Past

ROANOKE, VA.

Delegate to Colorado Springs, C. S. Gookin; alternate, W. L. Griffis.

Roanoke was represented at the Lynchburg convention of the Virginia State Typographical Association, June 3, by N. N. Lazenby, J. P. Isom, W. L. Griffis and C. S. Gookin. No. 510 did herself proud in entertaining the convention. A gorgeous banquet at the Virginian was the feature.

No. 60 is adding new members to the roster at almost every meeting.

The Virginia State Federation of Labor met in Roanoke, June 4-6, with the largest attendance and the most harmonious and successful convention in its history. Almost without exception, the officials of the federation were re-elected. No. 60's delegate was George N. Dooley, president; N. N. Lazenby, alternate. The federation will meet in Portsmouth next year. C. S. GOOKIN.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

The June meeting was called to order by Vice-President Harty, it might almost be said as usual, for President Kinskey's work for the International Typographical Union and his military duties have resulted in George being president de facto for most of the past year. This time President Kinskey was in Indianapolis in the interest of the pending newspaper scale, and as that is the business of importance, and that being deadlocked, the meeting was unusually brief. Chairmen reported work as being good, and Chairman Johnson, of the Red Cross committee, announced that he had collected over $50 for that fund.

Secretary McLaughlin's report was interesting, chiefly on account of the variety of excuses presumably honest men can give for not paying a fair price for their printed matter. The master printer who promises to put the sign of the square deal on a job, knowing that he can't do so, and trusting to luck to bluff the customer, we have always with us. Then there are men like the head of the Red Cross movement here, who never heard of the union label. And the department store man who says that he has a right to buy his printing where he buys his merchandise instead of where he sells it. (This kind of man is generally very strong on "boosting Buffalo.") The public official who is surprised to learn that four-fifths of the men employed in the printing trade are members of a union is also on the list. McKimmie, of the binders, who is Scotch, and therefore familiar with scripture, is sometimes tempted to amend David's famous saying to read: "All business men are liars." But this is only when he is in haste.

Arbitration received 287 votes for and 60 against at the election. W. A. Coyell and C. S. Beilman were elected delegates. President Kinskey and Treasurer O'Donnell start their fifteenth year in their respective offices and Secretary McLaughlin on his seventeenth. The other officers also have years to their credit. Sometimes it looks as if there were a little too much war-horse in No. 9, but when comparison is made of conditions now with those of less than twenty-five years ago, it is doubtful if an occasional drove of young bay colts would have done any better.

Instructor Welsh is acting principal of the Elm vocational school during the absence of Mr. Kamprath. Through the courtesy of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company the school has added a linotype to its equipment.

"A Job Printer" has been writing to the papers complaining that the wages paid jobmen are too low; also that newspaper men get larger pay. In spite of the fact that a jobber must be something of an artist, he says, he is forced to carry side lines in addition to his daily work in order to bring home the bacon. Secretary McLaughlin might give the correspondent a few tips on how to improve his condition, but it is certain that writing to the papers will not help, and side lines not only keep down wages but ruin the "artistic instinct."

James Clayton, of the stereotypers, will represent the allied trades at the state convention.

Lieutenant McMichael, formerly proofreader on the Times, has been promoted to a captaincy in the Seventy-fourth regiment, N. G. N. Y.

The friends of James Hinchey, who was a delegate at the Hot Springs convention, will regret to learn that failing eyesight will prevent him doing any work for at least a year.

R. T. Harty, an apprentice member and son of Vice-President Harty, has been awarded $3,000 damages for injuries received in an automobile accident.

Daniel Flavin, foreman of the Courier, is suffering from throat trouble and will be away from the office for some time. Al Schneider is in charge.

Chairman McKibben, of the Times, is suffering from a painful accident. He slipped from the step on a machine and sprained an ankle. His youth is in his favor, and he still is able to collect all dues and assessments.

Personal—I'm back on the job. My absence proved the printing trade axiom, that a sub is just as good as a regular and has more nerve.

HUGH WALLACE.

REGINA, SASK.

The outstanding feature of the month was the fourth annual convention of the Western Canada Conference of Typographical Unions, which took place here May 24-26. Many subjects of vital interest to printers were dealt with and will be reported fully in the official report of the conference. Delegates Corson, Watson and Walton certainly had a strenuous time, and the thanks of this union are due to them for their efforts toward the advancement of the typo's interests. A feature of the convention was a presentation to President Walter Chapple and Harry Soutter, our late secretary, in recognition of their services.

Trade still continues good here and all members are working full time.

Nels Newbalt, of the Leader staff, volunteered for the aviation corps and left to report for duty at Winnipeg. However, he was turned down by the authorities there, so has turned up again at his old quarters.

A considerable flutter has been caused in labor circles by the proposed conscription measure which is now under discussion at Ottawa. Opinion seems divided in some quarters, but the printers are displaying a sane attitude toward the subject and are reserving their decision until something more definite is done by the government.

Attendance at the union meetings is very poor. At the last regular meeting (June 2), besides the re-elected and newly-elected officers, there were only about five members present. The next meeting takes place on July 7, when it is hoped that members will turn up in better force.

HERBERT JOHNSON.

GOLDSBORO-KINSTON, N. C.

Representative D. I. Campbell last month assisted Goldsboro-Kinston Union No. 761 in negotiating a new wage scale for both newspaper and job work, in which all local publishers agreed upon the following increases: Foremen and hand compositors had their pay advanced $3 per week and machinist-operators $1.50.

Representative Campbell organized the local union one year ago May 1, and ever since it has steadily increased in membership, and even the local publishers were considered a "doubtful proposition" when it came to signing a contract. This was proved to the contrary after an interview with Mr. Campbell, who within a few hours after he landed in Goldsboro had every publisher here signed up for one year with the exception of Nash Brothers, who agreed to live up to the provisions of the contract but would not sign it.

The progress made by our local has demonstrated the advantages of the International Typographical Union to the printer in the small town, and it is hoped many of the smaller places in this state will soon have formed unions. President Marsden G. Scott, by his prompt response to send a representative to our city, has proved that he has the interest of the small towns at heart and stands ever ready to lend a helping hand to the little fellow.

EMMETT R. BROWN.

BANGOR, MAINE.

With the assistance of Joseph J. Dallas, a special meeting was called for Sunday, June 3, when plans were made for starting a campaign for new members. Secretary Shaw, of Lewiston Typographical Union, was present, giving a fine talk and doing much valuable work before leaving Bangor. Much enthusiasm was shown at the meeting, as it was the largest attendance of members in many years. The Commercial, an evening paper, working fifty-one hours a week, employing non-union printers and paying far below the scale, is the object of the attack.

In a little more than a week much progress was shown, and with Representative Dallas at the head, as commander, I hope in my next letter in THE JOURNAL to state that we have met the "enemy" and have won a cleancut victory.

Charles G. Johnson was elected delegate to the New England convention at Manchester. Elmer E. Roberts was chosen alternate. "Bucko" Johnson was the unanimous choice, as he is very popular among the bunch.

Herbert S. Rand, who has been employed at the News office, is now in Washington, in the government printing office.

John F. Spellman and Charles E. Rand, apprentices on the News, have enlisted with Company G, Second Maine National Guard, and are now located at Portland.

JOHN F. O'LEARY.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

Work is slower now than it has been for several months.

No. 11 has done its "bit," both individually and collectively, to the liberty bond loan. At the June meeting the union voted to buy a five-hundred-dollar bond, and many of the members subscribed personally.

The new morning paper, the Memphis Herald, started some two months ago, has suspended publication.

Memphis has been a graveyard for labor papers, and has been without one for several years, but at last a man has shown up with nerve enough to start another. He is Mr. Cohen, of Chattanooga. It was scheduled to make its appearance about the last of June. The local union has subscribed for its membership for three months.

Mr. Laframboise, organizer for the Bookbinders' International Union, was here last month and succeeded in organizing a 100 per cent union of that craft here.

The proposed "closed shop" agreement went through with a whoop here. For, 121; against, 8.

Cards received: M. F. Myers, Chicago; Hammond P. Hart, Pine Bluff; James H. Walker, Jackson, Miss.; William M. Forney, Houston. Issued: Wood Allen, George Davison, G. L. Zimmerman, Thomas B. Armes, S. E. Way. Died: Joseph B. Tierney.

ALBERT STARRETT.

PHOENIX, ARIZ.

Perhaps the most pertinent topic in this section, the past month, pertained to the weather. Pioneers disagree as to the exact number, but all contend it has been many years since such a cool May was experienced. However, the torrid season is now on and the thermometer daily soars above the 100-line. Visitors here for the winter delayed departure, but finally are scattering, and although many residents will go to the coast and mountains for the summer, the exodus will not be as great this year as during previous seasons. To this fact is attributed, to some extent, the continued activity in business circles. In keeping with other lines, the printing industry has held up well and it is confidently believed the "Phoenix Printing for Phœnix People" campaign, inaugurated jointly with the proprietors, will have an important bearing, as work heretofore sent to the coast and the east will remain at home. Considerable publicity already has been obtained, and with the co-operation of some of the larger and more enterprising firms, much good will result. President Wood is devoting full time to the work and feels very much encouraged.

There were three candidates for the honor of representing No. 352 at Colorado Springs—William P. Doheney, Kean St. Charles and John H. Digges, the latter being elected. At the June meeting, Secretary Tracy was elected delegate to the annual convention of the state federation of labor to be held at Morenci the first Monday in August. During the last session a state conference was organized by the printer delegates, and although nothing has since been done, it is expected that the matter will again be taken up with hopes of infusing activity. Editor Doheney, of the Labor Journal, is president, and Mr. Tracy is secretary of the organization. The enrollment of this local now is seventy-six, all in good standing. One obligation was given and two applications for membership received. Secretary Sims, of the allied, reports two additional labels granted, making a total of fourteen. The applicants were John W. Martin, who opened a job shop, and Curt Miller, proprietor of the Temple News. The Arizona Miner, a weekly publication, with job shop, brought from Oatman, has suspended. The Morning Republican will shortly rearrange quarters to accommodate new equipment, including a perfecting press. The Morgan Printing Company has installed a model B intertype.

Two more of our younger members have defied the high cost of living by assuming the responsibility of a household. Both are operators, good looking and energetic, which accounts, no doubt, for their success in capturing the fair ones. Among other things Phœnix is noted for its pretty and talented ladies, and it would seem impossible to err in choosing a wife. Richard Porter, of the Gazette, married Miss Louise Hultz, daughter of Mrs. Ida Webb Hultz, North Nineteenth street, this city, and Carroll S. Neese, of McNeil's, married Mayme E. Brewer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Ponder, 341 West Adams street. William Wherry, a son of W. H. Wherry, operator on the Superior Sun, married Miss Grace Edna Hall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Hall, 1800 West Jefferson street. Mrs. Neese is a sister of Mrs. C. C. Schroder, still another young operator at present in California, but who will return to Phoenix shortly. Every wedding is the occasion for smiles on the part of "Bill" Baus and "Mike" Danson, who are now considered staid.

Everett Tiller, formerly of the Watkins Printing Company, reports very satisfactory progress respecting the airship line between this place and Globe. There will be some delay in securing a special design of aeroplane, occasioned by the rush of government work at the factory, but the company expects to be operating by autumn.

C. A. King and Frank Currens, accompanied by full beard and costly appetites, returned from a month's camping trip on Roosevelt lake. Of course, the bunch was prepared for some strong stories, and there was astonishment when they laid claim to killing only one bear. It seems the time was devoted more to studying the habits of the different game and wild animals in that invigorating section. This, no doubt, was difficult, as in many instances their investigation was based merely on tracks. Nevertheless, the light respecting "rattlers" is new to the rest of us and could have been obtained only by personal observation.

Les Adams, of the Quality Press, is taking a two-months' trip through the east. He went direct to New York city. Will also see Washington, D. C., Boston, and pay a visit to his aged parents at Gastonia, N. C. Returning, he will go via Denver, and take in the convention at the Springs. F. J. Moyer, machinist at the Republican, was called to Kansas City by the death of his mother. H. A. Skinner, in charge of the adroom at the Gazette, was planning a trip via New Orleans to visit his father in Florida, when he received intelligence of the death of a sister at Erie, Pa. The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Digges bravely underwent an operation for throat trouble.

Walter J. Ashley, a member of Columbia Union, Washington, D. C., is the new instructor of printing at the Indian school. O. L. Hitchcock now has a machine job on the Mesa Tribune, and R. A. Parker likewise on the Flagstaff Leader, which was recently converted into a daily. William Moore, formerly foreman on the Gazette, finds it impossible to substitute California for Arizona, and is back for keeps. Ray McDonald is with us again after a year's absence. Other arrivals are W. L. Cox, of Denver, and Charles Wallace and T. E. Roper, of the coast.

No sympathy is expressed in behalf of John G. Tinker, whose card has been revoked for ratting in El Paso. This local was instrumental, to a great extent, in securing his release from prison, and it was supposed he went to a situation which awaited him in this state. W. S. Swenson.

HOUGHTON, MICH.

Business is excellent at present, with every one working overtime. This has been an unusual spring.

A notice was sent to all employes of the Mining Gazette June 8, including sixteen of our members, reading as follows:

In order to assist our employes in meeting the high cost of living, beginning with your next pay check, you will receive a bonus of 10 per cent of your regular wages.

As you undoubtedly know, every item of cost in the printing business is high, and going higher. However, with rigid economies in the use of all materials, and your close co-operation, we believe it will be possible for us to continue to pay this bonus.

I wish at this time to assure you of my appreciation of your loyal support to the company and myself. John R. Pimlott, General Manager.

John Koppleman, machinist-operator on the Gazette, the last of our charter members, drew a traveler last month and left for a warmer climate. He says the winters are too severe here.

D. W. Colburn was elected unanimously as delegate to the convention at Colorado Springs, with Charles Pearce as alternate. "Bill" expects to start a little early to get accustomed to the light air and mountain scenery Arthur Buckley has been informing us about. D. W. Colburn.

WESTERN CANADA CONFERENCE.

The annual convention of the Western Canada Conference of Typographical Unions, held in Regina May 24, 25 and 26, was an unqualified success in every particular. There was a most representative gathering of delegates, the weather was delightful, the convention arrangements were complete in detail, the delegates devoted themselves assiduously to the vast volume of business, and it was handled expeditiously. The visitors were entertained by the members of Regina Union with great cordiality, and the press of the city featured the doings of the sessions at great length.

It was essentially a business convention. Aside from the afternoon of the first day, an hour in the evening of the second day, and the evening of the third day, the convention was continuously in session till the midnight hour.

The delegates in attendance were: Edmonton, D. K. Knott and R. McCreath; Calgary, R. J. Brown, W. M. Laing and F. J. White; Lethbridge, Elam Frey; Medicine Hat, W. Burgess and B. W. Bellamy; Moose Jaw, H. W. Falconer and W. H. Stiles; Regina, C. A. Watson, A. Corson and O. Walton; Saskatoon, R. J. Moore and M. Morrissey; Prince Albert, J. T. Willoughby; Winnipeg, C. Ryan and S. J. Pomeroy; also E. G. Smith, of Winnipeg, and G. Macneill, of Regina, International Typographical Union representatives, and T. M. Molloy, of the Saskatchewan Bureau of Labor. The visiting ladies were Mrs. R. J. Moore, of Saskatoon, and Mesdames B. W. Bellamy and W. B. Stevens and Miss Stella Williams, of Medicine Hat. Delegate Watson, be it known, has been a member of the movement for over forty-two years, being a member of Denver Union forty-two years ago.

The delegates were welcomed by President Chapple, president of Regina Union; Alderman (labor) Perry, President Bird, of the trades council, and others.

The Winnipeg Voice devoted six columns in giving a mere résumé of the business transacted, and interested members should procure copies of the issues of June 1 and 8 from the Voice Publishing Company, Winnipeg, Man.

Many issues were taken up in connection with the war, the returning soldier, and demobilization. Conscription of man-power without conscription of wealth was strongly protested against and a drastic resolution sent to Ottawa. Organization and employment bureau matters were discussed, and the executives received much praise for their successful handling of the problems. Pacemaking was discouraged. Condolences were extended to relatives of members killed at the front. The executive committee was instructed to continue preparations for a handsome and appropriate memorial for distribution to all conference members and relatives of enlisted members, in honor of the boys who went to the front. It was decided to advise all local unions to read out at union meetings the names of delinquent members. The governments were called upon to postpone unnecessary printing of blue books until the close of the war, as at present workmen are scarce and staffs overworked, and when the war is over there will probably be a surplus of workmen to look after. The governments will be further asked to curtail other printing matter to some extent. It was decided to send a strong letter to the commissioners on the newsprint inquiry protesting against the tactics of the newsprint trust in exacting exorbitant prices from the publishers. The governments were called upon to use the advertising columns of the press more fully in placing in the hands of the people digests of new legislation and orders-in-council enacted from time to time, and protesting that the governments were taking undue advantage of the press in using its columns for free advertising. Special effort will be made to have more equal representation of news and job men at future conventions. Fraternal delegates will also be invited to attend in the interest of the allied trades. Favorable reports were received from government officials regarding the agitation for the printing of school textbooks in western Canada, and the executive was instructed to work assiduously to that end. Several alterations were made to the constitution, not of a radical nature. One proposal to reduce the per capita was overwhelmingly turned down. The proofreader membership question created considerable controversy, and the question will be taken up with the International officers by the executive. Co-operative action with other conferences was endorsed unanimously, as was a proposal for conferences being given authority to elect delegates to the International convention. The present system of supporting dependents of soldiers at the front through the patriotic fund was denounced. However, the membership was urged to contribute to the fund until such time as the governments took over the duties now performed by the fund. Considerable attention was paid to the label, and ways suggested of enlarging the campaign. Special efforts will be continued to secure the label on government printing. The governments will be strongly urged to take action to eliminate basement printshops. Sanitary conditions in general were given much attention, and several suggestions will be placed before local unions. The conference went on record as strongly in favor of woman's auxiliaries, and called upon all delegates from Canada to the International Typographical Union convention to urge that body to use its good offices to bring about a reconciliation between the warring factions, and to secure recognition from the International. The question of honorable withdrawal cards and the tendency of journeymen to work in unorganized towns without depositing such cards evoked considerable argument, and the matter will be taken up with the International executive council, when some suggestions will be made to those officials. A most valuable paper on technical education in institutes established throughout western Canada was read by Delegate McCreath, and it was resolved to do everything possible to have instructors selected from the ranks of labor. Many other matters were taken up.

Handsome honorariums were voted to President Knott and Secretary Bellamy, who were re-elected to office, the delegates refusing to accept their retirement. The vice-presidents for the year are: F. J. White (Calgary), for Alberta; H. W. Falconer (Moose Jaw), for Saskatchewan; C. Ryan (Winnipeg), for Manitoba.

The entertainment features included an auto trip, a theater party and luncheon, at which the delegates presented Messrs. H. Soutter and W. Chapple, of Regina Union, with beautiful military brushes, and President D. K. Knott and Secretary B. W. Bellamy, with beautiful stickpins, as an expression of appreciation of their successful efforts in behalf of the proceedings.

Next year's convention will be held in Calgary.

R. J. Brown recently declined to stand for renomination for the presidency of Calgary Union. J. H. Wolfe was thereupon elected, but he has enlisted for overseas service and now Johnny Bleaken, returned veteran, is at the helm.

Walter Landry and J. W. Horrox, of Calgary Union, are reported as having made the supreme sacrifice somewhere in France.

S. W. Tuckwell, a member of Lethbridge Union, is officially reported as having been killed in action.

Trade continues brisk throughout the west, and there is practically no unemployment.

Here's something for our brother workers across the line to take a squint at. It's a clause that is contained in the new factories act enacted in Alberta through the persistent efforts of the officers of the conference:

In printing offices where there are three or more typesetting machines (linotypes, intertypes, monotypes, monolines and the like) the melting pots of all typesetting, typecasting and similar machines and apparatus, such as linotype machines, monotype casters, stereotype melting pots, and the like, shall be piped in a proper and efficient manner, so as to effectually carry off the noxious fumes and gases arising during their operation; and all melting pots of stereotyping and typecasting devices shall be properly provided with hoods extending over the metal pots and connected with the aforesaid piping in such manner as to carry off the fumes from the molten metal as well as the burned gas fumes; provided, that exhaust fans, blower or other suitable devices shall in such factories as the inspector orders also be installed for the purpose of further aiding in the discharge of all deleterious matter from composing and other rooms where any of the above machines may be in operation.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Liberty bonds in the sum of $500 were subscribed for at the June meeting of No. 39. A motion prevailed that all dues be paid for members enlisting under the colors. Practically every member of our local is a liberty bondholder.

George S. Scales, one of our oldtimers and a former secretary-treasurer, succumbed through an operation June 2. His late home was at Plainwell, Mich.

The committee on apprentices has submitted its scale to local publishers and printers and its adoption seems certain by both branches of the craft.

W. B. Wilson and E. B. Geary attended as delegates the Michigan Federation of Typographical Unions at Saginaw, June 25-26. Harry Dean, old-time printer and publisher, has said adios to the art preservative and entered the mining field, with headquarters at Denver. Alex Leishman is now state editor on the Herald. Two Ludlows have been installed in the Press adroom. Simon Vermaire was elected a member at the last meeting. Frank S. McGeary, of Springfield, Ill., was on a visit to friends here recently. Freddie Bek, of the News, has joined the naval militia. "Bill" Curott is on his acres agricultural near Ludington. Merle Geary, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Geary, has "steamed up" to a corporalship in the officers' reserve corps at Fort Sheridan, Ill.

George P. Koch.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

The news of the death of Mort R. Cole, at the Union Printers Home in Colorado Springs on Thursday, May 31, was received by the members of No. 200 with the deepest regret. Mr. Cole had been affiliated with the local union since 1890, and up to the time (a year and a half ago), when he was forced, on account of ill health, to go to the Home, he had been one of the most active members of No. 200, having at one time served as president, and at all times being on important committees, the most recent being the scale committee, in 1913, when our present scale was negotiated. Mr. Cole also represented No. 200 as delegate to the Providence convention. Deceased was born in Watkins, N. Y., fifty-seven years ago, beginning the printer's trade at the age of 16 years. He is survived by an aged mother, widow and four children. The remains arrived in this city on Sunday, June 3, and were taken to the home of his son, Howard, 122 West Delason avenue. Funeral services were held the following day at 4 P. M. at the son's home, with Revs. W. J. Kratz and W. Carson Press in charge. Interment was made in Lake Park cemetery. A score or more members of No. 200 attended the funeral services in a body, three members acting as pallbearers, and others as flower-bearers.

The Edwards Company announce that it has purchased the printing plant operated for many years by the Thomas Kerr's Sons, located at 225 East Federal street. Messrs. Thomas J. Kerr, George H. Kerr and Henry D. Nidermaier, of the defunct Kerr Company, have taken important positions with the Edwards Company. The machinery and fixtures of the Kerr Company have been removed to the Edwards Company plant in South Champion street.

W. W. Skidmore, of the Telegram, has recovered from a rather serious illness, and has again assumed his duties on that paper.

Carl J. Schmidt, who served his apprenticeship in the Telegram chapel, was initiated at the May meeting. Mr. Schmidt now has a "sit" on the Telegram and we welcome him to the fold.

Gus Kroeger, after a few months' absence in Cleveland, has returned to Youngstown, and is again identified with the Vindicator job department.

Jake Barber and Cecil Stewart, of Jamestown, N. Y., arrived in the city last month, Mr. Barber being employed at the Edwards Company, and Mr. Stewart at the Youngstown Printing Company. Barber, being of an athletic turn, has also become a member of the printers' baseball team.

Fred Martindale, of Columbus, is now working at the Edwards Company.

Samuel Doctor has withdrawn his card and gone to East Palestine, Ohio, to take a machine job.

William Elliott, former member of No. 200, now located at New Castle, Pa., was in the city briefly one day last month.

The printers' baseball team is setting the pace for the other teams in the Union Trades' Baseball League. Thus far the typos have been victorious in all games played, and here's hoping the good work continues. Manager Oyster and Secretary Hursh have worked hard to give local fans a winning team, and despite the inclement weather of the past month, the printers' team has performed in mid-season form.

The Telegram arranged for the purchase of liberty bonds for its employes on the installment plan, and several members of the composing room availed themselves of the opportunity.

The Vindicator recently purchased a block of liberty bonds, which shows the local papers have the proper spirit.

C. V. Stewart, foreman of the Jamestown (N. Y.) Post, spent a month's vacation in this city, the guest of his son, Cecil. Mr. Stewart is a very agreeable gentleman and made many friends among the members of No. 200 during his brief sojourn.

William Morgan, of the Vindicator chapel, is No. 200's latest addition to the army, he having joined the Tenth regiment, which was formulated in this city. Mr. Morgan recently spent a very pleasant vacation at various points in Pennsylvania, making the trip by auto.

S. P. James is the latest member to hear the call of the "benzine buggy," and is now sporting a brand new Buick.

Stuart Seidel has severed his connection with the Youngstown Printing Company and is now associated with the Commercial Printing Company.

Lloyd Fowler is now with the Youngstown Printing Company. He was formerly with the Commercial job shop.

The apprentice committee submitted a list of rules and regulations at the last regular meeting, governing apprentices, which were adopted by the union.

Labor day will be fittingly observed in this city by the various labor unions. A parade, in which every local within Youngstown's jurisdiction will participate, will be the morning feature, the afternoon being devoted to a picnic and an athletic meet. The committee in charge is working strenuously to make it the biggest labor demonstration ever held in Mahoning county. Z. L. Hursh, of No. 200, is a member of the committee.

PATERSON, N. J.

On Monday, June 4, the Press-Guardian (evening) raised its price to 2 cents per copy. The Evening News remains at 1 cent. The Morning Call has added 2 cents a week, making it 12 cents delivered.

The Evening News has installed a new intertype, making a battery of ten machines on that paper.

The Little Falls Eagle plant has been purchased by the Clifton Times, the new newspaper of "our baby-sister city." The office will be located at 693 Main avenue and Milton G. Levine is the agent.

Peter Kinney worked two weeks on the Press-Guardian, drew his card and left for Syracuse.

No. 195's new by-laws were distributed at the last meeting. They are neatly printed and a credit to Morris Grossman, who did the work. It is hoped the members will peruse them and try to live up to them.

Some of our members have been taking the various "nerve medicines" advertised in the papers, and have become very active and strong. Perhaps they will have enough "nerve" now to attend meetings.

J. William Jackson, well known to the printers who attend the state printers' league meetings, wrote a very appropriate poem on "Registration Day," June 5, and had the honor of seeing it printed on the first page of the Morning Call of that date.

The sympathy of the membership of No. 195 is extended to Carl Mangold, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., in the loss of his mother, who passed away during May.

Two of our members, Hobart Steele and Charles E. Temple, have joined Uncle Sam's forces, the former doing duty "somewhere in New Jersey" with the Fifth regiment, the latter in the navy, as a first-class printer.

Having been elected Journal correspondent, I will now try and fill the job so ably done by David O. Stoddard.

H. L. Vanderveld.

NORWICH, N. Y.

Our former fellow workman, George H. ("Bud") Bendick, is now running a poolroom on North Broad street. There are also other accessories in this place, not least of which is an up-to-date electric piano. "Bud" wishes it thoroughly understood that there is a standing invitation to all union printers to call and partake of any and all the good things the house affords, including sandwiches and drinkables—also a few waltzes and the "Star-Spangled Banner" on the steam piano.

One of our recent new members, Glen Sprague, is numbered among the enlisted men of this town. He is connected up with Company F, First Regiment, N. G., S. N. Y. Company F is located at Walton, where he expects to be called in the near future. After a few weeks in the state camp at Syracuse, the First regiment will very likely be transferred to one of the Carolinas or Georgia.

Milton A. Herter, an apprentice at the Sun office, has also enlisted in Uncle Sam's army. He is at present engaged in guarding the interned Teutonic liners, which are tied up in Hoboken.

Ten typos, employes of the Norwich Pharmacal Company, have made individual agreements to be placed on ten different farms at ten different dates during the planting and harvesting seasons.

The Plain Dealer, formerly the official organ of the democratic party of Chenango county, is defunct. Del Frink, the former proprietor, sold the plant at auction last month. The Plain Dealer was a weekly. A job shop was also run in connection with the sheet. Del lifted a traveler and lit out toward Syracuse.

Ben McClennon deposited a traveling card from Boulder, Colo., last month, and intends remaining with us for a time, although he will absent himself from the trade, his health not permitting of active employment.

Ad. Stokes is at the Union office, where the manager and foreman, George T. Tanner, presides over the destiny of the postmaster's weekly sheet.

D. P. Ackerman.

HILLSDALE, MICH.

Gene Yarick, formerly manager of the Commercial Printing Company, has taken out a "traveler" and departed for Toledo, Ohio.

Representative J. E. Pendergast was in town a few days recently.

The Hayes printing office, which was destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, is now located in the Sutton block. New equipment has arrived and everything is the very latest in printing office equipment.

H. H. Clarkson.

CONCORD, N. H.

Charles A. Wilson was obligated by past President Campbell Wright at our June meeting. In spite of the hot weather we had a large meeting on June 4, a great deal of business being transacted.

Phaneuf & Son are installing a new job press and the Evans Printing Company is installing a new cylinder press.

We succeeded in getting seventeen members out of thirty-four to come and vote on the arbitration agreement on May 23. They all favored the proposition.

Business in all branches of the printing trade in Concord is the best it has been for some time.

It is estimated that ten members of this union signed the conscription registration blanks.

Edgar A. Vernal, who recently returned from New York city, has left the printing trade for the summer and accepted a position as chauffeur. He left with a party the latter part of June for Michigan.

The employes of the Monitor have been given one day off each week to work in their gardens.

No. 297 has not lost any members as yet by enlistment for war service, although there are a few of the young members that expect to go when the draft comes.

A letter has just been received from Robert D. Thayer, who is in Florida, in which he states he arrived in Jacksonville safe and has landed a job. He also says the weather is fine and he likes the place very much.

The Concord Press has enlarged its plant by doubling its floor space and installing a new cylinder press. This makes a total of four new presses in Concord offices the past month, which goes to show that the printing business here has been exceptionally good the past year. We certainly hope it continues.

The printers of Concord feel very deeply the loss of Postmaster Allen H. Robinson, who died recently at his home of heart failure. Mr. Robinson has always been in very close touch with the printers here, as a newspaper writer. At the time of his appointment as postmaster he was city editor of the Daily Patriot. He was also the first president of the Concord Press club, an organization composed of printers and newspaper men. At the time of his death he was an honorary president.

E. B. McCauley.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

J. Nash McCrea took his card and left for Quincy, where he has accepted a position as sporting editor on one of the Quincy dailies.

W. J. Arnold, who went from here to Decatur several years ago, and from there to Ottumwa, Iowa, has returned to Springfield, and moved his family back and expects to locate here permanently.

John M. Tipton, former president of No. 177, left June 10 for Baltimore, Md., where he reported for duty with the Johns Hopkins hospital base unit. Captain Tipton stated he expected to be ordered to France by August 1.

L. E. Van Zant, a member of No. 16 of Chicago, died at St. John's hospital here, after a brief illness of pneumonia. The remains were shipped to Chicago for burial.

No. 177 subscribed for liberty loan bonds to the value of $350. Several individual members of this union subscribed for bonds also.

At the annual election, held May 23, L. O. German was elected first delegate to the International convention, and R. A. Edie, second delegate. George Lischer was elected delegate to the state federation.

R. E. Woodmansee.

BALTIMORE, MD.

Quite a mix-up occurred at the session of the Baltimore City Council on June 11, when it came to electing a city printer. At a joint session the five republican members voted solidly against a motion to defer the election. A doubt had arisen in the minds of some of the members as to whether the firms of Meyer & Thalheimer, King Bros. or the Monumental Printing Company were the lowest bidders. A recent ordinance directed that all printing should be given out by contract to the lowest responsible bidder. The twenty-six democrats supported a motion to defer until a committee from the council could determine who was the lowest bidder. At first King Bros. were supposed to be the lowest bidders. John H. Ferguson, secretary-treasurer of the Monumental Printing Company, then said his firm was the lowest. City Librarian Wilbur Coyle then said the firm of Meyer & Thalheimer was the lowest bidder by $54, but the committee was appointed to determine for itself who were the lowest and to report back to the council. The city printer is elected every alternate year in the month of June. The tabulation of the bids by the committee from the city council, which was submitted on Saturday, June 16, shows that King Bros.' bid was $6,719.31; Meyer & Thalheimer, $6,813.78 and the Monumental Printing Company, $7,627.12. This tabulation shows that King Bros. were the lowest bidders.

In the round-up for the sale of liberty loan bonds on the last day of the sale strong rivalry was shown in each department of the Sun building. The composing room won out over the editorial room. The total sales were as follows: Composing room, $5,300; editorial room, $3,900; advertising department, $1,350; circulation department, $1,900; accounting department, $1,050; pressroom, $950; stereotyping department, $850; business office, $500; engine room, $200; photoengraving room, $300; total, $16,300.

One of the former employes of the Sun who has made good in this war is Sergt. George L. Bussey. Sergeant Bussey joined Company H as a private when they called for volunteers. He was promoted to be corporal while in Texas. While Sergeant Bussey is married, he did not leave the regiment under the married men clause. In recognition of his faithful service he was sent to the reserve officers' training camp at Fort Myer, Virginia, where he is now making good. Splendid reports are coming from the camp in praise of Sergeant Bussey, and a bright military future is predicted for the young man.

Alex M. Rutherford, Maurice K. Stokes and Clarence Dunkle were elected delegates from No. 12 to the Colorado Springs convention. Mr. Rutherford, who is secretary-treasurer of No. 12, will carry the credentials. W. T. Vernon, of the Evening Star, who was defeated for delegate by about fifty votes, proved to be the strongest candidate in the newspapers. Mr. Vernon will be a candidate for the Scranton convention, and his friends assert that he will be elected.

Maurice K. Stokes was unanimously elected vice-president of the Franklin Relief Association, which is composed exclusively of printers, on June 3. Mr. Stokes also holds a very prominent position with the Baltimore Club of Printing House Craftsmen.

An ordinance which directs that all city printing for Baltimore be given out by contract, passed both branches of the city council on June 4. Under the ordinance the lowest bidder will be elected the city printer. Heretofore the city printer has been chosen by the political party in control of the council.

Charley ("Buck") Potee, a member of No. 12, was in Baltimore on June 5, having been granted a leave of absence from Sabillasville for a few days. He visited all of his friends in the Sun office.

Joe Harvey, a member of No. 12, has been stricken with paralysis, and is in a serious condition in a local hospital.

The allied printing trades council is going to start on a label campaign and expects all affiliated organizations to give it all the assistance that they can, both financially and morally. Help them boost the label.

A report was made to the allied trades council on June 4 of all the officers of the allied crafts who held a joint conference on May 27. The matter the conference had under consideration was the war situation and the manner in which it would affect the printing industry in Baltimore. The committee made the following report:

Realizing the absolute necessity for co-operation on the part of all employers interested in any manner in the printing industry as affecting the organizations affiliated with the Allied Printing Trades Council of Baltimore, and the willingness of such employers to permit the borrowing and lending, when necessary, of employes in their various departments, it is the sense of this conference that the most direct way to bring about the desired results would be for the executive officers of the allied printing trades council to obtain, by some form of communication, an expression from all such employers above referred to, as to what extent they are willing to co-operate in the efforts of the council to supply the labor that may be demanded as the results of the operation of the selective draft.

The report was accepted and the employers were communicated with asking them if they would go in conference on the matter.

In the summer of 1915 Stuart Olivier, of Baltimore, purchased the Baltimore Evening News from Frank Munsey. On May 30, in an editorial in that publication, Mr. Olivier announces that he has resold that paper to Mr. Munsey. Mr. Olivier's reason is given in the first part of the editorial, as follows:

Nothing would have given me greater pleasure than to continue owner of the News, but the war has created entirely new conditions—terrifying costs of production—and it seemed to me the wiser course to lodge the ownership of a rich and influential property, an institution like the News, in the strongest possible hands. War conditions have become such, however, as to make it imperative that newspapers should have the advantage of the strongest possible ownership.

In future the typewritten minutes of the allied printing trades council will be furnished secretaries of the various locals connected with the council.

Harry W. Tilden, of the composing room of the Baltimore Sun, has enlisted in the marine corps and left Baltimore for Norfolk on May 23. There is no doubt that the members of the Sun chapel will feel the absence of Mr. Tilden.

The Frostburg Mining Journal, owing to war conditions, suspended publication after the issue of June 9. Inability to secure competent help was the main cause of suspension. The paper was founded in 1871.

Charles E. Heim, chairman of the composing room of the Baltimore Sun, while on his way from York, Pa., to Baltimore, on June 8, was thrown from his motorcycle, his machine skidding. Mr. Heim sustained a fracture of two ribs, bruised left arm and other injuries. A companion, who was traveling with him on another machine, was instantly killed. The man's name was Ziegler. They were traveling at a rate of forty-five miles an hour. Mr. Heim's life was saved by the fact that when the machine skidded he was thrown over a fence, but Mr. Ziegler was thrown against the fence, killing him almost instantly.

In the registration of printers for the selective draft for government service, the following registered from the newspaper offices: Morning Sun, 15; Evening Sun, 9; American, 17; Star, 4; Evening News, 13; Evening News (apprentice), 1. Total, 59. These are all from the composing rooms of the three newspapers, and the total from the various job shops will be given in a few weeks.

Percy Chewning, of the Kohn & Pollock chapel, has quit his position and Eddie Cunningham, of the American-Star chapel, has taken the vacancy.

A strike occurred in the pressroom of the Monumental Printing Company last month. The strike lasted a couple of days, when the men gained their point and a new agreement was signed by John H. Ferguson, secretary of the company. Henry Hardy, organizer for the pressmen, conducted the proceedings. For a few days several of the employes of the composing room were laid off on account of the material being tied up waiting for the trouble to be adjusted.

In an interview with C. Norman Steigelman, of the Evening Star, who was a delegate from Baltimore Typographical Union No. 12 to the Nashville convention of the International Typographical Union and made such a favorable impression with the delegates in attendance, he has announced that he will be a candidate from the typos to the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Steigelman is the kind of material that should represent the typographical union in that body. He is a fluent speaker, never minces his words and calls a spade a spade without beating about the bush. If Mr. Steigelman should be elected to this important office, there is no doubt that he will bring credit to his own organization. He has held important offices in No. 12, having been secretary-treasurer for some time under former President Stubbs, resigning that office to take up some private matters of his own. He now represents No. 12 in the local federation of labor. Mr. Steigelman is a graduate of the University of Maryland Law School and is connected with numerous fraternal organizations of the city. At the recent convention of the state federation of labor he represented No. 12 in that body.

A new magazine, the Maryland Motorist, has made its appearance, and is fresh from the press of the Horn-Shafer Printing Company. It is edited by William G. Horn, president of the Horn-Shafer Company, and is therefore strictly union throughout. It is recommended to all union men who have cars as a valuable magazine for them. The first issue is very interesting. While the general lines of other magazines are followed, its make-up is thoroughly original. Several routes and trips are printed in this issue.

A special meeting of the Franklin Relief Association, which is conducted by members of Baltimore Typographical Union No. 12, was held on Sunday, May 20, at Claggett's hall, North Fremont avenue. On recommendation of the board of governors, Emil Goutrain had, at the previous meeting, been appointed secretary-treasurer pro tem of the association on account of the resignation of John H. Sherwood. At the meeting on Sunday Mr. Goutrain was continued in that position until the next annual election, a year hence. The revision of the by-laws was taken up at the meeting. The attendance was very good and in some respects resembled a union meeting. The association authorized the trustees to purchase $1,000 worth of liberty bonds. A movement to reduce the secretary's salary from $200 to $100 was unanimously voted down, the members of the association being of the opinion that instead of decreasing they should uphold good wages. Frank Downes, of the American, was elected president and Maurice K. Stokes, of the Fleet-McGinley Company, was elected vice-president.

The Baltimore American is the oldest daily newspaper in the United States. Charles Hawthorne has the honor of being the foreman of this noted paper. Mr. Hawthorne practically grew up with the paper. The writer worked on the American with Mr. Hawthorne when he was setting type in the old days, and "Charley" was picking them up pretty fast in those days, too. At that time Sam Wheeler was the foreman, and I doubt whether "Charley" ever gave a thought that he would one day be foreman of the paper. He has held the position for a number of years and in addition has control of the Evening Star, which is published by the same management. Mr. Hawthorne is a thorough "mixer" and very democratic in his manner, but he requires work when work is to be done, and he gets it from every one of his employes. He has always been a member of the union and knows every law of the local and International from A to Z, and it would be a very hard matter to get him puzzled on this point. Visitors to the Baltimore convention will recall him, as he "mixed" with every one who was here. He takes a great interest in visitors to the composing room of the American, and every one is assured of a hearty welcome by him. WALTER H. MULES.

ST. LOUIS DELEGATES' SPECIAL.

A large and enthusiastic delegation of St. Louis printers is preparing to attend the sixty-third session of the International Typographical Union, to be held in Colorado Springs August 13 to 18 next. The St. Louis party will travel on a handsome special train—will be, in fact, the first section of the Missouri Pacific's famous Scenic Limited—and we, the undersigned, extend a very cordial invitation to delegates and friends from all points outside of St. Louis, who can conveniently do so, to join this train. It will leave St. Louis at 9 A. M., Friday, August 10, and will arrive in Colorado Springs at 1:50 P. M., Saturday the 11th.

The Missouri Pacific is, without question, the most picturesque route between the Mississippi river and the Rocky mountains. Its trains pass through the most attractive suburbs of this great city and follow for more than one hundred miles along the banks of the beautiful Meramec and the grand old Missouri rivers, with the shimmering waters on the one side and the beautiful foothills of the Ozark mountains on the other. Passing through Jefferson City, the capital of Missouri, the train leaves the river side and emerges from the foothills out upon the beautiful rolling prairies of western Missouri, where the eye is greeted by one of the richest agricultural and stock farming sections of the middle west. Kansas City is reached in the late afternoon. During the night the fine, fertile fields of eastern Kansas give way to the great irrigated sections of western Kansas and eastern Colorado. The air grows cooler and dryer, the clouds have been left behind and the sun has a new brightness.

And then across the west there rises an amethyst wall, with a crown of pure white, the Rocky mountains. Across the dry plains come the waters from those same snows, flowing down the slope to meet the train many miles east of the mountains. Here is the miracle of irrigation. The train rolls on through fields greener than those left behind. No longer are there any long stretches of dry and dusty plains to cross. The Missouri Pacific, at least, is lined with cities, towns and cultivated fields practically without interruption to the very foothills of the Rockies.

From out the green fields and groves the train rolls into Pueblo, a great smoking, humming beehive of industry. The traveler realizes there is not only a cool Colorado and a beautiful Colorado, but there is also a busy Colorado.

From Pueblo the train turns north and in less than two hours, riding in full view of the great Rocky range, Colorado Springs and the famous Pikes Peak region is reached. No attempt will be made to describe that region here. It must be seen to be appreciated—the one place from which a more comprehensive view of the great state of Colorado may be gained than from any other point.

The Missouri Pacific will provide a fast, all-steel train that includes all that is best in railroad service—luxurious sleeping-car accommodations, the perfection of dining-car service and special attendance for the comfort and pleasure of the delegates and friends. The train equipment will include a dining-car and there will be no necessity for stopping for meals. The undersigned committee has already provided for entertainment en route that will add immeasurably to the pleasure of the trip.

The Missouri Pacific was the first railroad under construction west of the Mississippi. Work began July 4, 1851, and this great railroad, managed from St. Louis, is in a position to give the delegates and friends the highest class service and scenery on their trip to Colorado Springs next August.

For further information or reservations on the St. Louis special, address the undersigned. J. A. Remmert, E. J. Schuster Printing Company, 21 South Ninth street, delegate; F. J. Ryan, E. J. Schuster Printing Company, 21 South Ninth street, delegate; C. M. Wilson, delegate; Missouri Pacific Railroad Company, 318 North Broadway, St. Louis, Mo.

HAMILTON, ONT.

ALBANY IN 1919!

The convention they strive for is still far away,
But preparedness always is half of the fray;
They enter the fight with the right kind of dope—
Here's hoping they will with the honor elope.

There can be no doubt they have claims big and just,
To boost their proposal all fair-thinkers must;
It gives me great pleasure and likewise some mirth
To tout for the place of the I. T. U.'s birth!

To use a little theatrical parlance, the advance agents have completed their work, the chief booking offices have ratified the contract, the stage has been carefully reset, and "The Fourth Estate," with real, honest-to-goodness, trained-to-the-part, duly-indentured actors, has started on what some impresarios declare to be one of the longest runs on record—five years and two months. In the meantime, the actors are playing matinee performances only, but necessary provision has been made in the event of later performances being desired; for, be it known, though Hamilton boasts of a population of over 100,000, a morning newspaper has never been a paying proposition here. Expressions of satisfaction are general over the increase received, but if the necessaries of life keep on soaring at the alarming pace set during the past two years, some may experience difficulty saving enough for car fare before the final curtain drops. Withal, it must be admitted that these are times of prosperity—yes, and extravagance. Never before were factory employes working at such high tension or drawing such enormous wages; thousands of men who two years ago knew absolutely nothing about the work they are now doing are drawing money which makes the wage of the skilled mechanic look like a mere pittance. This class of people are spending money just as lavishly as they make it, and they are ready to meet any price demanded by the butcher, the baker or buzz-wagon maker.

Consequently, merchants are reaping unheard-of profits on not only necessaries but also luxuries; the box-office receipts at theaters are breaking all previous records; motorcycle and automobile manufacturers can scarcely keep up with their orders; farmers are getting prices for their produce beyond the dreams of avarice; coal barons never before found it possible to exact spot cash from their customers for the winter's supply of coal. Yes, notwithstanding the awful war in which the nation is so deeply involved, Canadians are living in an era of unprecedented prosperity—and lamentable extravagance on the part of a great many.

On the well-founded contention that patriotism and production go hand-in-hand, many local typos are negotiating with Mother Earth for bountiful crops of potatoes, beans, peas and things like that. Some of the budding agriculturists are so optimistic about the harvest they will reap that they are discussing whether it would be advisable to arrange for market or cold-storage privileges.

It is reported that the Spectator has closed a contract for nine new model 18 linotypes to replace those in its battery that have about reached the end of their usefulness—at least so far as this progressive office is concerned.

As an incentive to the apprentices attending the printing department classes at the technical school, Instructor Atkinson has made arrangements with the publishers for cash prizes, which will be awarded to the apprentices showing the greatest proficiency at the end of the term. R. J. Ross.

NEWPORT, R. I.

Newport Union No. 295 is in the midst of a military camp, besides the regular army force at Forts Adams, Grebel and Wetherell, guarding the approaches to the bay. We have 4,000 United States naval reserves, same being quartered at the state armory, others scattered in all sections of the city; 6,000 apprentice seamen constitute the force at the United States naval training station. Twenty four large barracks are near completion to accommodate part of this force, while forty-eight and possibly more barracks have been started to house the 10,000 bluejackets which Uncle Sam is taking care of here.

All of the members of No. 295 have registered, signifying their willingness to fight for the Stars and Stripes if necessary. Four of our members have registered under the 31-year clause, and are subject to military duty at any time, while others are slowly but surely approaching the 50-year age, which was the limit set for the state military census taken recently.

At the outbreak of the war with Germany, Joseph J. O'Neill enlisted in the Newport naval reserves, and the company he was assigned to was stationed for some time at Commonwealth Pier, Boston, Mass. "Joe" was an apprentice on the Morning Herald, and was about to become a member of No. 295 when the spirit of '76 called him for duty. Many of the men who have been stationed at Commonwealth Pier have recently been transferred to ships, and "Joe," with his brother and other shipmates, are now doing duty "somewhere on the ocean."

The United States naval reserve force, 4,000 strong, stationed here, is comprised mostly of college students from all sections of the United States. They have decided to issue a weekly newspaper, the first issue to appear Wednesday, June 20. The work is being done under union conditions in the printing office of the Gladding Print.

Stephen J. Buckley, of the Herald, and John Gladding, jr., of the Gladding Print, subscribed for liberty bonds.

The printing business is good here just now.

Colonel Ritchie.

GRAND FORKS, N. D.

Our local union has followed in the spirit of the times and purchased a $100 liberty bond. In addition to this, many of our members have purchased bonds for themselves.

One of our members, Arno Lawrence, linotyper at the Page Printery, has enlisted in the national guard and expects to be called to the front shortly. No. 311 is going to keep up the dues of any of its members that enlist in the army or navy.

The Herald people have recently installed a model 19 and now set all their heads on the linotype. They have also installed a typecaster and are gradually filling their cases with new type. It sure is pleasing to the eye to see some of the old fonts that were there during President Grant's administration disappear in the melting pot and come out in the form of new modern faces.

North Dakota is now, and has been for about a year, in the control of a socialistic organization, known as the Farmers' Non-Partisan League. Many of their measures, socialistic in their nature, have been carried through the state legislature, and a new socialistic state constitution has been proposed, and was nearly passed in the last legislature, whereby state socialism was to be established, under which the state or any political subdivision thereof should have the right "to engage in any occupation or business for public purposes." The object was, in the first instance, to take over to the state all elevator systems, flour mills, "and other things of like nature." The reason I mention this is, that while many union men are opposed to socialism, still the State Federation of Labor of North Dakota endorsed this league and is working hand-in-hand with them. No. 311 has gone on record denouncing their methods and refusing to have anything to do with the league. At a meeting of the league, held in this city recently, the speaker discouraged the farmers in purchasing liberty bonds, and also discouraged enlistments in the army. It seemed to me that this was treason, pure and simple, but the speaker got away with it and is still at large.

Attached is an editorial from the Fargo Forum of June 9, 1917:

Still Out of Jail.

At Williston, N. D., an audience that filled the armory let A. C. Townley, president of the Non-Partisan League, escape arrest after making such remarks as these:

"The flower of the young manhood of this nation is going across the water to bleed, we are told, for the honor of the country, but it needs some effort for me to believe that these young men are going to fight for the freedom of democracy. I believe and fear they are going to bleed for the profits of the damned pirates who profit from our food and products."

And again: "I refuse to urge you farmers to raise a larger crop until you or they wipe out this monstrous wrong, and I will say that unless they are big enough to control the transportation of food and coal for the northwest I can not see a possibility of the United States being successful in this war."

Those words were said in Williston, not in Potsdam.

They were said two days after 10,000,000 men had enrolled for the first selective draft. They were said when good American citizens are straining every nerve to feed, clothe and arm a world in arms against the forces of barbarism.

What matter Belgium, Leige and Louvain?

What matters France?

What matters the Lusitania?

What matters the Sussex? What matters the sinking of hospital ships, the rape of women, scores of ships flying the Stars and Stripes sent to the bottom of the ocean without warning, the hordes of German spies in this country, plots against us in Mexico, the Armenian atrocities, where an entire race was slaughtered with German approval, Zeppelin raids on peaceful cities? They are nothing to Mr. Townley when compared to a few food pirates who take dollars instead of lives. Our harassed government must stop the war on the Hun until the food speculator is in irons, and the league's plans are accomplished.

The Forum hopes that when Mr. Townley comes to Fargo, the members of the Home Defense League, 100 or 150 strong, will march into the hall, stand at attention during his address and give him a chance to repeat those remarks or make others in the same vein. If there isn't a public officer in the state with backbone enough to put the speaker behind the bars, there is enough spirit in the Home Defense League to prevent him repeating the offense.

And this is the party that the state federation of labor has endorsed. I wonder if the true principles of sane unionism is here followed and if our duty as American citizens does not demand of us to condemn a party of this caliber. No. 311 of Grand Forks says it is. THEODORE K. AHBROTH.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

At this writing, our delegate and boosters—headed by President Ballard—are on their way to the annual convention of the New England Typographical Union convention, held in Manchester, N. H. Their mission is twofold, participating in the proceedings of the convention, and to get the 1918 convention for New Haven. Here's hoping, boys, you bring home the bacon.

"To be somewhere in France" has lured away one of our most popular members, namely Mr. Murray. After a few days spent at his home in South Carolina, he will leave for a training camp in the southwestern division. Mr. Murray has seen duty at the border with the Connecticut troops, where, through his leadership, he was promoted to sergeant, so he is well qualified to enter the service of Uncle Sam. Mr. Murray, you take with you the good wishes of No. 47, and we sincerely hope you will serve your country as faithfully as you did the typographical union.

The one flag! the great flag!
The flag for you and me
Glorified, all else beside,
The red and white and blue.

On Thursday evening, June 14, No. 47 held a get-together at the Hotel Volk. Addresses by President Ballard, Secretary Ottarson, F. W. Smith, F. W. Wiggins and T. Roach were greatly appreciated. Six new members were brought into the fold at this occasion, by simply promoting sociability and giving the non-union printers a chance to hear of the great work the International Typographical Union is doing for its members, in a fraternal way. Mr. Roach sang a few "popular" songs, and Martin Kelley told of his experiences in our fair city. Plans are in the works for another get-together in the near future and all the members are cordially invited to attend.

The writer, while strolling through the suburbs of Westville, came upon a garden planted by one of our members, and it looked to me to be full of wrong fonts.

Work is good for this time of the year. Business in general is booming—so is the H. C. of L. One plant is employing 21,000 men—not printing—ammunition.

Members of No. 47, as a rule, are good fishermen, and every Sunday a number are seen at the different shore resorts trying their luck. As far as the writer knows, all Bert Chapman ever got was a headache.

The organization committee is planning for an outing shortly, and we hope the boys will support such a movement. WILLIAM F. DALQUIST.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Located just on the outskirts of "Little Italy" and the wholesale district, is found the Phoenix Printing Company, a rapidly growing printing concern. Moving into a three-story re-enforced concrete building a year ago, it is now adding two stories thereto. The company maintains a branch in Woodbury, N. J., under the direction of "Jack" Sawyer and has four men constantly on the road. Their product is known from coast to coast and a large number of orders are received by mail. The equipment is modern in every respect, all departments are unionized and the watchword is courtesy.

The standing of No. 23 in the organized labor movement of Milwaukee is very high, as will be seen in the election of President Blakely by the federated trades council to represent it at the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor convention at Ashland, and the election of Walter S. Fisher to visit all the Milwaukee unions in the interest of Labor day. William Westerman, delegate to San Francisco, has been appointed a member of the newly-created county civil service board.

At the annual meeting of No. 23, June 17, the reports of the officers and committees showed steady progress. The apprentice committee reported ninety-seven examinations having been conducted during the year. At this meeting we took in four apprentices and one journeyman, and one was transferred from apprentice to journeyman roll. The city is being well organized and practically all eligible apprentices are members.

No. 23 will again demonstrate its loyalty to the organized labor movement by parading on Labor day.

Secretary-Treasurer [illegible] has been granted a week's vacation, with pay, by courtesy of the union.

Arrivals recently: B. A. Johnson, A. F. Shafranski, F. A. Fielitz, Elmer Weaver, William Mannerstrom, Phil McCarthy, C. C. Schuster, Charles Holesovsky, Leon E. Derr. Departures: H. G. Kindy, Charles C. Schuster, John F. Louthain, F. A. Fielitz, George Ryan, George Wamser, A. F. Shafranski.

Ex-President R. L. Thacker and John P. Keating will represent us at Colorado Springs. Other election results will be found under heading of election of officers.

Charles E. Fetter, age 73 years, old age pensioner, died June 10, and the remains were sent to Findlay, Ohio, for burial.

Charles Hubbard performed his annual duty of installing the newly-elected officers and delegates, and Fred W. Stearns continued his annual custom of presenting a gavel to the new president. A rising vote of thanks was tendered to ex-President Thacker for his untiring zeal during the last three years.

Frank X. Meyer is back on the farm. Charles C. Williams, Journal foreman, and Arthur Wiese are on the sick list.

The Milwaukee Journal has installed ten new model K linotypes.

No. 23 passed unanimously the recommendation of the joint arbitration board to enter into agreements protecting situations of those enlisting or called for service. GEORGE W. RAPPS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

We pick up THE JOURNAL month after month and look in vain for a Columbus letter. So here goes! And in the future if any members have any notes which may be of interest, telephone Bell, North 1304, and they will be taken care of.

Fred E. Gorslene will wield the gavel for No. 5 for the ensuing year, having been elected president at the recent election. He will have the confidence and support of the entire membership. He served as chairman on both the recent job and newspaper scale committees.

W. E. Wilson, our retiring president, will represent Columbus Union at the Colorado Springs convention.

The following is taken from the New York Call, and I think it is so good that it is deserving of further publicity:

A scab is to his trade what a traitor is to his country, and though both may be useful in troublesome times they are detested by all when peace returns, so when help is needed the scab is the last to contribute assistance, and the first to grasp the benefit he never labored to secure. He cares only for himself; he sees not beyond the extent of a day, and for a monetary approbation he would betray his friends, family and country. In short, he is a traitor on a small scale, who first sells the journeyman and is afterward sold in turn by his employer, until at last he is despised by both and deserted by all. The modern strikebreaker sells his birthright, his country, his wife, his children and his fellow workmen for an unfilled promise from a trust or corporation. Esau was a traitor to himself. Judas Iscariot was a traitor to his God. Benedict Arnold was a traitor to his country. A strikebreaker is a traitor to his country, to his family and to his class. A real man is never a strikebreaker. Be a man!

But, happy to state, not one of the above stripe was developed during the recent controversy between No. 5 and the employing job printers of Columbus. A strike was called February 19 and resulted in 170 job printers walking out, true to the cause of unionism and loyal to a man. The trouble resulted because of the arbitrary attitude taken by the Columbus Union Employing Printers' Association and by the inability to reach a satisfactory agreement with them. A tentative agreement was drawn and signed by all of the job proprietors with the exception of four—the Miller Publishing Company, Champlin Press, New Franklin and Lea-Marr Press, employing in all about thirty-five men. A two-year contract was then presented and signed by all with the exception of these four, calling for $24 and $27 per week for the first year and $25 and $28 for the second year. At this date, the seventeenth week of the strike, the four "slacker" shops are still out—and it is rumored that several of them are on the ragged edge. The original thirty-seven drawing strike benefits has been reduced to from three to seven—some having left for other cities and others being taken care of in the newspaper and job shops. Representative Max Hayes was called and rendered valuable assistance during the trouble. The new newspaper scale calling for a substantial increase was signed up last month also.

Many of our members are putting in their spare time cultivating their "war gardens," and are finding it beneficial to their health as well as helping to conserve the nation's food supply—and, incidentally, conserving a few of their dollars also. Lucky is the man who can help in this manner, as it seems the only recourse as long as the speculation in foodstuffs and life's necessities continue. "Fat" West says he wishes he could raise coal, as about all he can see his way clear to buy at the present cost is the "seed."

A. D. Magbee, of the Dispatch chapel, has published a new patriotic song entitled "The Stars and Stripes for You and I." It is making a big hit throughout the country. He has published a number of songs in recent years, the most popular perhaps being "Give Me An American Girl."

James Wonn, who has been "wintering" in Nashville, Tenn., has returned to this city. He could not remain away from the storage dam fishing haunts.

Albert Squeri, age 26 years, made application for admission to the Union Printers Home at the June meeting. The request was granted and the best wishes of the membership will go with him for a speedy recovery.

Ralph H. Clark, age 27 years, died in this city May 27, of pneumonia. His home was in Williamsport, Pa.

The purchase of liberty bonds to the amount of $1,000 was authorized at the June meeting. Many of our members also invested.

Ralph Richards, who was foreman at the Champlin Press at the time of the strike call, has left for Springfield, Ohio, to accept a position with the Crowell Publishing Company.

Cards received: W. J. Hanhart, James H. Wonn, A. J. Horn, Albert Squeri, Alison Kettle. Cards issued: Roderick S. Burton, Charles R. Cramer, Joseph A. Brothers, James C. Murch, N. J. Hanhart, C. F. Hisey, Ralph Richardson.

CARLETON BERRY.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Election of local officers was the big event of interest to most of our members during the month of May. The races were hard fought, although in good spirit, and the results for several offices were close. Our president, J. O. Ames, was re-elected over his opponent, Clell G. Fowler, by a narrow majority, while Max Traut nosed out in front over J. P. Bagley for secretary-treasurer. The race for delegate was a three-cornered affair, with it possible for only two to win. The candidates competing were Raymond Dierkes, W. R. Hickman and George Johnston, with the first-named two the victors. Dierkes is a young man full of interest for the welfare of the craft, and is a representative of the newspaper branch, working in the Courier-Journal chapel, while Hickman is a seasoned old war-horse of the job shop sector, so that No. 10 should be efficiently represented in August at Colorado Springs. After winning for delegate by the largest majority of any candidate, Dierkes had a good chance to be fouled, as an automobile struck him a few days later and severely bruised him up, putting him in bed for several days.

James Lyons and Joseph Church, members of Louisville Union, have harkened to the call to the colors, the former enlisting in the navy, and the latter in the First Kentucky infantry.

John D. Kane, one of our old-time and much-respected members, has had his youngest son, Robert Morris Kane, enlist in the navy. "Morris," as he is familiarly known here, is a member of the mailers' union, and is well known in Denver and Chicago, working recently in the Chicago Tribune mailroom.

Frank O'Conner, head proofreader on the Courier-Journal, is at St. Anthony's hospital recovering from an operation. He expects to be back at his desk in about a month "catching bulls."

The Union Printers' Bowling League gave an excursion up the Ohio on the steamer Virginia, Monday, June 11. Everything was a success, even to the weather, which latter was a wonder.

I want to call attention particularly to the announcement that this union, No. 10, will give an excursion on the steamer Virginia the night of July 30. Boat leaves foot of Fourth street at 8:15. Every member is asked to attend, if possible, and to co-operate in every way to make this a success and boost our organization.

The Louisville letter would be incomplete without mention of the recent bowling match at Indianapolis between picked teams, representing No. 1 and No. 10, in which the Hoosier boys came out victorious. The Falls City crowd was entertained in regal fashion and left the capital with the highest regard for the manner in which the No. 1 outfit took care of the visitors. We hope for a return match soon.

This union accepted the invitation of the Rev. John G. Stilli to be his and his congregation's guests the last Sunday afternoon in May, to hear an address, "Conscript or Volunteer?" the meeting being held in St. John's Evangelical church, Clay and Market streets. A special program of music and services was prepared. Notwithstanding the wording of the title of the address, the talk did not assume any discussion of military matters, but was based on the pamphlet issued by headquarters, entitled, "The Printers' Fight for Life and Victory," being a reprint of an article by A. M. Simons in Pearson's Magazine for December, 1916. The Rev. Mr. Stilli, with such a good foundation, delivered an address that probably never has had an equal from a pulpit in Louisville. Weather conditions tended to limit the attendance, however, but to those who were unable to be present, I would suggest that they obtain the pamphlet mentioned, especially if they are young members. It will teach them much.

The scale controversy between this union and the newspaper publishers is moving slowly, but perhaps surely. Up to this time the progress has been limited to the selection of the board, and the great obstacle, the fifth member, has been overcome by the appointment, acceptable, of course, to both sides, of Lee Cralle. Mr. Cralle, after much persuasion, has agreed to serve, so that a start, at least, has been made.

No. 10 voted at the May monthly meeting to march in a body in the Labor day parade. We were the first union affiliated with the central labor body to take this step. It is to be hoped that we will be well represented.

Our president, James O. Ames, has been signally honored by the central labor body of this city. "Jim" heads the Labor day committee as general chairman, and will be the "high man" in charge of this year's celebration. The committee consists of sixty members, practically all of whom are "live wires" in the labor movement. Louisville Typographical Union, in appreciation of the placing of its president in such high esteem, was the first union in the city to vote in favor of having a Labor day parade. In keeping with the progress of the labor forward movement, which was launched in January with International Secretary-Treasurer J. W. Hays as the principal speaker (and Mr. Hays was finely banqueted by the Louisville printers), the organized workers of Louisville are going to turn out and make a good showing. We are justly proud of the honor shown our union and "Jim."

Our union, at its June meeting, voted to subscribe for $300 worth of liberty bonds. Several other printing trades, affiliated with the local allied printing trades council, subscribed in amounts of $100 and $200. DANIEL LEETCH.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

On June 6, Samuel Rosenthal, head of the S. Rosenthal Printing Company, the largest union office in Cincinnati, passed away, age 82 years and three months. He was active up to within a month of his death and was seen at the office every morning. He was an employer of the old school who regarded his workmen as his fellows. For many years at the office the stones were cleared on New Year's eve and the old year was sent off to a rollicking tune. After the family of employes grew too unwieldy to handle at the office, Labor day picnics were substituted. Mr. Rosenthal was born in Germany, came to this country in the fifties, served with distinction in the civil war, and then shortly after its close, in partnership with William Mecklenborg, founded the printing establishment which he conducted for so many years. Mr. Rosenthal was himself a member of the German union in his younger days and always retained friendly relations with organized labor. He is succeeded by his son Henry, whom the delegates to the Los Angeles convention will recall as the spokesman of the Printers' League.

Scranton, the greatest city of its size on earth, will be the ideal place for the 1918 convention.

Thomas J. Donnelly, member of No. 3 and secretary of the Ohio State Federation of Labor, was recently appointed a member of the state war board. Governor Cox is to be congratulated on his selection, as Tom can fit in well on any job he tackles.

Billy Cotter has applied for admission to the Union Printers Home. Symptoms of tuberculosis became apparent recently, and with a few months' treatment at the Home his many friends hope for his early recovery.

H. ("Bert") Meehan passed away May 28. He suffered for some time from tuberculosis. Mr. Meehan worked in nearly all the large cities of the country and was well known among the traveling printers.

H. S. Warfel, of Richmond, Ind., stopped off in this city on his way to Chattanooga, where he has accepted a position on the Chattanooga Times. He visited the Typo club between trains.

Charley Scheiman, president of the Typo club of Indianapolis, came over to Cincinnati to see

Digitized by Google

Latonia open its spring season. As is usual among typos, Scheiman picked a couple of goats that ran last or thereabouts. He had quite a good time at the Typo club with his numerous friends here.

The handsome majority given the closed shop agreement with the United Typothetæ speaks well for the saneness and progressiveness of our membership.

Representative Campbell stopped off here between trains on his way south after a business trip to headquarters in Indianapolis. He was chaperoned by Johnny Dugan.

Seven young members of No. 3 are going into the army and navy. Recently the Commercial Tribune chapel presented wrist watches to Oscar Weber, Harold Feare, Arthur Haumesser and Stanley Mathews to time the Germans they will start on the run when they arrive in France.

Forty-eight men were named by Gov. James E. Cox in this city to select the men in Cincinnati and Hamilton county who will be drafted. Among them was Johnny Dugan, who will serve on the draft board in the eighth district, which has the second largest registration of eligible men in this county.

Mass meetings are being held monthly by different organizations affiliated with the allied printing trades council with excellent results in getting members into the union of the different crafts.

JAMES W. DOUGHERTY, SR.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Hon. Sidney Anderson, member of congress from Minnesota, was the orator at the Memorial day exercises of the government printing office chorus, and a special feature was a solo by Paul Bleyden, tenor of the choir at St. John's Episcopal church.

Capt. Charles M. Robinson and his good wife celebrated their golden wedding on June 4. Mr. Robinson will have been a member of Columbia Union fifty years next month, and has served the organization in every capacity—secretary, president and minor offices—and was a delegate to the Montreal convention in 1873. He was the foreman of the proofroom of the government printing office for many years. He served during the civil war as a member of Gen. Lew Wallace's Indiana volunteer regiment, and enjoyed the intimate friendship of the famous author of "Ben Hur" through life.

Typographical visitors to Washington desiring a good place to stop will find the Senate hotel, just across the plaza of the front entrance to the Terminal, an ideal place and the proprietor a member of Columbia Union. Guy McCord built this house according to his own ideas, everything is brand new and up to date, all rooms are outside rooms, and the location is first-class from every standpoint.

George P. Nichols is now a grandfather, a son having been born on May 11 to Dr. and Mrs. Furmadge King Nichols at Fort Howard, Md.

Charley Graff is reported to have cleaned up quite a goodly sum recently in steel, and is likely to show up at Colorado Springs and renew old acquaintances among his former craftsmen.

Sam Hinwood, who has been an employe of the government printing office of Porto Rico for several years, is spending a three-months' vacation in Washington. He says the climate down there agrees with him, the job is a congenial one, and he looks like a four-time winner.

Bob Miles, well known all through the south as a consistent worker in the cause of unionism, has been selected as chairman of the label campaign committee of Columbia Union, and will find a good field here for some real union activity.

In the hysteria caused by the war, it will be well for organized labor to be on the lookout for the violations of the labor laws on the slightest pretense on the plea of "emergency." There may be emergencies that warrant working people time and a half, and even double time, for a short period, but there should be an effort made at least to work three shifts where plants are operated twenty-four hours a day, and there can doubtless be sufficient help recruited to this in most large establishments, both government and private.

Columbia Typographical Union has ordered Treasurer Jerome V. Johnson to take out on the liberty loan to the extent of $2,000 as a starter.

John B. Dickman, who has been about as useful a member of the Knights of Pythias as he has of the typographical union—and that is saying a whole lot—was recently presented with a very valuable past chancellor's medal, made of gold and set with diamonds.

James E. Brister, who has been sojourning at the Union Printers Home for several months, renewed old friendships about Washington for several days and returned to his former habitat down about Norfolk and Richmond.

The Haskell Institute, for the training of Indian youths, located at Lawrence, Kan., the printing department superintended by William C. Beddow, formerly hereof, turns out some very creditable specimens of printing, the presswork being especially good.

The army has taken from the printing office several good men, none of whom will be more regretted than Dr. William H. Manning, and none who is more apt to be of great service in his new field of endeavor. He organized the medical and sanitary division of the government printing office, and has been complimented by the highest authorities for the ability with which it was managed. He graduated at medicine while working as a printer in the office, and has made good in every capacity.

Col. Marion B. Richmond was one of the happiest of the old boys who wore the gray during the recent encampment of the confederate veterans with a host of his former Texas comrades to entertain.

William A. Anglin is putting up a building at Hyattsville to house his printing plant, although the politicians of that town have been against his methods in his Spotlight in showing up some of the mismanagement in municipal affairs, his success proving that the people are with a man who is on the level.

With four boys already in the service, Mrs. James H. Furbershaw is doing her part for the government. Her husband was a soldier in the civil war, for many years an employe of the government printing office, and a delegate from Washington to the New York convention in 1885. One of the sons, a member of Columbia, contracted the disease which cost his life in the Spanish-American war.

Marsh A. Bodenhamer was elected president of Columbia Union at the recent election by one of the largest majorities ever given a candidate, and Frank D. Seiffert was equally successful in his effort to succeed himself as vice-president. George G. Seibold for secretary and Jerome V. Johnson for treasurer had no opposition, both having proved so efficient that the membership give little encouragement to any desiring to oppose them. The proof division of the government printing office rather hogged things in the delegate race, all three of the successful candidates—Leroy D. Brandon, Walter A. Kinsolving and Albert W. Bowen—being members of that chapel, and a fourth from the same chapel getting a high vote. Charley Deming, of the Washington Herald, made a runaway race of it for the honor of being the downtown candidate, leading his opponent by a vote of nearly three to one. The campaign was an exceptionally clean one, and the new administration will size up as a good one all around, Marsh Bodenhamer being looked upon as especially well equipped to fill the presidential chair.

GEORGE M. RAMSEY.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

At the June meeting Typographical Union No. 7 authorized the officials of the union to invest $2,000 in liberty bonds.

The May election was the most peaceful and quiet affair of any election ever held here for years. Six hundred and thirty-six votes were cast.

George R. Dabney, of the Dispatch chapel, where he has been working for the past forty-seven years, decided that he had served his apprenticeship (?) and that he needed a deserved rest from the atmosphere of a composing room. George left last month for Indianapolis, Ind., where he expects to make his future home with his son, who is engaged in a lucrative business in that city. "Dab" had a host of friends among the members of the union who regret that he has gone from among us. He said he intended to hold his membership in No. 7 as long as he lived.

CHARLES Q. LAFFERTY.

ALBANY, N. Y.

The annual election of officers and delegates for different local bodies and the International Typographical convention, held at German hall, Wednesday afternoon, May 23, proved to be a very spirited one. With a total of 507 names entitled to vote on the printed voting list, 464 voted, making a new high record in vote casting by this old union. All of the major offices to be filled were contested. The result, after a canvass was made of the vote cast, showed that the administration forces were lacking in a few exceptions, the opposition candidate, John H. McCann, being elected president over Richard J. Daly by a vote of 281 to 181; John J. Hart was made vice-president by a vote of 229 to 226 for Thomas E. Walsh. The contest between these two was very close and the canvass of the first 350 ballots gave Walsh a lead of about forty votes, but the balance wiped this lead out and passed him in the last dozen with a lead of three. Financial Secretary MacFarland was re-elected by a vote of 302 to 159 for his opponent, Treasurer Pedlow; also Recording Secretary Rich retains his position by a vote of 249 to 208 for August C. Meyer. The contest for treasurer was between two new men, William H. Floody, representing the administration, getting 204 votes to 245 for Andrew J. Donovan, his opponent for the job. The real interest, however, as always, centered in the International Typographical Union delegateship, for which there were four candidates, with two to be chosen. President Rifenberick and Vice-President Greed represented the administration end of the game, while Martin A. Cox and John H. Menuel formed the opposing forces. Cox and President Rifenberick won with votes of 269 and 262, respectively, with 229 votes cast for Vice-President Greed and 36 for Menuel.

The printers of Albany made a tremendous response to the government's liberty loan appeal. The employes of the J. B. Lyon Company subscribed to the amount of $24,000, the bookroom alone taking $9,000. The firm subscribed for $50,000. At the June meeting the members of the union voted unanimously to invest $1,000. President Rifenberick will buy the bonds from moneys in the union treasury. The union also aided the campaign for the Hiker monument by unanimously pledging $10 to the fund.

The baseball team, representing the J. B. Lyon Company, is leading the Commercial League, having won six and lost none. Eddie Nestor, Thomas Dunn and Henry Chamberland are playing classy ball, their heavy hitting being a long way responsible in keeping the team in the lead.

James Wall and Dan Broderick are on the sick list.

A unique withdrawal card was received the past month by Secretary MacFarland from C. A. Maar, issued by Brooklyn Typographical Union No. 98, dated September 25, 1886. It is in a fair state of preservation.

R. H. PARMELEE.

NEW ENGLAND TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.

When this letter is published the eighth annual convention of the New England Typographical Union will be over. The past fiscal year was a very successful one from many points of view. As we now start another year let us all strive to surpass all previous records. Your delegates have returned home and many of them will have made reports to their locals before the publication of this letter. In the past we have found that many of our delegates feel that they have performed all that was or is required of them by simply rendering a report of the doings of the convention. Many recommendations are made each year, and if carried out would tend to lessen the burdens of many of our active members and at the same time improve conditions materially. You should remember that the more activity you show locally, the more of an inspiration it is for those who would like to become workers, but are a little timid. Make the young man who becomes a member feel that he is welcome in our ranks; induce him to attend the meetings; appoint him on committees with older members; encourage him in his undertakings, and it will not be long before it will be possible to place upon his shoulders much of the responsibility that is now assumed by men who have been long in the service of the union and who feel that as the years are creeping on, they should relinquish some of the heavy work that is necessary to keep any organization going.

Lynn Union held its annual memorial exercises on Wednesday evening, May 23. In the absence of Representative Brady, President Cahill, of the New England Typographical Union, was the orator of the evening.

The Heminway Press, of Waterbury, has given its employes another voluntary increase of $1 per week.

New London Union held its annual outing in Leverone's grove on Sunday, June 10.

For the first time in twelve years the Master Printers' Association of Rhode Island and Providence Typographical Union met in conference. While both organizations could not arrive at a signed agreement that would be satisfactory to both parties, the former organization agreed to raise the minimum wage. An increase of $1 per week went into effect June 4 and another is to be granted January 1, 1918. A new agreement has been signed with the union shop employers of Providence which grants an increase of $1 per week. The new agreement is to run until January 1, 1918.

Providence Union celebrated its sixtieth anniversary on Wednesday afternoon and evening, June 27, with a banquet at the Narragansett hotel. Providence now has the largest membership in its history.

Representative Dallas is engaged in organization work in Maine. At present he is devoting his attention to Bangor, where there are a large number of printers employed more than eight hours per day at very low wages.

The employment bureau has been exceptionally busy during the past month. There have been a number of vacancies in various parts of the district. The calling out of the troops has caused many of our locals to look about for available men to take the places of members now serving, and who might later be drafted. The demand is for operators—both monotype and linotype—and good jobbers can be placed permanently.

At the annual meeting of the Maine Federation of Labor, held in Bath last month, it was voted to publish a labor paper, and Edward S. Alden, editor of the Holyoke Artisan, was appointed editor-in-chief.

JOHN F. MURPHY.

Providence, R. I.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Quite the most successful, and without doubt the most enjoyable, event in the social life of San Francisco printers was consummated at the entertainment and ball given by the Union Printers' Mutual Aid Society in the auditorium at the Labor Temple on Tuesday evening, May 22, in honor of the organization's thirtieth anniversary. The large hall was filled to capacity and the evening's entertainment, which began with the grand march, proceeded with an evenness and attention to detail that proved the ability of the committee in charge. Mr. and Mrs. Rainey represented Mayor and Mrs. Rolph, who were absent from the city attending the celebration at Chico, Cal. Interspersed with the dancing were numbers rendered by the best professional and amateur talent in the city. Mrs. P. J. Cotter, accompanied at the piano by her talented daughter, Miss Madeline Cotter, gave full range to her wonderful voice and captured the crowd, as she always does; W. O. A. Trownsell, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Trownsell, accompanied by Miss Loretta Carroll, daughter of William Carroll, sustained his reputation with the violin, and Misses Frances Klem and Gertrude McDonald, Irish dancing girls, were a hit. No little credit is due the committee in charge, largely composed of young members of the society. President Bebergall, Chairman Stopple and Floor Manager William T. Hearst were ably assisted by Harry T. Darr, A. A. Berliner, B. F. Dwyer, Charles E. Cantrell, Charles A. Pirie, E. O. Darr, George M. Hearst, E. A. Eickworth and James P. Olwell. No member of the society did more to bring about the success of the entertainment than P. J. Cotter, who acted as publicity agent. No local function of recent years has received greater publicity. Mr. Cotter received the following telegram from Mayor James Rolph, jr., dated Chico, Cal.: "With very great disappointment I find myself unable to reach home this evening in time to join you and your fellow associates at your thirtieth anniversary ball, to which you cordially and courteously invited me. The train service is such that I can not reach home until tomorrow morning. I present my compliments, congratulations and good wishes to you all and I shall be with you in spirit and have sent word to Mr. Rainey to represent me in person." Many members of the society, residing away from the city, sent letters of regret, including S. H. Jenner, Prescott, Ariz.; H. T. Hammond, Byron, Cal.; "Ned" Belcher, Ripon, Cal., and T. De Nyse, Tucson, Ariz.

The May meeting of the union finished the business on hand and adjourned shortly after 3 o'clock. The officers elected for the ensuing term were duly installed and the committees for the year were appointed by President Tracy, as follows: Apprentice committee, E. H. Bobbitt, C. F. Wolters, D. F. McDevitt, Fritz Schreiber, L. Nordhausen, H. H. Hunt, C. W. Edwards. Membership committee, William Webster, C. E. Cantrell, G. H. Fields, H. J. Ireland, James M. Scott, A. Springer, Richard Wolf. Label committee, Charles S. Ross, Mrs. Craig Leek, E. V. Staley, Eugene Donovan, H. J. Keppler, C. B. Maxwell, F. E. Wilke. Sanitation committee, the president, D. G. Shannon, John G. Higgins, J. M. Speegle, William J. Pierce, W. R. Hickey.

The financial statement submitted by the secretary-treasurer showed a substantial gain for the month, with all obligations met. Three propositions for membership were received from Edward Johnson, Carlyle O. Buckner and Minnie C. Aguilar. The meeting endorsed resolutions, received from the labor council, protesting against taking advantage of present war conditions for the purpose of importing Asiatic laborers. In order that members enlisting during the war period may receive all of the protection afforded by the union, it was urged that those who join the army or navy should deposit their working cards with the secretary-treasurer, giving the regiment or department to which they belong, so that they may be kept in good standing. The records committee filed a report to the effect that the work of that committee had been concluded and that it had collected data bearing on the early organization of printers sufficient to enable the union to compile a complete history should it be determined to do so at any time in the future. The purpose for which the committee was created having been accomplished, it was ordered that the laws be amended to provide for its abolishment. The committee received a rising vote of thanks from the members present for the excellent work it has accomplished.

During May two Australian printers on furlough left San Francisco for Sydney to join their colors. One, Lieut. Ernest Thompson, was subbing on the Bulletin; he had seen service in Egypt. The other was L. L. Nall, whose father is of the firm of Fuerth & Nall, printers and boxmakers, Sydney. Young Nall is a hero of the Dardanelles and was seriously wounded there. When asked about the war, with typical Australian modesty, he replied: "Really, I know little of the war more than as soon as we arrived we were ordered to charge. Some 1,200 of us went in and 502 came out. Oh, yes, we won. I was invalided to Ambros Island, thence home, after which I made this sea voyage for my health, via Vancouver to San Francisco. I'm going home on the Ventura to see if they will accept me again." While in San Francisco Nall was the guest of J. O. Titlow, formerly of Australia, and Mr. Cullen-Ward, of the Examiner editorial staff, himself an Australian, with three brothers at the front and a keen spirit to join them.

Zeferina Torres, one of the "old guard" San Francisco printers, for many years assistant foreman of the Chronicle, left May 19 for his old home in Mexico.

Following out the instructions of the union, President Tracy has appointed a Red Cross committee, composed of a number of ladies affiliated with the organization, and it is the purpose of this committee to conduct an active campaign for members of the Red Cross Society, to be recruited from men and women who make up the membership of the union. The committee drafted a circular letter in which a plea is most eloquently made to all, inviting them to take out a yearly membership in the Red Cross. San Francisco, into the laps of whose citizens the Red Cross in 1906 poured the immense sum of $9,700,000, has particular reasons for gratitude calling for a larger and still larger local membership. If the work of the Red Cross at that time could be told in detail, and if it were possible for many of our members who were stricken and in distress then, to speak and to tell of what was done for them, without the embarrassment attendant upon such publicity, the story would be one of intense interest to our membership of today. The American Red Cross is under government supervision. The president of the United States is its head. Its accounts are audited by the war department at Washington. Many members of the International Typographical Union have already enlisted in this country's service in the unparalleled war now raging: some of them have already paid the total cost of such service, and others will follow as the struggle goes on. For the good name of San Francisco Typographical Union, let it be said that we did our bit, small though it be. It is hoped that every member of the organization will cheerfully respond to this appeal. The ladies composing the committee are as follows: Miss Frances Auld, Miss Katherine P. Bisazza, Mrs. Blanche Blanc, Miss Katherine Brown, Mrs. Sarah Brunner, Mrs. Anastasia D. Carlyle, Miss Goldie Collins, Miss Eva Cook, Miss Dorothy Dennis, Miss Minnie Erickson, Mrs. Sarah F. Foster, Miss Corinna L. Forno, Miss Anna E. Hammond, Mrs. Alice Hawkes-Bernett, Miss Fanny V. Joyce, Miss Lillie P. Kern, Mrs. Craig Bertram Leek, Miss Evelyn Levy, Miss May McKinley, Miss Anna Donovan, Mrs. Lora Gatton, Miss Genevieve Grindley, Mrs. Laura Johnson, Mrs. Louise Lehman, Miss Alice McLean, Miss Salina Seiler, Mrs. Leila Smith, Miss Evelyn Spooner, Miss Elizabeth Terry, Miss Hattie Wolff.

Leo Israelsky, of the Chronicle chapel, who has been on the sick list for several months, is reported improving. Israelsky is at the home of his brother, in Napa, Cal. While unable to move about but little, he is surrounded by all the comforts and good care that can be afforded a sick man, and the rest and quiet of his surroundings have induced a marked improvement in his condition.

Governor Stephens signed the Harris free textbook bill, thus ending the long controversy over that matter. The terms of the law make it permissive that school boards may furnish high school textbooks free, or at a maximum rental of $3 yearly, until 1920, when it becomes mandatory that all school boards shall furnish the books free of charge to the pupils. The permissive clause was inserted in the measure in order that the school districts of the state would not be embarrassed in rearranging their apportionment of school funds, but will be given an opportunity to fix total disbursements to accommodate the changed conditions.

John F. Callaghan, one of No. 21's members residing at the Union Printers Home in Colorado Springs, writes Secretary Michelson that the favorable opinion of the place formed when he went there sixteen months ago, still continues. He expresses the wish that every member of the organization could see the Home and more fully appreciate its many advantages. GEORGE A. TRACY.

PEORIA, ILL.

Edward Kenny won the delegate race for the trip to Colorado Springs, defeating John A. Crawford in a hurricane finish. The count showed 46 for Kenny and 45 for Crawford.

Curtis Bennett has enlisted in the United States marines.

Work is rather quiet here at present.

WALTER S. BUSH.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Endorsement of the present administration was reaffirmed at the annual election of Typographical Union No. 2 when William Young was re-elected for the eleventh consecutive term as president—a remarkable tribute to his popularity and ability. John A. Phillips was also re-elected vice-president, while Jacob Glaser, the Nestor of No. 2, was unopposed for the position of secretary-treasurer. "Uncle Jake" joined Philadelphia union in May, 1858, and was a delegate to the International Typographical Union convention when that body met in this city in centennial year, 1876—nearly two generations ago. Larry McCrossin was given an encore for recording secretary, as was Charles Clouse for sergeant-at-arms. William Hoyer succeeded himself as a member of the finance committee. Warren Marshall was elected trustee for a three-year term. James P. Bowen, William Conway and William H. White were successful as delegates to the convention at Colorado Springs. Henry W. Savage, an ex-president of the local, obligated the officers at the June meeting.

In a vote of more than 700 the book and job arbitration agreement received a majority of 435 at the International election in this city.

As an evidence of its loyalty to the U. S. Government, the local union subscribed to $500 worth of bonds to the liberty loan. Individual subscriptions of members approximated $7,500.

Whatever else might be said about the delegate campaign, it should be recorded that the contest was conducted along orthodox lines, with no infraction of the corrupt practices act. As a fact, the paucity of cigars was commented on.

Regret was expressed at the calling off of the Twin City baseball tournament. And No. 2 had its athletes strictly on edge for the event, too! "Some one is always taking the joy out of life." However, let us be thankful the typographical convention was not postponed.

Reading (Pa.) Union entertained the Eastern District Typographical Union delegates and visitors on Sunday, May 7, in its usual unapproachable style. Those who attended—and there were a dozen from this city—had a fine time, a ride over Mount Neversink being an outstanding feature.

The entertainment committee, of which Luther Mason was the ursus major, is to be congratulated. Harry Sherman, Reading's new contributor to THE JOURNAL, made his debut.

A combined excursion to New York, under the auspices of the allied printing trades council, will be given on Sunday, September 9, tickets for which may be had at the nominal price of $2.50.

Those in the local union who respond to Uncle Sam's "call to the colors," will be exempt from dues and assessments, both local and International.

Louis A. Loth, one of the oldest members of No. 2 and connected with the Public Ledger chapel since 1902, died on June 30 of lobar pneumonia after a short illness, age 56 years. Tom Daly, well-known columnist of the Evening Ledger and friend of the printer, had this to say of Mr. Loth: "Louis is dead. Very likely you never met Louie —Louie Loth. He didn't mingle in society much. He had little time for that sort of thing, because he was obliged to work rather hard, and when his day's stunt was done he was usually tired. But he had a merry heart and he was a nimble punster. The other men in the composing room called him 'Daffydill Louis,' because he perpetrated and perpetuated a line of humor which had vogue several years ago, and he never missed fire when he was called upon to shoot. But we saw another man at work at his linotype machine yesterday. Louis is dead." The funeral services took place Sunday, June 3. Interment was at Mount Peace cemetery. He was carried to his last resting place by six members of the Public Ledger chapel.

DETROIT, MICH.

No. 18, at its last meeting, reached a satisfactory agreement with the local publishers and proprietors of job machine offices. The agreement calls for an increase of 10 per cent over the present wage received, for two years, and an additional 5 per cent increase after that date for a period of eighteen months, when the contract terminates. Proofreaders and bankmen will receive the same hourly wage as operators and floormen.

No. 18 will pay all dues and assessments of members joining the fighting forces of either the United States or Canada, providing they have been in good standing for at least six months prior to joining. This rule also applies to apprentices joining the union, providing they have put in the last six months of their apprenticeship in a union office.

Detroit Typographical Union is now in the best position it has ever enjoyed. All scales are signed up and arbitration agreements are effective in all branches for a period of five years. Our full attention can now be centered upon the instituting of educational measures for journeymen and apprentices that will tend to the upbuilding and betterment of the craft.

Three of our older members have answered the last call in the past month. Frederick Grenier, for thirty-eight years a member of No. 18, died Friday, June 1, at his residence, 716 Canton avenue, following a long extended illness. Mr. Grenier, who was 62 years of age, had been employed continuously in the printing department of Parke, Davis & Co. for nearly twenty years. The funeral was held at the home and was attended by many members of No. 18. Interment took place at Forest Lawn cemetery.

John C. Metcalf suffered a stroke of paralysis on May 26, from which he was unable to rally. Funeral services were held at the home, 308 Twelfth street, on Tuesday, May 29, members of No. 18 acting as pallbearers. Interment was at Woodmere.

J. R. McEwen died at his home, 38 Harrison avenue, Wednesday, June 6, of heart trouble at the age of 72 years. Services were held at the home Saturday, June 9, with members of No. 18 acting as pallbearers. Interment was at Woodmere.

Extensive alterations and improvements are under way in the Journal mechanical departments. A complete rearrangement of the composing room is planned which will mean the installation of considerable new equipment.

The many watering places, amusement parks, boatrides, etc., prove too much of a lure to the printers of Detroit during the hot summer months and suspension of the July and August meetings have been authorized.

Business is slow, with quite a number of situations laid off in both newspaper and job offices.

MISSOURI VALLEY TYPOGRAPHICAL CONFERENCE.

Representative Gadd has organized a union at Dodge City, Kan.

Coffeyville, Kan., printers escaped injury or financial loss in the cyclone which visited that town June 1.

Wichita Union has invested $500 in a liberty bond. Muskogee Union subscribed $300.

Kansas City Union is negotiating a new job scale, with promise of a substantial increase.

Oklahoma City reports a membership of 200 at its last report.

Following are reports on working conditions received up to June 18:

Coffeyville, Kan.—State of trade good. Everybody working. No subs.

Columbia, Mo.—Work slow.

Des Moines, Iowa—State of trade fair, but not so good as last month. Conditions over the state very good for operators and fair for handmen. Quite a number of country situations calling for men.

Hutchinson, Kan.—Work has been very good, with all men working.

Kansas City, Mo.—There is a lull in work at present, and a great many are idle in the book and job branch. Many calls for machine operators from adjacent cities, and it is almost impossible to secure operators for the small towns, although many of them offer $24 per week.

Leavenworth, Kan.—Work fair in newspaper shops, but slow in job offices.

Muskogee, Okla.—State of trade fair.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—Working conditions very good. Last membership report shows 200 members and all working. Work for machine operators has been extra good.

Omaha, Neb.—Trade good, with demand for both hand and machine men.

Parsons, Kan.—State of trade good.

Pittsburg, Kan.—Work generally a little dull.

Springfield, Mo.—State of trade fair. Everybody working.

St. Joseph, Mo.—Work rather dull in the job end and fair on newspapers.

Wichita, Kan.—Work holding up well for the summer months.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

From beneath a beautiful bouquet of flowers, presented by Walter F. McAdams, President Bading called the regular monthly meeting of No. 173 to order Sunday, June 3. After the transaction of some regular business Mrs. Keebaugh, that excellent lady who is doing so much for the boys at the training camps, arrayed in a sailor's costume, made an interesting plea for the young men serving their country and asked that the union purchase tickets for the entertainment, the funds to go toward securing articles for these young men that are not supplied by the government. Fifteen dollars was donated for tickets and Mrs. Keebaugh was presented by President Bading with the bouquet above referred to. In accepting the flowers she assured Mr. Bading that she received the donation for the tickets with thanks, but accepted the flowers in a spirit that would linger long after they had decayed, and as a token of the patriotism of No. 173 she would carry them to her son, who is in a training camp in the east.

John Hodge, president of San Antonio Typographical Union No. 172, was in Dallas during the month, he having come over from Fort Worth, where he attended the meeting of the state federation of labor as delegate. He was accompanied by Mrs. Hodge.

W. L. Hoefgen, editor of the Dispatch, the labor paper of San Antonio, spent a short time here the past month.

Clint Tullis and Fred K. Lamb were the successful candidates for delegates to the Colorado Springs convention, with R. H. McVey and John C. Cole as alternates. Milo Clark, the third candidate in the race, was defeated by a small majority.

The many friends in this city of L. E. Piner were greatly pleased to learn of his election as secretary-treasurer of Chicago Typographical Union.

Clint Tullis and W. M. Reilly represented No. 173 at the Texas Printers' State Council, which met at Austin August 21.

William Moran, editor of the labor paper at El Paso, was a visitor to the city during the month, having come over from Fort Worth, where he attended the convention of the state federation of labor.

Reports from El Paso say that a Dallas printer has invested $3,000 in an automobile. If such is the case it proves that Dallas is not a bad place to work, especially if he saved it from his earnings.

Mr. Kessler, of the Times-Herald, who spent some time in New Mexico for his health, is again at home in this city.

From George Bading, who attended the Texas State Press Association meeting at Galveston last month, we learn that the Intertype Corporation, under C. D. Montgomery, of New Orleans, southwestern manager, Charles Breckon and Mr. Bading, had on exhibit a model A machine with B and C units and side auxiliary magazine which can be attached to any intertype without boring a hole.

The News-Journal Company, for the benefit of the employes, has installed an up-to-date sanitary drinking fountain.

Just before mailing this letter we were informed that the management of the Dallas News-Journal had ordered eight model B intertypes and a model C and two model B intertypes for the Galveston News.

Twenty-one metal feeders have been installed in the News-Journal office.

President Bading, southwestern agent for George E. Lee & Co., Cleveland, Ohio, has sold intertype metal feeders to the following companies during the month: Times-Herald, Dallas; McNitzsky, Denton; Eston-Jarvis Company, San Antonio; John Nichols, Dallas.

Like everything else that Dallas gets interested in, the printers of this city have shown their loyalty to the government by buying thousands of dollars' worth of liberty loan bonds, and every one who was able has at least one bond and a number we know of have from six to a dozen.

At the last meeting of the union a committee consisting of President Bading, Secretary-Treasurer Duckworth, Clint Tullis and W. M. Reilly was appointed to co-operate with the pressmen's union in regard to enforcing the eight-hour ordinance in the matter of municipal printing being given to a nine-hour notorious rat printing office. It is to be hoped that through the allied printing trades council the mayor and commissioners will be shown the error of their way, and that hereafter those who believe in an eight-hour day and sanitary conditions for their workmen will be given city printing.

The Printers' Mutual Benevolent Society, covering the entire city, is now a fact. It starts with about one hundred members, and it is hoped that the organization will grow and be of great service to those who have not provided against sickness or accident.

Several of the young members of No. 173 have been conscripted or volunteered in the service of their country and expect to leave shortly for the training camps. L. K. WELLS.

OTTAWA, CANADA.

The June meeting of No. 102 was a scale meeting, the executive committee at this writing being engaged in the negotiation of a new job agreement, to take effect on July 1. This, apart from installation and initiation ceremonies, formed the chief topic of business.

The union endorsed the application of James B. Stealy for the old age pension. We regret he is not making a good recovery.

Crain Printers, Ltd., having purchased and rebuilt the burned property of the Rolla L. Crain Company, on Spruce street, will shortly occupy it.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Staples received notification of the death in action of their son, A. J. Staples, formerly of the Free Press chapel. Much sympathy is extended to the family in its bereavement, as Jim was one of the popular younger members of No. 102. He was born in Ottawa twenty-five years ago, and learned his trade at the Free Press, where he continued to work. He enlisted with the Seventy-seventh Ottawa battalion, and left for England on June 16, 1916. After reaching there he was transferred to the Forty-seventh regiment, and proceeded to France as a member of the machine gun squad. He had been some nine months on the firing line when he was killed on May 5. He was a member of St. Alban's Anglican church, a young man of unquestionable character, and devoted to his home. Besides his parents, he is survived by two brothers and two sisters, William, Fred, Beatrice and Nellie.

This union suffered the loss of one of the older members in the person of John B. Langlois, who died suddenly on June 3, after an indisposition of about one week. Deceased, who was employed in the linotype department of the printing bureau, was born at Quebec fifty-seven years ago. He had been in the trade about forty years, sixteen years of this being spent in Boston, Chicago, Bay City and other American cities. He returned to work on the Quebec Daily Telegraph, and about ten years ago came to the capital to take a position in the government printing bureau. Seventeen years ago he married Miss Marie Emma Bedard, of Chalesbourg, Que., who survives him. One son was born, who died in infancy. The funeral, which took place on Tuesday morning, June 5, to the Basilica and Notre Dame cemetery, was attended by members of No. 102 in a body. To Mme. Langlois is extended deep sympathy in her bereavement.

"If I fall, thank God it will be that I shall have died doing my duty." The last words of his last letter home form part of the inscription on the tablet erected in St. Matthew's Anglican church to the memory of Sergeant Glenholm Wilson, a courageous young Ottawa boy who led his platoon to victory when his senior officers fell on the memorable morning of November 18. The tablet was unveiled Sunday evening, June 17, before a church crowded with friends come to honor the young soldier, by his grace, Archbishop Hamilton. The inscription on the tablet reads as follows: "In loving memory of Sergeant Glenholm Wilson, Thirty-eighth battalion. Born January 18, 1894; killed in action, November 18, 1916, on the Somme, France, while leading his platoon on to victory after his superior officers had fallen."

The printing bureau annual picnic will be held on the Victoria hotel grounds, at Aylmer, on Saturday, July 21. The location is an ideal one, and it is hoped that every employe will be on hand to boost the outing. A. E. SHEPPARD.

ST. JOSEPH, MO.

No. 40 observed Memorial day on Sunday, May 27, and although the weather was very disagreeable, a good-sized crowd assembled at Labor Temple Hall, where the services were held. Rev. C. M. Chilton, pastor of the First Christian church, delivered the memorial address, and we quote the following from this eminent divine:

We should never forget the debt we owe those who have gone before us; those who have builded the foundation on which our progress is laid; those who have labored ahead of us to prepare the way over which we travel. We should hold them in reverent memory, and should pay them tribute and award them that credit that is their due.

Sylvester Grogg spoke feelingly of the departed members of Typographical Union No. 40, one member of which, U. G. Pierce, had died during the year. Miss Dorothy Nash sang a solo, the Van Sant brothers played a violin solo, accompanied by H. C. Corbett, and the congregation sang "America" and "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

Next month the boys will be packing their suitcases bound for Colorado Springs, and if all go from this "burg" who have signified their intentions, our delegates, Frank Brooks and Albert Rossie, will have a good-sized bodyguard.

Ed ("Pee Wee") James has resigned as operator of the Gazette, and has associated himself with the News-Press.

F. O. Martin sprained his ankle a few weeks ago, and can now be seen hopping along the streets with four legs, and says he is still young as he used to be.

Amos Kiel spent a few weeks last month down on the farm. He promised to send the "bunch" a mess of fish, but he claimed it rained all the time he was off—therefore, no fish.

The proposition we had in the May JOURNAL in reference to putting up 10 cents per capita to take a couple of bands to the silver jubilee, put me in bad, as I have received several letters from other cities saying they had union printers' bands, and that "Big Six" and Oklahoma City were not the only noise-makers in the jurisdiction. Well, let all the bands go, and we will take up the collection at Colorado Springs and divide proceeds equally—fair enough, eh?

Annual picnic—August 4—Chambly Canton—the Pine Groves—the famous fishing grounds of Chambly Basin, the Richelieu river—the Old Fort. Bring along the family and all your friends. Let us beat the 400 mark of last year.

The June meeting passed off quietly, an immense lot of business being transacted. Representative Drury officiated as presiding officer in the installation of the new office-holders for the ensuing term. The amendments to the constitution as submitted by the executive committee were concurred in. The principal item of interest among the amendments was the addition to the local dues, dues having been raised to 55 cents per month, a fraction over 3 cents per week. It was reckoned that with the additional revenue thus secured there would be fewer periodic assessments. The action taken by President Black on joining up with the Ontario Typographical Conference was endorsed, the meeting viewing with favor this action. The office of the secretary-treasurer is in future to be closed at 1 P. M. on Saturdays. The following members were appointed to the label committee: T. J. Carter, E. H. Tilley, E. Gollifer, A. C. Read and R. S. Macdonald. President Black intimated that he had appointed J. C. E. Tardif and Thomas Healey as additional members of the executive committee. Chairman Whitaker gave an interesting report regarding the book and job scale negotiations.

Representative Drury, from Montreal, paid a visit to the Ontario Typographical Conference at London, Ont., and delivered an interesting address.

Albert Alkers, of Ottawa, paid Montreal a short visit, and reports Billie Williams, Tom Coleman, Mills and Jimmy Wilder and Edgar Smith all doing well.

The outing of the Herald Press employes will take the form of a trolley ride and picnic to Bout-de-l'Ile. An excellent program has been arranged.

"Juice" Holmes pulled out for pastures new—the wanderlust is on again. Leo LaGoy has gone back to register for his country and to try for the navy of the Stars and Stripes.

Ted Horwood, now at the Union Printers Home, reports that he is a little better, considering the weather they have had out there, and sends his respects to all the boys in Montreal.

Recruits for the monotype school still come along, the latest being Frank Exley. Instructor Lowe is back on the job, having been sick for over a month.

Dick Carruthers is now chairman of the Herald news chapel.

The championship shield for the intercity championship of the printers' bowling leagues of Ottawa and Montreal has been won by Montreal and now graces the sideboard of President Flawn. Montreal won four games out of six played in Ottawa and Montreal, respectively. The Montreal team was composed of Messrs. Bryant, Brittain, Cote, Carter, Bolduc and Genest. Ottawa intends doing its best to take back the shield next season.

To Jake Hamilton, of the Gazette job chapel, is tendered universal sympathy in the loss of his mother. That chapel, of which Mr. Hamilton is chairman, passed a note of condolence to the family. Mr. O'Brien, of the same chapel, lost his wife, she dying very suddenly on June 14. The sympathy of the membership is extended to Mr. O'Brien in this sudden bereavement.

Lauchie Fraser has enlisted in the Royal Highlanders for overseas service. Joe Mathers, late foremen with B. Plow & Son, has enlisted in the mechanical section of the A. S. C., and is now on his road to "somewhere in France." Leo Coleman, of the Herald Press, has enlisted in a local battery. He is an apprentice and a son of Tom Coleman, now a member of No. 102, and formerly of No. 6. A letter received from Ernie Teague after a long silence shows he has been dodging gas shells over in "Somewhere," and mentions that Jack Letham's brother is in the same company. Charlie Cross is in the machine gun section. Teague in his letter remarks: "I have been up in the reserve and on a few working parties and Fritz made it hot for us once or twice. Once, coming out of the reserve, we were shelled with gas shells, and I had a rough time doing an obstacle race around shell holes and over wire, but I came through all right. This life makes a fellow depend upon himself. We have to invent all sorts of devices to make things comfortable, and it would be great if Fritz did not send over so many souvenirs." The last time the writer saw Teague doing and dodging was in and out of the cars at the last picnic, when he was busy selling bean-guess tickets and carrying the "shell."

Harry Davy, an old member, has paid the supreme sacrifice, dying in the hospital at Rouen, France. He left Montreal in company with Alf Grevatt for the other side and enlisted in a Lancashire battalion.

"Geordie" Allen, of the Canadian Engineers, paid the office a visit, he having returned from the front minus a leg. He is cheerful and looking forward to having a wooden one shortly. Allen was on the list of Toronto Union.

Murdock Gordon, of the Forty-second Royal Highlanders, an apprentice member, has been awarded a medal for bravery and distinguished conduct on the field of battle.

A baseball league for printers is in course of formation.

Trade in the book and job branch is quiet.

JAMES PHILIP.

Jacques-Cartier No. 145.

It is noticeable that our meetings have had fair attendance the past few months. Members seem to realize that in the critical period, owing to the war that is raging all over the world, when we feel the pinch very seriously, we must bind our ranks to be able to face conditions.

Negotiations were opened with the employers of the book and job men for a new contract, which will call for a new scale the first of July. The comparatively low wage in comparison to the extraordinary high cost of living, will, there is no doubt, help to put through a substantial increase, and we trust to the justice and fairness of our employers for a prompt agreement.

President Gauthier has obtained from the monotype school authorities the nomination of a French-English teacher. The French students are very thankful to our president and to the company as well, because they expect to make greater progress with a teacher that will be able to give them explanations in their own language, and it will be all the better for both, the company and the students.

A resolution of condolence was extended to our recording secretary, Joseph St. Hilaire, for the loss of his brother, who died lately, and to Treasurer L. Gadoury, on the occasion of the death of his mother-in-law.

Four initiations were registered last month.

President Black, of No. 176, attending one of our meetings, said in regard to the great gathering of the Ontario typographical unions, in London, Ont., that it would be desirable that the typographical unions of the province of Quebec take steps to be represented in these conferences for the betterment of the locals in general and for good understanding between them. I wish to say that No. 145 is in perfect accord with Mr. Black's sayings, and that we would favor any steps taken in this way.

News has reached here lately that Flight Lieutenant Paquin, son of Horm Paquin, one of our most esteemed members, met with an accident, making a fall of 10,000 feet. Fortunately, the young airman got through with little injury.

ARTHUR LECLAIRE.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The June meeting of the union ratified the job scale negotiated by the scale committee with the employing printers. The scale calls for $19 a week for job men, an increase of $1, and runs until January 1, 1918. This is the first scale which has been negotiated with the employers as a whole since the memorable eight-hour strike in 1908. The success of the present negotiations can be placed at two sources—a hustling scale committee and an interest in and attendance at the meetings of the members working in the job shops. For ten years the interest of the job man in the affairs of the union has been on the lag, and only recently have they taken hold of matters with vim. The attendance now is commendable and if kept up the job branch will rise to its proper sphere in the trade.

No. 33 will hold its sixtieth anniversary banquet at the Narragansett hotel on Wednesday, June 27. It is expected that President Scott will be in attendance, as the banquet is held the day after the New England Typographical Union convention at Manchester, N. H., adjourns, and Mr. Scott is expected to be present at the convention. President Rouse, of New York, has also been sent an invitation, as well as Commissioner Lynch of New York. But one member is now alive who was on the charter issued by the National Union in 1857—Francis Kelly, of Woonsocket. It is expected Mr. Kelly will be present.

There were two ties for delegates to the New England convention which necessitated a special election. William Doran, of the Bulletin, and Charles Brownell were the successful candidates at this election and John W. Butler, of the Bulletin, was the other delegate. President Murphy will represent this union at the Colorado Springs convention.

The Sun Printing Company, located at Pine street for over a dozen years, has dismantled its plant and removed to Newark, N. J., where it is understood it will be consolidated with the International Ticket Company of that city. The manager of the Sun company is an honorary member of Providence Typographical Union. Stephen Ockray, who has been with this firm for many years, will go with the company to Newark.

Business in the Providence newspapers at the present time is good, and while the date on the calendar would indicate the dull season, there still is a large amount of business coming in. About a dozen members of No. 33 will answer the call of Uncle Sam in July, and along with those who may be caught in the draft net will make a large representation of Providence printers in the fighting force of the country. Also, to show their patriotism, a large number of the boys are wearing liberty loan buttons these days. It can be seen by reading THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, and also by noting the action of our members in Providence, that printers and patriotism are synonymous terms.

A proposition to assess the members of No. 33 one-half of 1 per cent of their monthly earnings for non-attendance at union meetings was defeated at the May meeting.

Treasurer Dennis Hurley has the sympathy of the members on the death of his father, which occurred June 19. George H. Brown has been made foreman of the Oxford Linotype Company, in place of Arthur Swift, resigned. William W. Saunders has deposited a traveler from Jacksonville and is working on the Evening Bulletin. Elbert E. Porter, of San Francisco, is working on the Evening Bulletin. PERCY J. CANTWELL.

CHICAGO, ILL.

The result of the election, May 23, for officers of No. 16 is as follows:

President, Wayne M. Goodwin, 1,628; John A. Foster, 1,779. Vice-president, Edward A. McGrady, 814; Sam Cann, 1,361; Clyde L. Hall, 1,192. Secretary-treasurer, L. E. Piner, 1,991; Michael Colbert, 1,398. Recording secretary and organizer, John C. Harding, 1,469; William J. Griffin, 1,616; Wesley F. Penrose, 309. Sergeant-at-arms, Pat Salmon, 896; James E. Miles, 2,460. Board of trustees, Gus Bilger, chairman, 2,185; F. A. Evans, 2,349; W. H. Bowne, 2,501; R. L. C. Brown, chairman, 1,898. Executive committee, James H. Olsen, 1,695; Patrick J. Doyle, 1,320; William A. Knight, 1,368; A. D. MacDiarmid, 711; Cliff K. Moorhead, 757; William J. Renwick, 1,114; Edwin Forrest Tefft, 1,599; D. D. Rinehart, 1,857; R. E. F. Macholz, 525; David S. Mitchell, 1,734; John Hartwick, 1,472; James L. Renshaw, 1,067. Delegates to the International Typographical Union, Wallace C. Shields, 1,847; Mark M. J. Mitchell, 1,605; Robert H. Marshall, 1,214; Fred S. Kellogg, 851; Clyde S. Armstrong, 1,075; Clark H. Thompson, 427; Bryant L. Beecher, 1,118; William F. C. Willert, 276; Louis A. Greenlee, 940; Ernie J. Zander, 1,256; George Koop, 1,081; Earl C. Kiser, 1,047. For the arbitration proposition, 917; against the proposition, 2,418. Total vote, 3,452.

President C. G. Carleton goes out of office with clean hands and with the respect of all who know him. During his administration the label has been pushed as never before; the jobmen received a substantial raise, the scale being the best east of Denver, especially in working conditions; the newspaper scale committee brought in a raise of 3 cents an hour for time men with an offer of arbitration for the bonus operators. Owing to an alleged "open-shop" clause this offer was rejected at a union meeting without giving the newspaper men an opportunity to vote on it at referendum. This scale is now before the National Board of Arbitration for adjudication. The finances of the union are in a splendid condition, there having been a considerable saving in the last eleven months, as is shown below:

ELEVEN MONTHS ENDING MAY 31, 1917.

Cash on hand	$9,156 18
Pension fund	16,138 88
Reserve fund	40,247 85
Total		$65,542 91

YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1916.

Cash on hand	$4,706 57
Pension fund	15,481 79
Reserve fund	36,505 31
Total		$56,693 67
Gain for eleven months ending May 31, 1917		$8,849 24

It is unnecessary to say much about Michael Colbert and John C. Harding, for the men who know them best, both in Chicago and throughout the jurisdiction, know that in their years of activity in No. 16 they have contributed a greater share to the upbuilding and prosperity of the organization than any other two men. Mr. Colbert leaves to his successor a thoroughly organized office with a system of bookkeeping that is not equaled in any union in the country and is surpassed by few business concerns.

At the May meeting Lee R. Holly introduced a resolution directing the trustees to invest as much of the union's surplus cash as possible in liberty loan bonds. Pursuant to this resolution the trustees have invested in bonds to the extent of $4,000. These bonds will be sold to the members on the instalment plan. Owing to the change in administration the details have not been worked out yet.

The Monotype club also bought $500 worth of the bonds. The club is in a flourishing condition and has made arrangements to hold its annual outing at Hammond Inn, Hammond, Ind., July 22.

J. L. Baker, who enlisted in Chicago, was rejected at Jefferson Barracks because of bad feet. He is now back in town and reports that C. R. ("Slats") Embick and F. B. ("Whitey") Dorrsbosch are in the printing office at the barracks. All the boys are well and send regards. L. E. King, of the hospital corps, has been transferred to Fort Sheridan, Ill. J. L. Duncan, Clark Murray and Harold H. Thompson are now members of Company B. Eleventh United States infantry, and are in camp at Chickamauga Park, Tenn. William A. Goulding is a member of Company E, Sixty-third United States infantry, stationed at Presidio, San Francisco, Cal. L. V. Calson has joined the First regiment Illinois National Guard, and Harry Hooson, recently graduated from the monotype school, has enlisted in the regular army and is now at Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, Mo.

A municipal printing plant, modeled on the lines of the plant in Boston, is proposed for Chicago. This matter probably will come up before the city council within the next week or two.

Ernie J. Zander, delegate-elect to Colorado Springs, in an effort to boost the endowment fund of the Union Printers Home, is organizing a "dollar club" and soliciting contributions from members of No. 16 to be presented to the Home fund at the 1917 convention. An article by Mr. Zander will be found in the miscellaneous section of this number of THE JOURNAL.

R. H. Marshall, delegate-elect, after three weeks in Alexian Brothers hospital, following an operation, is again at work.

We neglected to mention last month that Superintendent A. B. Adair, of the Daily News, had returned from Excelsior Springs, Mo., where he had been for his health. He is much improved but does not expect to stick very close to the office this summer.

Thomas Carroll, of the Boyce chapel, was called to Cleveland, Ohio, June 6 by the serious illness of his father.

Elmer F. Scott, member of the laws committee at the Baltimore convention and secretary of the Mutual Aid Society, was married June 7 to Miss Irene M. Brewer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Brewer, 2450 Flournoy street. The young couple were in Wisconsin and northern Michigan for their honeymoon. They are now at home at 4639 West End avenue.

The monotype school, under the skilful management of George H. Hansen, is proving a great success. Every class is full and there is a long waiting list.

It is rumored that the Sixteen club, after many vicissitudes, has at last succumbed to the high cost of living.

The Mutual Aid Society on May 1 started a reserve fund. The new rate of dues, 75 cents per month, began in May and the board of directors has authorized that all receipts from fines be placed in the reserve fund. A charge of 5 cents per week is made for delinquency in payment of dues and the receipts from this source vary from $3 to $12 per month, nearly $100 having been collected in one year. There has been a slight falling off in membership because of the increase in dues, but the membership on June 1 was 492, with six applications to be acted on at the June meeting.

For the annual convention of the International Typographical Union and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Union Printers Home, Colorado Springs, Colo., August 13-18, the committee has arranged a special train service from Chicago via the Chicago and Northwestern and Union Pacific railways, stopping at Omaha and Denver for entertainment at these points, leaving Chicago Thursday, August 9, at 10:30 P. M. The trip is under the direction of Harry A. Gross, general agent of the Chicago and Northwestern, and George W. Vaux, general agent of the Union Pacific, both well known to the rank and file of our organization. Their arrangements in the past have been more than satisfactory and this year they will be of the same high character. The train will consist of Pullman standard and tourist sleeping cars, dining car and observation car. Tickets from Chicago to Denver and Colorado Springs good until October 31, with favorable stopover privileges, will cost $32.50. For a slight additional cost the tour can be extended beyond Colorado Springs, including Estes park, Yellowstone park and Pacific coast points. Return from the coast can be made via Portland, Seattle and Vancouver, either via the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Rockies, Northern Pacific or Great Northern railways to Glacier national park or the Oregon Short Line to Yellowstone park. Those desiring to return by the southern route can do so, taking in the Grand Canon and other points of scenic interest. The booklet issued by the committee, and which will give full details, can be secured on request from either Howard H. Hays, manager department of tours, Chicago, Union Pacific and Northwestern line, 148 South Clark street, Chicago, or by addressing Robert H. Marshall, Typographical Union No. 16, room 222 Postal Telegraph building, Chicago.

Henry Dean, age 77 years, died May 21 following a stroke of apoplexy suffered the preceding day at the memorial services of the union. Mr. Dean was born in Norwich, England, in 1841, and there learned the printing trade, being indentured at an early age to a master craftsman. He was initiated into unionism in London fifty-seven years ago, and to the day of his death was an active worker in trade union ranks. He left England for Toronto, Canada, in 1872, and in 1876 came to Chicago. He was in Louisville, Ky., for a short time, but returned to Chicago in the early '80s. Mr. Dean worked on practically every newspaper in Chicago, being employed on the Examiner at the time failing eyesight, some five years ago, compelled him to give up the trade. In 1913 he became a ticket agent for the elevated railway system and, true to his union principles, immediately joined Division 308 of the elevated railway employes' union. He took an active part in the work of that organization and many changes for the better in the working conditions of the ticket agents were brought about through his efforts. He was one of the oldest members of the Old-Time Printers' Association and was a pensioner of the International Typographical Union and of No. 16. The burial was at Forest Home.

Alonzo J. Farmer, age 64 years, died May 17 at Macon, Ga., of heart disease. Accompanied by his wife, he had gone to Macon a short time previous to his death in the hope of improving his health. Mr. Farmer joined Terre Haute (Ind.) Union in 1884 and came to Chicago in 1905. Although a quiet and unassuming man, he was one of the best known members of the union. He was a pensioner at the time of his death. The body was buried at Macon.

Walter D. Considine, age 70 years, died May 29 of diabetes. He joined No. 16 in 1870, but for a number of years was away from Chicago. In 1882 he again took up active work at the trade, being employed on the Tribune. He was a veteran of the civil war and was a local and International pensioner. Burial was at Elmwood.

Henry Lyons, age 51 years, died May 31 of pneumonia. He was a well-known job printer, having been chairman of the Tucker-Kenworthy chapel for a number of years.

Irvin W. Clark, age 58 years, died June 2 of Bright's disease. He was a job printer employed at the Gunthorp-Warren plant.

Clement Stover, age 33 years, died June 7 of pneumonia. He came to Chicago in 1914 from Norfolk, Va., where the body was returned for burial.

Leonard E. Van Zandt, age 46 years, died at Springfield, Ill., June 4, of pneumonia. The body was brought to Chicago for burial at Elmwood.

Frank S. Denny, age 66 years, died June 11 of inflammatory rheumatism on a farm near Muskegon, Mich. He joined St. Louis Union in 1884 and in 1902 deposited an honorable withdrawal card in No. 16. A few months ago he gave up active work and departed for the little piece of land he had leased, to spend his declining days in the enjoyment of his pension. The body was brought to Chicago for burial at Elmwood.

H. A. DAVIDSON.

FITCHBURG, MASS.

Fitchburg is trying out the rebate system to encourage attendance at meetings. It was voted to increase local dues 50 cents a month, with a rebate of 50 cents for attendance.

Floyd McGarrah and Emile Moore, recently balloted on favorably as candidates for membership, have enlisted.

George Smith has bought a Pierce-Arrow.

Everybody is working full time, and some a little more.

The committee on apprentices meets every Monday night, planning a method of taking care of this phase of our work.

It was voted to send a delegate to the Manchester convention. Let's hope that Vermont shows up a little stronger than it has in other years. Then we can truly sing, "Hail, hail, the gang's all here," etc.

There was some misunderstanding regarding my story in the May issue relating to the new scale. It should have stated that the contract may be changed to suit either side, if at least sixty days' notice is given. This can not become effective until January 1, 1919. If neither side takes up the matter again the contract automatically renews itself.

WILLIAM R. BYRNE.

Saturday evening, June 2, the annual dinner of No. 387 was enjoyed by its members and a few invited guests, the "feed" being served at the Hotel Van Cortlandt, West Forty-ninth street, New York, and after partaking of viands most pleasing to the palate, all hands sojourned to the Morosco theater, where Miss Maud Fulton in her big hit, "The Brat," entertained the boys. The affair proved a huge success, every detail being so carefully arranged by Messrs. Ed Freybour, William Mulcahy and Fritz Adams, the entertainment committee, that not a "hitch" occurred to interfere in any way with the pleasure of the evening. Short remarks were had by officers of No. 387, the toastmaster of the evening, Ed Freyborg, and Vice-Chairman Mulcahy, between courses. All spoke in a happy way of the good time being had and expressed hopes of the future success of Mount Vernon printers and for a continuance of the good fellowship among the members. Mingling with the discourses and "courses" a most excellent musical program was furnished by the hotel orchestra, being supplemented with some vocal solos by talented artists. At the conclusion of the theatrical performance the "bunch" visited cabarets and other places on Broadway.

The regular meeting of No. 387 was held Thursday, June 7, at which many matters of routine nature were acted upon, and the reading of one application for membership was heard. President Kirby took occasion at this time to warmly thank the entertainment committee for its work in conducting the annual banquet, and he particularly expressed his appreciation to "Bill" Mulcahy, who handled the arrangements for the hotel and theater, in New York. A committee of three, to be known as a war relief fund committee, comprising Nathan Schiller, chairman, William E. Freybour and H. A. Jansen, was appointed. This committee will formulate plans for raising funds for the relief of local printers in the United States military service. The attendance at our last meeting was not what was expected, but a bigger turnout is looked for at the next.

Walter A. Rockett, an apprentice member, has signed up with the marines.

While talking along military lines, an error occurred in our column in the last JOURNAL, when it was reported that Henry Whyte had joined the navy. The account should have read that Whyte had joined the army. At this writing he is stationed at Fort Slocum, N. Y.

Albany, 1919. JOHN J. GUNTHER.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.

No. 533 decided to "do her bit" at last meeting by resolving to keep all members who enlist or are called to the army or navy in good standing during the war. The union also subscribed for a liberty loan bond. Several members have also subscribed for bonds.

N. J. Baum will represent No. 533 at the Colorado Springs convention.

J. S. Dinkins has resigned as foreman of the Standard Printing Company and is subbing on the Advertiser. William Gibbs was made foreman of the Standard. Homer Britton has taken a machine "sit" on the Advertiser, depositing a Charleston card.

Union meetings are now held the first Sunday afternoon in the month, instead of the forenoon as heretofore, in order to give the Sunday night men a chance to get more rest.

T. E. Fitzgerald and Pearl Craus have gone to Logan, W. Va., and Joe Gentry and George Lane are in Clarksburg.

J. C. York has been made assistant foreman of the Herald-Dispatch, and Bernice Lovins given the same position on the Advertiser.

Business is good. Some work on the hook for a machine operator.

J. L. BOSWELL.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Enlistments within the past month include James L. Quinn, of the Register chapel, who entered the cavalry branch as musician; Carl Mellin, of the Homestead, who entered the navy; and John Linn Carter and Ernest J. Malmberg, apprentice members, who enlisted in the navy. Stuart B. Dickinson, who is in the service, at present stationed at Fort Des Moines, deposited a Chicago card.

Walter M. Evans, of the News chapel, is with a musical organization engaged in Chautauqua work for the summer.

Maurice McDonald and Miss Zaide Dillon were married on May 20 at Lamoni, Iowa.

C. T. Kennedy, of the Register chapel, has been confined to his home for several weeks, afflicted with Bright's disease. Others who have been on the sick list recently, are J. F. Cole and A. H. Dippert. A letter from V. F. Meredith, who is receiving treatment at the Oakdale sanatorium, brings the information that he is steadily improving.

The Typographical Union band led a division in the Memorial day parade, and elicited much favorable comment.

The information that the executive council of the International Typographical Union had invested $50,000 in liberty bonds, was received here with approval. Many of our members subscribed for bonds.

The writer wishes to secure copies of THE JOURNAL of January 1 and February 1, 1896, to complete files. Would like to hear from any member who may have duplicates of those dates.

W. G. WATERS.

PORTLAND, ME.

Meetings of No. 66 are suspended until September. Let us all be on hand then.

Cecil Farrov represented this local at the recent session of the state federation of labor at Bar Harbor.

Henry J. Jones, day foreman of the Argus, was married June 6 to Miss Hattie Edith Sawyer, a popular teacher of the Willard school. The honeymoon was passed at Sebago lake.

Local printers are making numerous onslaughts on the salmon at Sebago lake with varying success. As an instance of the reward which follows persistent effort, it is recorded that Allen Cobb, after several lean years, at last captured a speckled beauty this year. Whether the society of "Jud" Nichols, who accompanied him, was responsible deponent saith not.

President Anderson will take the Portland representation to Manchester in his auto, if present plans are carried out.

Annie Henley has been passing her vacation in Philadelphia, New York and Ashland, N. H.

James M. Ham has deposited his card and is at work for the Lakeside Press. A. GILLIATT.

AUSTIN, TEXAS.

At the last meeting of No. 138 we voted unanimously to buy $200 worth of liberty bonds. Also voted to pay dues of members who enlist or who are drafted into military service.

A summary of the fiscal year's work of our label committee shows a personal campaign to have Austin printing done in Austin, with the label thereon, has resulted in several thousand dollars' worth of local business, and business men in general are asking for the label. The mayor of Austin recently sent the committee a letter stating the label had been ordered placed on all city printing. Herman Naschke and Frank Guinee are the men responsible for this good work.

The many friends of William Ambrose will regret to learn of the death of Mrs. Ambrose, which occurred May 23. Interment was in Oakwood cemetery.

Jeff Gilbert was elected delegate to Colorado Springs and O. F. Olson alternate. Local officers were elected at the same time. Only a few candidates had opposition and the election was quiet.

Charles Shibley has enlisted in the First Texas cavalry, being the first member of No. 138 to enlist. This cavalry will do border patrol duty.

B. M. Saladee was delegate to the state federation of labor, which met at Fort Worth, and brought back an interesting report. He was elected a state vice-president of the federation.

Officers of No. 138 have secured signatures from all employers to an agreement giving men doing military duty their situations upon return.

A. C. WRIGHT.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Every time a printer buys non-union tobacco, cigars, or cigarettes or any article not made by union labor, he employs "rat" labor. Get that?

C. S. Hoyt and E. C. Hicks honored No. 122 with their presence for a week. Representative Pendergast paid us a visit recently.

No. 122 sent the writer on organizing work among the surrounding towns. It is a fine field for work, and I was received very heartily by our country brethren. Allegan, a town with three printing offices and nine printers, is in bad shape. They work fifty-nine hours, and the scale ranges from $12 to $20 per week. We expect Representative Pendergast will organize a local there.

Our members took an active part in the recent city election; "put their man over," and now get a chance to bid on city printing.

"Handsome Mart" Grady was re-elected president of this union. CHARLES W. HUFF.

FORT SMITH, ARK.

Members of No. 249 acted as pallbearers at the funeral of the baby of Lon Thomas, of Tulsa, May 26, which occurred in Fort Smith. Mr. Thomas, being an old member of No. 249, has the sympathy of the entire membership.

A resolution, commending the action of Carl W. Held in the last legislature, of which he was a member, taken on all questions regarding labor, was adopted at the June meeting. Mr. Held is a newswriter member of No. 249.

Organized labor is making an effort to have the new bridge across the Arkansas river, which was voted for recently, constructed by union labor.

Willoughby Jenkins, who has been touring the west for some time, has come back to his first love.

Quite a number of printers registered on June 5, and it looks as though some of them will have a chance to serve their country besides by the liberty bond way.

One new member was received in May, and one application in June. All chapels report business fair.

Cards received: Andrew S. Jackson, John B. Scudder, J. A. Newsome, Charles Hollman, L. P. Howington, Will Dell, W. L. Orr. Issued: Andrew S. Jackson, J. A. Newsome, L. P. Howington, Will Dell. CLEMENT C. CRANDALL.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

The Bridgeport Standard has changed hands, Archibald McNeil, the owner, having sold the paper to George C. Waldo, jr., a prominent citizen and a well-known newspaperman of this city. Mr. Waldo, sr., has long been editor of the Standard, and has always been a stanch friend of No. 252, and his son, the new proprietor, is of the same opinion of unionism as his father. Long may the Standard wave, with the "little joker" as a companion.

Herbert Booth, machinist at the Farmer, is now one of our soldier boys. He is with the state soldiers at Yale. He is getting thin, having lost two inches of girth in one week.

Our delegate to Colorado Springs, John Correll, is preparing for his climb to the Peak. He is already "laying off," and practicing by climbing up Golden Hill.

Superintendent Murray, of the Warner Printery, is back on the job. We are all pleased to see the "old scout" after his long and serious illness.

"Jack" Donahue, operator on the Farmer, is acting as machinist during the absence of "Herb" Booth as a soldier. The only sound heard in the composing room of the Farmer is: "One at a time, boys."

John Clayton, of the Warner Printery, has taken up his summer position as lifeguard at Fairfield Beach. John has quite a record as a life saver, and sports some handsome medals commemorating his heroism on several occasions.

Joe Weinkopt, foreman of the Telegram, has applied for enlistment in the Connecticut hospital corps.

Joe Peck, of the Graphophone chapel, has joined Uncle Sam's force as a stoker in the navy. He has temporarily been quartered aboard one of the late German ships, but will shortly be transferred to one of the battleships. He made a flying visit here a few days ago to see friends, missed his train, overstayed his leave as a consequence, and now writes that he does not like "the brig."

The Post has come out in its new dress, and shows a decided improvement. The columns have been reduced to twelve ems, and another column added, giving increased space for ads and news.

No. 252 will do its share toward furnishing "sorts" for Uncle Sam's big "machines." About ten of our boys have or will enlist, without being conscripted. The boys say they will be a "went," not a "sent." A couple of our English members expect to enlist in the English army.

The two local lodges of machinists are making plans to erect a large block for business and union purposes. A co-operative store will be run in connection with the venture. There are over 5,000 union machinists in our city.

We hope by the time the next JOURNAL comes to us, to learn that "Scranton, the Electric City," will have been chosen as our 1918 convention city. We hereby announce ourselves as going, if we have to "hit the grit" to get there.

ROBERT TARRING.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

The war and what the draft will do to the printing world is the all-absorbing topic, overshadowing everything else at the present time. Those not affected by drafts of any kind are now worrying how they are going to get their summer vacations. The problem is a serious one, too, for notice has been served by the newspaper superintendents that unless subs are put on the jobs there will be no vacations. Springfield needs two or three subs now on both sides, and where they are to come from is a mystery. Springfield has been lucky in requiring none for years past, the apprentices coming along at the right time to take care of the extra work. But with the possible loss by draft in the immediate future that source of supply is indefinite. Three men have served notice on the secretary that they want vacations for two, three and four weeks. Who will help us out?

Charles A. Specht has joined Uncle Sam's family and is now at Commonwealth Pier, Boston, awaiting his ship. Charlie was popular around the Republican machines, and the boys on the floor, with only a few minutes to get together, bought him a couple of boxes of Old Hickorys to take along to his "ship." His ship at the moment of writing is the good ship "Concrete," as it is known down Boston way. A letter received from "Specky" states that he is enjoying the hard work attendant on the unaccustomed drill, and his one regret is that he did not join the navy ten years ago. He says the food is excellent and of good quality and altogether the experience is a wonderful one.

I had occasion to mention the experiences of Leroy Steeley, a member of this union, who has already seen active service, in my notes last month. It appears that Mr. Steeley left in such a hurry that he was unable to fix up his card, which was deposited with "Big Six." He traveled over to England and France with his working card in his kit, and on the way home, after being wounded at the battle of Arras, experienced the now common usage of the sea by being torpedoed. He lost all, his working card being among his extra clothing that is now at the bottom of the Atlantic. His stay abroad was brief and the card ran a few days over the four months. The secretary is in communication with "Big Six" and headquarters in an endeavor to fix up the card.

Frank Woods, erstwhile of the Daily News job print, and now a member of the Second regiment of this state, has received promotion and is now Trumpeter Woods. Step No. 1. We expect he will come back a colonel, or something like that. Of the other members of No. 216 in the service little can be gleaned, but I will endeavor to keep in touch with them, and from time to time will give the readers of these notes any information that is obtainable. Will those who hear from them kindly communicate with the secretary, for what may be common news in one chapel will be of interest to the others.

Quite a good stroke of business was done by the officers in the Red Cross campaign. Appeals had been made by the heads of the movement for support from the local unions. It was pointed out that the printing of the various committees did not bear the union label, and the question was asked how they could consistently ask for support from union men when they patronized non-union shops for their printing. That side of the question had never been presented to them before, and promise was made that it would be remedied immediately. The result was in evidence before the end of the week and our book and job printers are now enjoying the fruits, for some five or six thousand dollars worth of printing had to be given out, and it is to be seen around town with the little emblem on that shows it was done under "right" conditions.

Several changes have taken place in the Westfield chapel the past month. The proprietor of the Valley Echo had been unable to see eye to eye with the union, and it was found necessary to withdraw one of our men who had been allowed to work there with a view to future agreement. Mr. Barrett was the man, and he was transferred to the Journal office, where conditions are such that a man may enjoy his work. Another man left the Echo office and is seeking a union card, and it may be that time will work for us and effect the conditions we were unable to effect by persuasion. Miss Farley, operator in Westfield, has been laid off temporarily pending changes in the plant in which she was working.

Congratulations are to be extended to the officers of the New England Typographical Union on their selection to represent their locals at the big convention at Colorado Springs next month. President Trump will be one of the quartet that represents No. 13 and Secretary Murphy goes as delegate from No. 33. Both are good men and well deserve the honor they have attained. President Dunham, of this union, will thus have as company men he is acquainted with on the long trip. And right here let me congratulate No. 216 on the action it took recently in ordering the payment of expenses of delegates to conventions. Of course, it is International law that all legitimate expenses should be borne by the local sending the delegate, but that law has been honored more in the breach than the observance hitherto, owing to the state of the treasury. With the assurance in the future that a man's expenses will be forthcoming, there should be good competition for the honor of representing the union. A. F. HARDWICK.

LAKE CHARLES, LA.

Out of a membership of about fifteen, three have enlisted for service, while two apprentices have also volunteered. The only paper here—the American-Press—furnished five for active service—two printers and an apprentice—while one from the front office is at an officers' training camp. Not to be outdone, the colored porter enlisted in a negro regiment.

At the last meeting of the union it was voted to put all members enlisting on the active list, and it was also decided to purchase a liberty bond.

On June 17 the entire mechanical force of the American-Press took a motor ride in Jake Smith's boat up the Calcasieu river to Watermelon bay, returning Sunday evening. The piscatorial artists furnished a mess for a Sunday dinner. Although Lake Charles is in dry territory, there is wet country contiguous, with the Texas line but thirty miles away, so we were bountifully supplied with the necessary wet goods.

Besides Jake Smith owning a motor boat, other members have automobiles, while a couple have a houseboat on the banks of the Calcasieu.

ALBERT T. SYKES.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Memorial services were held Sunday, May 27, at the union's lots in Oakland cemetery. A very interesting program was rendered, the principal address being delivered by Hon. Frank H. Dodge, who still holds an active membership in No. 92. Several sacred selections were rendered by a quartet composed of Mrs. W. H. Laubauch, Mrs. J. W. Barnett, W. H. Laubauch and Henry Benner. Short talks were made by President H. A. Knowlton, C. H. McGuire and the writer.

No. 92 recently subscribed for $500 additional stock in the Labor Temple Association, making a total of $1,000 held in that association.

During a city-wide campaign to raise funds to erect a new city hospital, Typographical Union No. 92 subscribed $10 a month for eighteen months toward helping to erect and equip a modern hospital.

W. S. Farmer, of the Eaglebarger chapel, will be Little Rock's representative at Colorado Springs. S. A. Thomas, of the Democrat Printing and Lithographing Company, was elected alternate.

State of trade is unusually good for this time of year in both the news and job branches.

Little Rock has been selected as the site for the concentration camp for the twelfth divisional area, which will add at least 30,000 and possibly 65,000 to our population during the term of the war. The estimated cost of construction is $5,000,000, and the plans call for 1,200 buildings, exclusive of all public facilities work, and will require the services of 5,000 skilled laborers and some 2,000 common laborers to equip same by October 1.

About half the membership of No. 92 made application for liberty loan bonds.

Arrivals: W. H. Voss, F. T. Rayburn, Tom Hartley, Frank Stewart, T. O. Lovendale, Carl Fellows, E. D. Brown. Departures: F. R. Butler, C. A. Showalter, T. O. Lovendale. G. S. LUCAS.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Five journeymen and one apprentice were initiated at the June meeting of No. 53.

Robert McDermott, one of the most prominent members of our union, received the unanimous endorsement at the last meeting for the position of secretary of the Cleveland Federation of Labor. "Bobby" has been a delegate to the central body from the typographical union for the past several years and is amply qualified to fill the office. His many friends are hustling for him and expect to see him land the job. He has earned the respect and confidence of the great bulk of the men in the organized labor movement of this city and would make an ideal person for the transaction of the official business of that body.

The patriotism displayed by the members of Cleveland Typographical Union was clearly illustrated by the employes of the Leader-News chapel in the purchase of liberty bonds. Each side put up its own thermometer for the registration of bonds sold each day during the week and then set out to outdo one another in purchasing the bonds. The Leader boys carried off the honors in a whirlwind finish by having $7,450 in subscriptions credited to them, while the boys on the News succeeded in disposing of $6,800 worth. It was a case of "fever heat" right from the start on both sides, and the red lines that marked the climb of the subscriptions were constantly threatening to burst out at the top. The lists grew so rapidly that new sections had to be added to both thermometers. The original intention was to dispose of $10,000 worth of the bonds. Each day, however, it increased until at the close of the week there were 118 union printers subscribing for a total of $14,250 of liberty bonds. The News crew was under the guidance of Fred Titgemeyer, David Plews, Joseph Belk and Edwin Bennett, while the interests of the Leader boys were looked after by James Reynolds, Walter James, Al Church and John Thompson. The rivalry was keen but good natured, and when the result was announced a cheer went up from the contesting typos that left no doubt as to what they will help do to the kaiser.

On Friday evening, June 22, the technical school conducted by Cleveland Typographical Union No. 53 awarded diplomas to the following students who have completed the course in typography: L. L. Pazourek, Frank P. Doyle, Francis W. Wills, Okiely Kelly, George Wagner, Andrew Groves, Henry Rauschert, George Bilski, Edward E. Wells, Herman Satink, C. A. Parker, Otto Wisotske, Adam DePhillips and Joseph Hockmuth. The school has been very successful since its inception and the students enrolled have been materially assisted in assimilating knowledge through the cooperative efforts developed through class meetings. Collective endeavor is just as essential in the development of good thought along educational lines as it is in the bringing about of better conditions and increased wages for the members of organized labor. Much credit is due the members of the educational committee of No. 53 for the achievements accomplished in this direction, and we are assured that the work will be conducted along lines which are bound to bring success to the students and good results to our organization. Theoretical and technical education is not fully appreciated by the membership at large, but those who avail themselves of this advantage are the ones who eventually fill the jobs paying good money in our trade, while the ones who are indifferent continue to plod along in the same old fashion—receiving the scale and just "getting by."

JAMES J. HOBAN.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

Another election is written into history, and nearly every member seems apparently satisfied. Victor M. Purdy, the new executive, is an aggressive unionist, sincere and capable. All appointive and elective offices are well chosen, and the spirit of co-operation is running strong.

Secretary Spivey was re-elected, enlisting his fourth term as our secretary-treasurer. The "colonel" soon will be in a class with Secretaries Duckworth, of Dallas; Duke, of Kansas City, and Birdsall, of Denver, as concerns the art of perennial victory. Perhaps there is a sort of necromancy here! Out with it! Other office aspirants need it.

According to the bulletins issued by Secretary Rhode, of St. Joseph, work appears flourishing throughout the Missouri valley district. There have been many calls into Oklahoma City for both operators and handmen, other cities giving like reports. The collation of these reports no doubt imposes considerable detail on Mr. Rhode, but assurance is given they are much appreciated.

Conference convention preparations are moving aggressively, and it is enjoined here that each subordinate union be on the lookout for certain bid-welcome literature issuing from our organization. Local unions are urged to take some action favorable to the spirit of these circulars. The first circular is supplicatory. If that doesn't bring results, the next circular will be mandatory—and the next, threatening.

Nearly every member of No. 283 has a liberty bond.

The Oklahoma News (afternoon) has moved into its handsome new building on Grand avenue, near Hudson. It appears there is one drawback, due to the new location: there is no hallowed spot for the noon-day struggles of the horseshoe league.

The Harlow Publishing Company is at work on the largest printing contract ever submitted by the state of Oklahoma. The contract calls for the publishing of volumes 47 to 66 of the supreme court reports, and volumes 13 and 14 of reports of the criminal court of appeals.

Purcell Bros. have purchased the interests of Mr. Foster and others of the New Printing Company and have moved their equipment to a new location on West Second street.

The Tucker brothers—Howard, Dudley and William—all members of No. 283, have formed a stock company known as the Tucker Bros. Amusement Company, the purpose of which is to establish a circuit of theaters over the state, playing nothing but union attractions. To begin with, they have an option on the Overholser theater of this city, the largest and finest playhouse in Oklahoma. Stock in the new corporation may be purchased at the rate of 25 cents a share, a considerable portion of which has already been subscribed by union men. This unique movement is destined to paralyze opposition now arrayed against the triple alliance in Oklahoma City and Tulsa.

From the Oklahoma Federationist it is learned that Joseph S. Armstrong, a long-time member of No. 283, is the new president of Drumright (Okla.) Union No. 740.

Representative W. H. Gadd visited Dodge City, Kan., during the month and was successful in the organization of a new subordinate union of fifteen members.

Ex-President D. K. Stauffer has drawn his traveling card and left the city. He has been a member of No. 283 for the past six years, and into that time has crowded much worthy effort in behalf of the local organization. Don is an affable somebody and we regret his departure.

Delegates to the Colorado Springs convention must not feel abashed to seek acquaintance with our delegate, Mont R. Powell, even if he is one of the really great trade-union evangelists of Oklahoma. He is a right cheerful and approachable cuss, and can be called on to work twenty-eight hours any day for "the cause."

At the time this letter is in preparation, No. 283 has 200 members on the roll—and all working.

Arrivals: S. V. Barnum, Rex D. Jones, John S. Brooks, P. W. Redding, Fred M. Kurk, J. O. Bixey, C. A. Showalter, G. T. Sniggs, H. F. Skillen, A. E. Blackwell, C. C. Clayton, Ed Thayer, Ed Sharpe, W. E. Nicoll, J. W. Utterback, W. R. Quarles. Departures: Myles M. Miller, R. T. Brown, S. V. Barnum, William Muehleiser, W. L. Sourbeer, Fred M. Kurk, G. T. Sniggs, J. O. Bixey, Don K. Stauffer, Ed Thayer, W. R. Quarles. Reinstatements: Giles W. Farris, Graham J. Albright. Obligated: A. A. Meacham, Henry J. Milner, James H. Berry.

Gone is the joy—and almost, the throb of life;
We're living in an age that's kin to every strife;
Gone is the laughter and the song, no more we celebrate,
Since Oklahoma has become an awful bone-dry state.

A. RAYMOND MORRISON.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M.

"Rube" Waddell, of everywhere, has passed up the stick and rule for the rifle and bayonet, and is now showing up on Uncle Sam's slipboard at the New Mexico national guard camp on the mesa east of Albuquerque. He has "begged off" from his military duties long enough to help out the Journal ad force on one or two rush nights. So far as the writer has been able to learn, "Rube" is the only printer in the camp here. He enlisted in the Deming company of the First New Mexico infantry, and came here with them.

Francis Mickey ("Highball") De Crocker made his regular semi-annual visit to Albuquerque during the past month.

Blair Leeds, proofreader on the Morning Journal, made application for membership at the last meeting.

Mert Cole, formerly of Albuquerque, and later of El Paso, has journeyed eastward after a two-weeks' stay on the Journal slipboard.

Tom Hughes, our "politician" member, who is now warden of the state penitentiary, has bought the plant of the defunct La Opinion Publica at this place, moved it to the penitentiary, and is now publishing a weekly newspaper for the inmates of that institution. He has had to stand considerable "kidding" because of the absence of the label, but says "it can't be did" on a prison paper published by convicts, and, anyhow, they only work seven and one-half hours a day. Tom also "called" the writer on a statement made in this correspondence a few months ago to the effect that his card would be deposited in Santa Fe. He says Albuquerque is his home and his card will stay here, and just to show how much they appreciate it, the bunch unanimously elected him to represent this local at Colorado Springs in August.

The Journal has rearranged its entire mechanical department except the preasroom, moving the composing room to the rear end of the building and extending the business offices across the whole front. The force is well pleased with the change.

Fred Kirkpatrick, make-up on the Evening Herald, with Mrs. Kirkpatrick, spent a two-weeks' vacation in Colorado Springs and Denver during June. Harley Wolfe, circulation manager, handled the "humpback" during Fred's absence, and showed the bunch that he hadn't forgotten how.

Myron Douglass, an old Albuquerque boy, who has been working in Flagstaff, Ariz., is now holding down a machine in Santa Ana, Cal., according to letters received by friends here.

Frank Strother, jr., who has been showing on the ad side at the Journal, has left, his ultimate destination being Los Angeles.

Nine members of No. 304 were subject to registration on June 5, all others being past the age limit.

Work—about normal for this time of year.

FRANK H. LOWE.

BROCKTON, MASS.

The International leads the way as usual with a $50,000 subscription. This union spent $200, while the members of No. 224 swelled the liberty loan to $3,550, and perhaps more, which by the way is some showing for the union printers of this district. And when it comes to actual fighting and their country needs them they will come to the front in the same loyal manner.

At the last meeting it was voted that all members called to serve their country would be kept in good standing. A few of our members who are always kicking at the amount of dues they have to pay without receiving any benefit should take notice of this fact and act accordingly.

The campaign that has been conducted for the last few months by the label committee was a complete success. The contest closed June 20, but some similar plan will be inaugurated again in the fall. The committee has been able to trace directly several instances whereby the label now appears on work that never before carried the label. The importance of the union label has been driven home with considerable force to a great many of our local firms.

Now that the hot months are here, do not neglect the union meetings. You will find they are just as interesting in the summer as any other time. The fourth Tuesday in the month—you will find the union is just that much stronger by your presence.

CLIFFORD B. MAIN.

RIDGWAY, PA.

Simon Luchs, formerly president of No. 778, drew a traveling card on June 11.

The eight-hour day has been granted the members of No. 778 and we hope to have the scale signed up soon.

EDWARD W. ECKLAND.

NEWBURGH, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of Typographical Union No. 305 was held Tuesday evening, June 13. An amendment to the by-laws was adopted raising the local dues from 30 cents a month to 50 cents, to be in effect for one year. The object is to replenish the treasury.

To show their patriotism, several members of the News employes' association purchased liberty bonds amounting to over $2,000.

The second annual excursion of the News employes' association took place Sunday, June 10. Its destination was Palisades park and New York city, on the steamer Homer Ramsdell. The threatening weather in the morning kept many who otherwise would have gone from starting on the trip, but several hundred of the association's friends took advantage of the excursion. The day was pleasantly spent. The proceeds will be devoted to the benefit fund. President R. Bentley was the chairman of the committee in charge.

MILTON K. BARRUS.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

"Cardinal" Gibbons, No. 8's resonant-voiced reading clerk, has succeeded himself for the fifth consecutive time, and for the year 1917-1918 the members will hear the "cardinal's" familiar voice as usual at the monthly meetings.

Edward H. Dillman, of the Post-Dispatch chapel, was married April 25 to Miss Emma E. Kratz. Owing to lack of information, the correspondent had Mr. Dillman married on May 2 in the June issue of THE JOURNAL. (Como es este, Eddie?)

The death occurred, on May 19, at the city hospital, of Henry Braunhold, more familiarly known as "Hank" Braunhold, death being due to dropsy. Deceased had been ill for several weeks. The funeral was held on Tuesday, May 22, from Mullen's undertaking rooms to the union's plot in Park Lawn cemetery, President Hertenstein making an address at the undertaking rooms. An aged mother and a brother, the latter a member of Chicago Typographical Union, survive the deceased.

The Southern Women's Magazine, which for four years has been published in Nashville, Tenn., announced that it will move its headquarters to St. Louis. This magazine has a wide circulation in the south and its acquisition for our city is a help to the industry here. The Von Hoffman Press will do the printing.

During the month it was learned that the F. H. Smith Printing Company was doing work for the New Grand Central theater, this printing firm not being listed with this union. The assurance was given that no more work would be given this office and that hereafter the union label would be on all work for this theater.

The firm of Stewart Scott, starting in a strictly presswork business some years ago, has developed into one of the first-class general job printing establishments, at 312-314 Chestnut street. Stewart Scott, jr., is at the head, his father having retired from the active management some time ago. On the first floor are eleven presses, all of the larger type, and one $30,000 web press. The composing room, on the first floor, is presided over by Harry Mason as foreman, and Al Gessel as acting chairman. Jean Horn, proofreader, died in May, of tuberculosis; Charles M. Wilson, late of Woodward & Tiernan's, is his successor. Monotypes are looked after by Arthur Valliant, and the casters by Ben van Der Pluym. George Kimball, compositor, has been confined at home by pneumonia the past four weeks, but is convalescing. Among the employes are Larry O'Reilly, Fred Beck, C. F. Zimmerman (lately of Schuster's chapel) and Mr. Scamell, formerly of Meyerson's. Among the auxiliary features are a Christmas and sick benefit fund.

Harry Folk, of the Globe-Democrat chapel, has joined the United States marine corps and is now stationed at Port Royal, S. C. Vincent De Warf, of the Globe-Democrat chapel, has enlisted in the cavalry branch of the regular army and is stationed at Fort Riley, Kan. Ferdinand Busick, who recently deposited a Tulsa, Okla., traveling card here, has enlisted in the marine corps and is stationed at Port Royal, S. C. John Straghatti, an apprentice of the Globe-Democrat chapel, has enlisted in the naval reserves.

WALTER N. FOSTER.

TRENTON, N. J.

Trenton Union No. 71, at its last meeting, subscribed for $200 worth of liberty bonds. Individual members also subscribed through banks and business houses.

The members of the Gazette and Times chapels donated one-half a day's pay and the proprietors of these papers the other half for each man employed toward the emergency war relief fund, to be used in caring for dependents left behind by those who go into training camps to be prepared for service abroad.

An assessment of one-half of 1 per cent has been levied on the membership for three months to provide for a permanent meeting place for the members, the business agent, the secretaries, and where committees may meet and transact business.

Secretary J. Ewing Leigh was instructed to write to the two United States senators and also to the chairman of the senate finance committee protesting against the proposal in the war revenue bill to increase the postal rates on second-class mail matter, which, if such increase is established, will force many publications out of business and throw many workers in the printing trades out of employment.

President B. A. Wilson was instructed to endeavor to have a supplemental clause attached to our present contracts with the employers protecting situation and priority rights of members enlisting in the service of Uncle Sam.

Edward McCall Dobson (47235), who was convicted of jumping a situation on the Evening Times last month and fined $5, had his card taken up by the secretary of Albany (N. Y.) Union, who will see that he comes across with the fine.

The union made a second donation of $25 to the striking porcelain workers in this city, who have been on strike for twelve weeks. Over two thousand men, women and girls are out. The strike is being led by Warren A. Hannum, president of the central labor union and a member of No. 71.

The delegates to the allied printing trades council, President B. A. Wilson, Leslie A. Conlon and Reuben W. Edwards, are making a special effort to prevent Trenton printing from leaving this city to be done in out-of-town non-union shops, and the co-operation of all the members has been asked and pledged in this endeavor.

Paul O'Leary, a member of the Times chapel, has been selected as a member of the officers' reserve corps and expects to be ordered to Fort Meyer, Va., at any time.

Reuben W. Edwards has been selected as delegate to attend the convention at Colorado Springs. This is Mr. Edwards' third trip as delegate to International conventions.

No. 71 has voted to maintain in good standing during their absence all members of the local union who volunteer for service or are called to the colors under the selective draft law.

LEON G. BASFORD.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Otto M. Fancher, machinist at the state printing office for the past five years, passed away June 14, of tuberculosis, after several weeks' illness, leaving a wife to mourn his departure. He was born in Mankato, Minn., thirty-seven years ago, and had lived on the coast several years, principally in the region of San Francisco. He was a popular member of No. 46, representing this union at the Baltimore convention. The remains were cremated at East Lawn cemetery on Sunday, June 17.

Parley Adams left, accompanied by Mrs. Adams, for a three-months' visit in the middle west early in June, stopping on the way at Salt Lake City. He will visit his old home in Ames, Ia. He will return by way of Minneapolis, Seattle and Portland. A. Bihn is in Westwood, Lassen County, where he is filling an outside position with the Red River Lumber Company. Tom A. Cody, accompanied by his wife and sister-in-law, is enjoying an auto trip to Los Angeles and San Diego. He went by way of the valley route, and will return the coast route. Ray Chapman, who has been employed in Redding for several months, is now at the Sunday News. James J. Devine, assistant make-up on the Bee, is recovering from a severe case of blood poison in his left hand and arm, caused by a slight scratch on a brass galley. William Halley is now reading proof on the Bee, succeeding Henry Treichler, who is now reading proof on the Morning Union in place of J. T. Holden, who is writing ads for the department store of Hale Bros., Holden taking the place of S. H. Stone, who is back in the Bee adroom. James P. Hadley is in Klamath Falls, employed on the Herald-News. H. M. Hadfield and Fred J. Martindale are now publishing the Roseville Tribune. Steve James has resigned his position as foreman of the Bee ad department and is in San Francisco. Roy James has enlisted with Uncle Sam for the war. Harvey W. Lyon, who was located in Auburn for several months, has taken a life partner, and is now living in Porterville. Harry W. Mahar departed for Salt Lake City the middle of June, after spending a few weeks in Oroville. C. B. McCombs has drawn his card and left for the northwest. D. F. Nelson is back in Woodland after several months' absence down the valley. Fred P. Rowe spent a few days in Reno, Nev., recently. E. W. Stone has resigned his position at the News, and is back at the Anderson Printing Company. W. G. Todd, a member of the executive committee of No. 46, has been appointed agent of Sacramento's free labor bureau by Commissioner of Education Haynes. W. G. Zoeller, operator on the Star, had the misfortune to fall and break his leg. He is now at the county hospital, with a prospect of remaining there for several weeks. J. W. CRAWLEY.

ABILENE, TEXAS.

Upon receiving a new member into No. 494, recently, this particular member took the liberty to inquire why the union did not occasionally record its happenings in THE JOURNAL, along with its sister unions. The answer that he received was somewhat evasive, but nevertheless availing, in that he was immediately assigned the duties of correspondent.

At the June meeting of No. 494 it was unanimously agreed on that $50 be appropriated for the purchase of a liberty bond. Since that time practically the entire membership of Abilene Union has contributed liberally to the cause by buying individual bonds.

Clyde Hammers, formerly of Dublin, Texas, has accepted a position with the Times. Ellis Hicks, formerly of Austin, is now with the job rooms of Abilene Printing Company.

M. M. Osborne is a recent purchaser of a Maxwell car.

John Leonard, make-up on the Abilene Daily Reporter, insists that he is champion player of a scientific game, known as "negro billiards"— game (so John says) in which the element of luck is eliminated, and challenges not only the "would-be's" of America, but those of the entire globe, to a meet—the number of games to be played, and number of points to the game, to be left entirely at the choosing of his opponent.

ELLIS W. HICKS.

COLUMBIA, S. C.

It is said that evil, like disease, is contagious and must be fought relentlessly to stem the tide of its onward rush. That being true, it is most likely that within the next few months a movement will be started here to compile and publish the directory of the city. It is being done by outside help—printed in another city—while the merchants and printing fraternity have been seemingly in a state of innocuous desuetude for some years. Without attempting to diagnose the ailment at this time, it is sufficient to say that there is no reason why his work should be sent away from here. There must be a thorough organization to have it a Columbia product.

For years organized labor in the United States has fought for a child labor law. The congress gave us one. Before it becomes effective the mill owners of the south—presumably those from other sections, too—want it suspended during the war. That is the plea of John Hamrick, of Columbia, superintendent of the Hampton group of the Pacific mills. He wrote to Congressman Lever, of this district, pleading that the services of children were needed in the cotton mills during the war, as their fathers would probably go into service. Federation of labor officials at Washington, D. C., learned of this move and answered Mr. Hamrick. Others have also, and it seems that opposition to his scheme is quite universal. The war-conscripted laborers in the mills here were sold $1 Red Cross badges, which they were really unable to buy, and now the proposition has been made to send a speaker among them to urge that they purchase liberty bonds, while the children would be worked in the factory and the fathers would be fighting "somewhere in France." In the name of high heaven, is not the lot of these people one to be viewed in a spirit of commiseration? Is there not some man in South Carolina—broad, brainy and brave—who will drain the leeches? These mill people need some sheltering arm to protect them from such iniquitous ideas. Except in political campaigns and war relief measures they are a forgotten tribe, for they are rarely visited by strangers.

The South Carolina Federation of Labor meets in annual convention in this city in August. It is believed that there will be several really important questions to be considered, chief of which is a general reorganization of the state—probably into districts (as, for instance, the congressional district idea)—for the purpose of locating a vice-president in each. W. T. Walker, J. L. Davis and your correspondent have been elected to represent Columbia Typographical Union at the convention. Mr. Walker is clerk to the printing committee of the South Carolina legislature. Mr. Davis has been prominent in labor ranks in this section for years, and at present is a member of the conciliation and mediation board, having been appointed by Governor Manning.

Forest Fort, formerly president of our union, is farming quite extensively on the side.

Recently, Walter and John Cormack and Mr. and Mrs. "Pete" Joyner motored to Charlotte, N. C.

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Davis will be pleased to learn that their beautiful little daughter is now an advanced convalescent, after four months' illness.

Shorter Watson, night machinist, and otherwise a dairyman, led all his competitors in the recent milk examination by the state board.

"Will" Burke, state job office, visited Augusta last month. He made the trip in his car, leaving on Saturday.

"Bob" Schorb has enlisted. It is believed that seventeen of our membership will be enlisted for war under the first call.

James Hoyt, speaker of the house of representatives of South Carolina, and president of the People's bank and the Morris Plan Homestead bank, has accepted a position as head of the Morris Plan, Detroit, Mich. He will leave for Detroit about the middle of July. Mr. Hoyt formerly edited the Record of this city. His relations with the union printers and pressmen and others have been most friendly and appreciative. At a mass meeting here a year ago, he spoke in favor of the contentions of the railroad engineers, firemen, etc. It was a bold, effective stroke—a sincere utterance. It was praiseworthy. Our union passed resolutions anent Mr. Hoyt's leaving, and recommended him to the membership of Detroit Typographical Union.

At our last meeting we purchased a liberty bond, $100 denomination.

Those who read THE JOURNAL closely discover a good word in it now and then in behalf of the establishment of a branch of the Union Printers Home "somewhere" in the southwestern states. It is encouraging—the certain stepping stone to organization. It will require intelligent work to accomplish this much desired forward movement of the International Typographical Union. Patience, perseverance and pleading, in the north, the east, the west, and the south, is the only way in which to prosecute this idea to a successful consummation. How many years of this it will require is not known, but there are hundreds who believe it will some day become a law of the International Typographical Union. Among these workers, writers and talkers will be found TOM F. MCNALLEY.

JACKSON, MICH.

The Jackson Morning Patriot and the Citizen-Press have both recently purchased property for quarters of their own. The Patriot will move this fall, but the Citizen-Press does not expect to build for a year yet.

The boys subscribed quite liberally for the liberty loan bonds, about $2,000 being taken by members. The Morning Patriot gave its employes $3 as first payment on each $50 bond subscribed for, and the boys showed their appreciation by coming to the front to a man.

McCracken, of Kalamazoo, was a visitor here June 18 and proved to be just as spry as he was years ago.

J. C. Welch is proving his patriotism by trying to make his forty acres produce more than ever this year. President Heazlit is also farming extensively in an endeavor to beat the high cost of living, and all the boys are doing their bit as agriculturists.

No. 99 subscribed for a $50 bond and donated $5 to the Red Cross.

Delegate Harvey is getting his togs ready for the trip to Colorado Springs.

ISAAC D. JACKSON.

DENVER, COLO.

Denver, the Queen City of the Plains, the gateway to the Home, is to be the host to the hundreds of delegates and visitors who will attend the sixty-third convention of the International Typographical Union, to be held in Colorado Springs in August. The Association of ex-Delegates has provided ample means and entertainment is assured all who may visit this city. The entertainment in Denver will be on the Sunday following the convention, and the association requests that all delegates and visitors be sure and have their tickets routed to Denver on the return trip. The final arrangements have not been completed as yet, but will be announced at a later date.

For the first time in the history of No. 49, or at least, as far back as the oldest pioneer can remember, there was no opposition to any local office at the recent election. President Pferdesteller, Vice-President Leo Cuthbertson, Secretary-Treasurer Frank Birdsall and Doorkeeper Alonzo Wiley were all re-elected, and Angelo Noce was the new sergeant-at-arms elected. Secretary Birdsall was re-elected for his twenty-sixth consecutive year. There were four candidates out for delegate to the International convention—Alonzo Wiley, John Oliver, Bart Sweeney and William J. Duffy, the first two being elected. All were duly obligated at the last regular meeting of the union, and immediately afterward President Pferdesteller announced his standing committees, which are the same as last year.

The war spirit seems to have invaded the rank and file of No. 49, and practically every member is doing "his bit" in one way or another. A large number have planted war gardens, a few have enlisted in the different branches of military service, while it is estimated that 80 per cent of our members have bought liberty bonds.

The fifth annual memorial service of No. 49 was held on the union's burial plot at Riverside cemetery on Sunday, May 27. The day being ideal, it was the largest in attendance ever held. The program consisted of a prayer by W. H. Neighbor, opening address by President Pferdesteller, roll call of deceased members by Secretary Birdsall, memorial address by Clint C. Houston and benediction by W. H. Hedley, after which the graves were decorated. The music was rendered in a very capable manner by a quartet, composed of Mrs. Frank Branch, Miss Gertrude Livingston and Messrs. Clinton Gaston and Payton Hough. Sixty of our members are now interred in the burial plot at Riverside. Those who have passed away during the past year are: Harold V. Eighmy, Albert G. Bennett, Bernard Arnold, Frank W. Bradley, J. W. Hennen, John W. Lambert, Charles E. Mathews, Clarence A. Pickett, James B. Surber and M. E. Goodwin. The memorial day committee, composed of August Koester, chairman, Alonzo Wiley, J. A. McNamara, B. C. Sweeney and John Oliver, is to be commended on the excellent arrangement of the program and the manner in which it was conducted.

It is estimated that seventy-five of our members registered last month for the selective service army. At a recent meeting of this union a motion prevailed whereby any member who enlists or is called into service shall be kept in good standing and all his rights protected for the period of the war, provided his card shall have been deposited with this union for at least one month after the passage of the motion.

The trout season in Colorado was duly opened the past month by George Jones, Fred Johnson, "Bill" McIntyre, Biddy Dolan and a few other sports, and all reported some fine catches, but as usual the biggest ones got away.

Word was received in Denver that Miss Katherine Williamson, a former member of No. 49, who has until recently been in New York city, is now reading proof on the Los Angeles Examiner.

At the last regular meeting of this union it was voted to assess each member 2 per cent of his earnings to be used as a local defense fund. An individual account shall be kept by the secretary of the sums paid by members. At the end of the scale negotiations (job and newspaper), if no strike or lockout results, the sums paid in by the individual members will be refunded. No part of this fund will be used for any purpose save the payment of strike or lockout benefits. The first collection on this assessment was made on June 16. It is hoped by every member that it will never become necessary to use this fund, but it is always best to be prepared.

The job scale, which was recently drawn up, has been ratified by this union, and is now in the hands of the publishers, awaiting their signature or rejection. The scale becomes operative on September 1 and continues for a period of one year. Among the important features are a raise in wages to $5 for day work, $5.50 for night work and $6 for the "lobster" shift, and a graduated scale for all apprentices. The six-day situation is also asked for. This is to be based on the dullest month of the year, probably August, and if adopted will prevent the office from working a top-heavy force the first part of the week and closing down the office on Saturday afternoon and sometimes all day Saturday. The biggest fight in the contract is expected to arise from this clause. The present newspaper contract does not expire until January 28 next.

Work in town is reported to be very poor. Newspapers are doing just a normal business, while the job offices are very quiet, some of them only working about half their regular force.

FRED L. ZIMMERMAN.

VICTORIA, B. C.

One of our valued members, Robert Butler, passed to the Great Beyond June 12. He had been a member of No. 201 for over fifteen years, and despite his years (he was seventy-five) it is only about four weeks since he ceased attending his duties at the king's printing office. Robert Butler was one of the real pioneers of the city. He was born November 2, 1842, in Manchester, England. He came to this country on the Thames City, which landed here on April 12, 1859, being a member of the Royal Engineers. He had a large family, his eldest boy, R. Butler, of Vancouver, having been in the employ of the postoffice there for over thirty years. Other children who survive are Fred Butler, Mrs. J. D. McNiven and Mrs. F. S. Findley, all of Vancouver; Miss Edith Butler, of Portland, Ore., and Miss Ethel Butler, of this city. There are sixteen grandchildren and three great grandchildren. The bereaved wife and family have the sincere sympathy of the members of No. 201 in their hour of sadness.

Henry Buckle, father of Harry Buckle, of the Colonist, died at his home in this city on Thursday, June 7. The late Mr. Buckle was well known and highly esteemed by a number of the members of No. 201, and their expressions of regret testify to their regard for the deceased gentleman. The bereaved family have the sincere sympathy of the members of this union in their hour of sorrow.

F. FORNERI.

WORCESTER, MASS.

This letter is to be my valedictory, as my time is so much taken up in other ways, I find I can not do justice to the part. However, that need not cause alarm, for we have some very fertile brains in the roster of No. 165, and all that needs to be done is to put their dope in cold type. I believe we ought to get a move on us, though local labor struggles have set the movement back some, and a monthly letter from Worcester no doubt will aid us greatly in keeping in the limelight. Labor conditions in this city are fairly good, but would be much better if the union man would do a little more than carry a card. We lack initiative, concentration of effort, and good leaders. We have men who head organizations who may have the "makin's," but the really big man has not remained in our midst very long. By this I mean that as soon as a fairly good leader is developed he is gathered in by some international and is doing missionary work in other sections. Why? Because Worcester union men are unappreciative, and resort to the hammer instead of the horn. No. 165 is just as bad as the rest of them. When, out of a membership of almost 200, only about fifteen or twenty attend regular meetings, it is indeed a deplorable condition. What kind of a union man is he who can not give at least a couple of hours a month to an organization that provides all the International Typographical Union does for him? How much constructive work does he think a handful of members can do, and at that without his co-operation? It is a sad condition, indeed, when members fall short of their ideals, and extremely so when you attempt to negotiate a scale and have a proprietor tell the committee: "My men are satisfied." Rightfully may we ask ourselves, "What does he mean?"

I am not confining my remarks to the printers alone, I am including the whole labor colony in Worcester, who lead apparently apathetic lives. They ask non-union men to buy union-made goods when they don't buy them themselves, and the only thing a lot of them can see is a pay envelop on Saturday. That's the condition existing here today, and that same condition put labor back twenty-five years when the machinists' strike was lost a year or so ago. That strike could have been won if union men had stood together, as at times the employers were mortally afraid such a thing was going to happen. We lacked co-operation, and we lacked good leadership, and it has always been a mystery to me why the American Federation of Labor fell down on the job. However, that's past and gone, but like Banquo's ghost, it will not down. Worcester fell back twenty-five years as regards its labor standing.

For No. 165 we have practically the same story to tell. As I stated above, we have about a corporal's guard at our meetings, and if perchance we happen to have many more at times, the regular attendant is wondering "what's going to be pulled off." That sort of tactics is hurting our cause, because, somehow or other employers always hear of any little squabbles we may have. This is not written in any other than a brotherly spirit; it is something we all realize exists, and likewise it is something we can shake off if each member does his duty. Look yourself over, and you will conclude that my position is a correct one. We will have another scale to attend to in a little while, and this time we want to stand as one.

The Evening Post has taken a new lease on life since the change in business managers. The new manager is George N. Graham, formerly connected with the Gazette and the Telegram in this city, and lastly with the Boston American. He is a quiet chap, but the increase in advertising since he took hold shows he's there. He is not the type of manager who is forever wanting to cut down; rather is he out scouting for plenty of work to keep the plant going at top speed. We have a good plant, good help, and he is piling in a good lot of work. And his scheme looks good to us all.

The overtime law came in for a deal of discussion in the Post chapel lately. The idea that all overtime must be given to the first available sub, we all agree is a correct one, but the interpretation that a shut-down does not cancel overtime is, to some of our minds, far-fetched. Not that we have had any shutdowns, but when a regular begs off, there being no available sub, or a holiday occurs, to have overtime still hanging on you is not exactly fair. Truthfully I can say we have no "crabs" in the Post chapel, but it seems rather tough even if you lose time—say the greater part of a month—by sickness or other cause—to still have overtime chalked up against you because there was no sub available, then later on had to take this time off—and just when your finances were at a low ebb. We get the idea that the law is a good one in many respects, but believe at this stage of the game it should be modified. We never have many subs, and the boys generally keep down to the forty-eight-hour limit whether or not a sub is available, by begging off. And then again, who ever saw a jobber laying off on account of overtime? They may get a lay-off in the summer, but according to the dope, when they catch on in the fall the overtime is still "on the hook."

For the benefit of my fellow-correspondents who were helping me boost Worcester for the 1920 International Typographical Union convention, I wish to state that during the past month I had ballots printed and took a referendum on the subject. I have not had all the votes returned as yet, but there was such a strong expression of opinion against it—that our local could not handle it—that I guess it had better be let go by the board. The majority might possibly vote for it, but unless we had the support of every one it would be a hazardous undertaking. So, boys, especially Springfield and Brockton, I thank you, but don't let that prevent you from calling on us at any time. Vale!

WILLIAM P. CANTWELL.

DAVENPORT, IOWA-ROCK ISLAND, MOLINE, ILL.

A number of the members and apprentices of Tri-City Union No. 107 have answered the call to the colors, and are joining army and navy. Rock Island arsenal is a busy place these days, where thousands of people are engaged in the manufacture of munitions and war equipment, and infantry and battery men are being drilled and trained for the serving of nation, and "the nations" if need be, and many are anxious to get to go to France as soon as possible. The bridges and Arsenal island are being patrolled and guarded by troops and things hereabout have taken on quite a military appearance.

Edward C. Collins, holder of an honorable withdrawal card, closed his earthly career May 29. He formerly was city clerk in Davenport, and had also been county auditor for several terms, and held this office at the time of his passing away. Some years ago he went down to New York, in the service of the McClure Magazine, and was instrumental in helping to bring that publication into the "fair" column. He was a member of No. 6 during his stay in New York.

The grim reaper has again entered the ranks of No. 107, and taken from our midst Edward A. Hauptman. He was born August 23, 1873, at Nauvoo, Ill. After spending his boyhood in that vicinity he came to Rock Island and began learning the printing trade; and later (in October, 1898) he became a member of Tri-City Union, and has carried a card ever since. About two years ago his health began to fail, and he was compelled to abandon his trade, and has been living with his brother, John Hauptman, of Sears. Mr. Hauptman took a course of treatment in the hospital and for a time seemed much improved in health, and this season was employed by a company having a concession at Black Hawk watch tower, where he performed his work faithfully until Saturday evening, June 9.

JAMES A. WEED.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

The regular meeting of Plainfield Typographical Union No. 399 was held on June 4. All business was laid over to the July meeting on account of the death of Secretary Harry Thomas' wife. A letter of condolence was ordered mailed to Mr. Thomas, and also a handsome spray of flowers from our union. Mrs. Thomas was very highly esteemed by this union.

GEORGE H. ROCKEFELLER.

PITTSBURG, KAN.

Two batteries of field artillery have been organized here and by the time this is published will be sworn into service as Batteries C and D, Kansas field artillery. For a strongly organized district this is a record, the various locals assisting in the organization, as it is understood that these organizations will be disbanded at the close of the war.

One of our members is at present stationed in Fortress Monroe as first lieutenant in the coast artillery.

The local pressmen's organization will be hard hit by the departure of the two batteries, two members being enlisted and others considering enlistment. One pressman was called in as a reservist and is at Fort Sumter, S. C.

A. S. Green has taken a "sit" in Sapulpa and Frank Kavanaugh is filling his chair. H. H. Vance and George W. Thompson "called" and have departed.

The undersigned is trying to land some members in Columbus, Kan., and is hopeful of three.

Sid Tounsley decided that printing in Asbury, Mo., was too quiet, sold out and has gone to Fulton, Ky.

Jerome Twichell came in from the north and has gone on his way south.

F. H. SWINNEY.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Again the grim reaper has called from among us one of our most beloved and respected members—Orion T. Thomas, age 70 years, and for over fifty years a member of the International Typographical Union. Seldom indeed do we see a man in any walk of life that was met by every one with a smile and who carried a smile of his own that never waned. Mr. Thomas was one of the old-time members of No. 174 and was a caseholder on the Express during the nineties, coming to Los Angeles from Fort Wayne, Ind., of which union he was one of its earliest presidents. During the civil war Mr. Thomas did his "bit" by serving four years, being captured by the boys in gray and spending nearly a year in the Andersonville prison, from which he was fortunate to make his escape, and spent the last few months of the great struggle with his comrades in arms in the neighborhood of Washington, D. C. Retiring as usual after a most pleasant evening with his daughter and grandchildren on Monday, June 11, he was found dead Tuesday morning with a smile which seemed to indicate that he was bound for that destination which we all hope to reach. A widow and several children, grandchildren and one great grandchild survive Mr. Thomas.

The job scale adopted at the May meeting of No. 174 called for an increase of $1 per week, making the scale $25 per week for job men. The proprietors, recognizing the justice of the increase, readily agreed to the proposed change, and the increase was made effective with the week beginning June 11. The scale expires January 1, 1919. The matter was handled by President Seth R. Brown, Charles Marleau and John G. Camp. Following close upon the increase of the newspaper scale to $30 and $33, it goes without saying the members of No. 174 are all pleased with the working conditions and progress made in Los Angeles.

It is now the Hon. Ralph L. Criswell, he having been elected to the city council of Los Angeles. From past activities, labor is assured that it has a stanch friend in the council who will always endeavor to see that we at least get a square deal.

Once again the administration forces in Los Angeles have placed their candidates at the head of the union and on the board of directors, in fact, all except one delegate to the central labor council were candidates backed by the administration: Seth R. Brown, president; William Lucas, vice-president; William Hahn, S. B. Woodrow and R. S. Heiges, board of directors.

New York friends of Jenny Stott (Mrs. Adams) will be pleased to know that after a major operation and several weeks in the hospital she is once more in good health.

J. W. ("Tim") Foley, formerly of Denver, Washington, D. C., and the United States in general, is now a regular on the Record.

William Hahn, for a number of years on the Record, is now subbing on the Call in San Francisco.

At the May meeting of No. 174 the board of directors recommended that we join the throng and purchase a block of liberty bonds, and with one accord $500 was voted with which to purchase the bonds. Late the same afternoon the Examiner chapel held a special meeting and almost without exception every man took at least $50 worth, while it is claimed that over 50 per cent of them also have subscribed to the Red Cross. The Examiner office as a whole took over $25,000 in liberty bonds. While all this was going on at the Examiner building the Herald plant was not idle, there being $16,000 in bonds subscribed for by the different craft and the office force and a number of the boys subscribing to the Red Cross fund. While we have not the figures from the other offices we are informed that they all did their "bit" and are glad of it.

It is not often that a position is given to a man so that it looks like a wedding present, but nevertheless Henry Rohrich induced Miss Elizabeth Tyrrell (both of the Examiner chapel) to change her name to Mrs. Henry Rohrich on May 16. Henry, known among his eastern friends as the "Lightning Stranger," and his bride were presented with a beautiful clock by their many friends in the chapel, and a few days after returning from his honeymoon was one of nine fortunates to receive regular situations.

Nine situations were given out on the Examiner recently, those receiving the plums being: Operators, R. O. Kennard, O. E. Neville, Henry Rohrich, C. M. Wilson and C. E. Brown; proofroom, H. W. Broughton and C. L. Swartz; battery, A. C. La Forge.

C. R. Hopewell, another member of the Examiner chapel, was married last month, receiving a present of cut glass from his friends.

The flag has called several printers of Los Angeles, among them being Tom Hollowell and Frank Dunn to the officers' camp at the Presidio, M. J. Markel, Ernest E. Scott (son of Charles T.), G. W. Chamberlin and several others who have enlisted but have not yet been called. Thomas D. Fennessy, who served through the Spanish-American war under Teddy, also volunteered when it looked as though he might be able to once again serve under his old commander, but when the volunteer regiment project fell through Thomas D. made an endeavor to get into the regular service, and the age limit was the only thing that kept him from among those who would have been glad to help repay France the debt we morally owe her.

W. K. Lockwood.

NEWARK, N. J.

At the regular meeting in June the union subscribed to $500 worth of liberty loan bonds.

H. J. Gottlob was elected delegate to the Colorado Springs convention at the election in May. Edward D. Balentine was chosen as alternate. The sum of $350 was the amount to be allowed to defray the delegates' expenses.

Charles J. Smith, of No. 103, represented the State Printers' League of New Jersey as fraternal delegate at the convention of the Eastern Pennsylvania District Typographical Union at Reading on May 26-27.

An informal dinner was given to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of Newark Typographical Union on Monday evening, June 18, at Stoll's Hall. About one hundred members attended. Souvenirs of American flags and a gold fob were presented to each of those present. It had been the intention of the union to hold a celebration, but after the war broke out it was deemed unwise to do so. A few of the members got together, however, and thought it a better plan to hold a dinner than not in any way to commemorate an occasion such as this. Joseph Smith, who was instrumental in organizing Newark Union, was the guest of honor. Edward D. Balentine, Walter Scott and C. J. Smith arranged the affair.

Charles Hinsey, of the News chapel, has declared himself in the race for delegate to the next International Typographical Union convention.

The new newspaper scale of $30 per week went into effect on June 1. Back pay was granted at the rate of $29 from January 1 to June 1. The former scale was $28. Men working on morning newspapers receive $33. The arbitration agreement for five years was also signed.

At the June meeting the new jobbers' scale was passed, with a five-year contract. As usual, the jobbers were very much interested in receiving an increase, but when it came to the vote on the new scale it was found that just eleven jobbers were in attendance. And there are 250 jobbers working in Newark. The new scale is $25 per week, effective July 1. This brings the Newark scale up to that of New York city.

Hugh Palmer, a former member of the News chapel, and who did military duty on the Mexican border with Battery C, is now at Sea Girt with the officers' training camp.

Senator Edmund Burke Osborne, owner of the Osborne Calendar Company, of Newark; the American Colortype Company, of New York, and the Chicago Colortype Company, died suddenly last month.

Liberty loan bonds have been subscribed to by employes of the Linotype Composition Company, $1,000; Essex Press, $3,000; Newark Evening News, $15,600.

SHREVEPORT, LA.

It is a lamentable fact that the members show too little regard to the importance of attendance at regular meetings of the union, and thereby frequently force a postponement of matters of importance to the membership at large, which is a detriment to the union, and often causes the abandonment of important measures that would be of lasting benefit. Every meeting of our local sees matters that need prompt attention. Let's all be in the hall and be ready and willing to assist the local and International officers in their efforts to better our organization.

Our newspaper scale has been extended for another year. Thanks to our officers and a representative of the International, Henry Hanson, for the manner in which negotiations were carried on.

This union pledged itself to pay the dues of all members who join the colors. We have given up one member to date, Reuben Boone joining the army.

At a meeting of this union held June 17, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It has come to the knowledge of this union that a few misguided labor organizations throughout the country are showing antagonism to the American government by critical resolutions and intemperate speech; therefore, be it

Resolved, by Shreveport Typographical Union No. 155, That it condemns such action as bordering on treason.

Resolved, That the members of Shreveport Typographical Union are loyal Americans, first, last and all the time; and that they stand unitedly behind President Woodrow Wilson in his fight to make the world safe for democracy.

Resolved, That those of our members who have enlisted, or who are to enlist, in the army of freedom, be carried on the rolls of this union without expense to them.

Cards received during month: J. A. Newsom, C. A. Cox, G. M. Casserleigh, W. E. Ansell. Cards issued: Lonnie Adams, Eugene Mitchell, Franklin Stewart, Hugh Williams, J. M. Finck, A. L. Williams. J. Z. Snyder.

MANCHESTER, N. H.

The outstanding feature in matters typographical at this writing is the entertaining of the New England Typographical Union's eighth annual convention in this city, and by the time this letter is printed that will be a matter of history.

Last year the evening papers observed the custom of giving the employes the Saturday half-holiday, going to press at noon, and so far as reported the scheme worked well and the employes are in hopes that the practice will be continued this year.

F. A. Crocket, who came to this city from Montpelier, Vt., has accepted the position of foreman of the Herald at Newburyport, Mass.

Matt Hayes, who has been spending the winter in the south, as night editor of the Daytona (Fla.) Journal, called on his friends in this city on his way to Waterville, Me., where he goes to enter the employ of his friend, United States Senator Johnson, on the staff of the Waterville Sentinel.

Leslie Ellis, who has been on the ads in the Union-Leader office, has gone to Mount Washington, where he will have charge of the summer paper printed there known as "Above the Clouds."

Oscar Mannke, who has been absent from the Union-Leader ad staff on account of illness for several weeks, is still unable to work.

Considerable interest is manifest here in the tour of the Query club from New York to the International convention and Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs, but owing to the response to the appeals for the liberty loan and for the Red Cross fund, it is doubtful if any of our members will take the trip, which promises so many delightful features.

A pleasant social event was held at the hall in the Mirror building, which was in gala attire for the occasion. A military whist was given by the women's committee of the typographical union for the benefit of the New England convention, held in this city June 24 to 26, at Odd Fellows' hall.

Fred T. Irwin.

RICHMOND, VA.

As the result of the election of delegates, May 23, Clarence P. Harwood and R. Lee Woody will represent No. 90 at the convention in Colorado Springs in August. These are two of our most active and zealous workers. Both attended the Baltimore convention last year—Woody as a delegate, and Harwood as a visitor. They are looking forward with great pleasure to the trip to the convention and visiting the Union Printers Home.

The meeting of No. 90 on Sunday, June 18, was not as largely attended as usual, owing to the Red Cross parade and mass meeting at the city auditorium. It was said to have been one of the most inspiring and patriotic scenes ever witnessed in Richmond. About $300,000 was subscribed in a short time. Half a million dollars is the goal set for this city. Most of No. 90's members are now wearing the Red Cross button.

Many matters of importance came up for consideration at our meeting. The most important one was the amendment to the scale of prices. As the amendment offered was of a discriminating nature, only applying to the newspapers, it was decided to refer the whole scale of prices to a committee, with instructions to report on the feasibility of adopting an entire new scale covering newspaper as well as book and job offices.

Messrs. Harwood, Woody, Hughes and Jackson, delegates to the Virginia State Typographical Association, which met in Lynchburg, June 3, reported a good meeting. The Lynchburg boys treated the delegates royally. These delegates also represented No. 90 at the state federation of labor convention, held in Roanoke the same week. They report the meeting as the most harmonious one held for several years. The factional differences that existed have been patched up and the federation will now present a solid front in its endeavors to advance the cause of organized labor. The printers fared well in the election of officers—W. E. Doherty, of Norfolk, president; F. S. Lyon, of Newport News, treasurer; C. P. Harwood, of Richmond, secretary. The Roanoke printers entertained the printer delegates to the convention with a smoker, etc., and the boys report the affair as delightful, indeed.

In compliance with the request of President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, telegrams were sent to Virginia representatives in congress, urging them to give hearty support to the Lever food bill. Some relief is absolutely necessary, as the American workingman, while patriotic to his country, will not continue to sacrifice his all while speculators are allowed to manipulate the foodstuffs and artificially raise prices. Here is another example of where organized labor is working and using its efforts and means to combat these conditions, and the non-union or unorganized workingmen reap the benefit. We sometimes wonder if this class of men have any appreciation of what organized workers have done for the workingmen throughout the country, as well as other countries. We see what power the organized workers now wield in Russia, and it is hoped they will use it wisely.

The daily papers of Richmond have spoken in very complimentary terms of the action of our local in paying dues of its members who volunteered or may be drafted for service in Uncle Sam's army and navy; also of the action of the executive council of the International Typographical Union in subscribing for $50,000 of liberty bonds. The News-Leader and Times-Dispatch printed editorials on the subject. The old capital of the confederacy subscribed to double the amount of liberty loan bonds allotted her, about $14,000,000.

Speaking about patriotism, No. 90 can boast of a real patriot. Everett Slaughter, one of the "speed artists" on the linotype at the News-Leader, when he comes to the words, "Star-Spangled Banner," rises from his seat and manipulates the keyboard while standing. (Everett is too old to go to the front.)

There are quite a number of our boys who came within the selective draft registration, June 5, and no doubt several will be drafted. We do not fear as to their patriotism; we know they are all right—will do their duty as men to their country. Some have already volunteered and are now in service.

Two members initiated—Messrs. W. E. Clarke and Lewis P. Selden.

Representative D. I. Campbell was a visitor. He gave us a short talk—really too short—but he was given the "glad hand" at its conclusion. No. 90 feels under many obligations to Mr. Campbell. We are delighted to learn that he has been so successful in other fields. (We get this information from other sources; he is very modest about self-praise.) We are glad to know that he will be with us again soon on some special work here and in Virginia.

G. W. Mitchell, who has been ill for months, was reported as still confined to his home. The members of No. 90 would like to see him out again.

Edward W. Jay, the popular machinist on the Times-Dispatch, was seriously injured a few weeks ago, having his right arm caught in a linotype machine. The leaders and arteries of the wrist were severed, and arm lacerated considerably. It was feared he would lose his arm, but the physician says he will get all right again, though it will be some time before he will be able to use his hand.

J. E. Burnette is in Chicago on a visit. He will give the big town the "once over," and if he likes it may decide to locate there.

Several former members of No. 90 have recently been visiting in Richmond. Among them were Willis ("Deacon") Weaver, now in business in Raleigh, N. C.; C. C. Curtis, of the Curtis Linotyping Company, Washington, D. C., with wife, son and daughter, motored down to spend Memorial day with relatives. He also brought along "Johnny" Jones and "Bob" Ferriter, who are now operating at the Curtis plant. George Schlief, now reading proof on the Washington Times, also was in Richmond recently. The old boys are always welcome "back home."

Howard T. Colvin, editor of the Square Deal, official organ of the central trades and labor council, and a well-known and active worker in trade unionism in Richmond, is a candidate for legislative honors in the primary election to be held in August. Here's hoping he will be elected. If the boys will work hard we can put him over. We will need a man of his caliber in the legislature, as we understand the state federation of labor has several important measures to come before the state lawmakers. GEORGE JENNINGS.

BURLINGTON, VT.

Thomas Martelle, who has been working on morning papers in Plattsburgh, N. Y., is now on the force of the Daily Free Press.

Extensive alterations have been made in the composing room of the Free Press, and new machines added. The floor space has been enlarged and new cabinets installed. The mechanical equipment now consists of two new No. 18s, one No. 17, with auxiliary magazine, one No. 8 and one No. 9 linotype and a new jig and drill saw, making one of the best equipped plants for any town of this size.

Last May the management of the Daily News changed hands. Joseph Auld, the seer of Vermont newspaperdom, turned over the pen and the power behind the press to a couple of younger men —John B. Taylor and H. H. Babbitt. Mr. Taylor was formerly on the staff of the Free Press. Mr. Babbitt has seen experience in various phases of the business. No. 580 wishes them success.

Patriotism and war has made some impression on our members, in spite of the fact that printers are peacefully inclined. Capt. W. N. Hudson, of the Daily News, is right in his glory at the head of Company M, V. N. G. The writer of this article is a member of the newly-formed company of home guards, and has ambition to become a "real" soldier soon. A. J. Cayo, of the Free Press, is a member of the volunteer Vermont ambulance company, No. 26, of the Red Cross. P. M. Stoughton, of the Free Press staff, is now in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, studying aviation. William Powell, formerly a proofreader, and ex-Texas border man, is now with a Canadian contingent somewhere in Europe. A. A. TWISS.

FRESNO, CAL.

Fresno is active in war matters. Our union voted to take $500 of liberty bonds. Each member donated one hour's pay to the Red Cross fund. John Click and "our Ed" Thaddis have already gone with the engineer corps. "Cupie" Bomar, the life of the Republican chapel, has joined the medical corps. Dante Blade has joined one of the different units and there are others who are seriously thinking of joining. We also voted to take an active part in the Fourth of July patriotic parade.

Arlie DeForest joined the matrimonial army, being married to Miss Elsie Heisel, a popular young lady of our city, and the Republican chapel, in wishing him happiness, presented him with a silver tea service.

Robert A. Hunter was elected delegate to represent No. 144 at the International convention; William Faddis, alternate. M. G. Coates was the opponent. The raisin committee got busy and secured the annual raisin treat for the delegates at Colorado Springs.

Ralph, son of C. C. Lingle, passed the necessary examination at the University of California, and now has B.A., E.E., attached to his name.

Mrs. Beatty, of the Republican chapel, lost her father during the past month. Ed Barrett left for

Digitized by Google

Illinois a few days ago on account of the illness of his father-in-law.

The union appointed a committee to take up the scale with the employers.

Among recent arrivals is Mr. Holmes, of New York, Baltimore, etc. He was in search of a warm climate. He will stay. The thermometer now is about 105, but it will warm up about August 1, they say.

Ray Baker, the popular printer county recorder, has made a remarkably good showing for his office last year.

Mr. Seabury, of the Longwell company, has gone on an auto trip to southern California. Will Klomberg, of the Herald, has gone on a vacation. Jeff Walsh is holding down his machine.

H. S. Whitlock has sold his interest in the Crown Printing Company to his partner, Mr. Jackson, and goes eastward.

G. C. Rathbone is a new arrival. R. A. HUNT.

WATERBURY, CONN.

Manager Hemmingway, of the Hemmingway Press, is one who realizes the constantly increasing cost of all living necessities and has given his employes a voluntary increase of $1 a week, the second like increase so far in 1917 for the members of this busy chapel.

G. K. Ashert, of New York, is now machinist on the Republican and Eddie Diver is operating once more. A new No. 9 linotype has been installed.

At the June meeting it was voted to buy $100 worth of liberty bonds to be divided between the two banks with which the union does business, while individual members bought liberally. The Waterbury American financed the undertaking for their employes, who are paying for their bonds on the instalment plan.

O. B. Brindamoor, vice-president of No. 329, also delegate to the central labor union and member of the allied trades council, strongly anticipates a call to military duty, consequently at the June meeting his resignation was tendered to the union.

Our membership now numbers over seventy, and there is a constant demand from the different job offices for printers. F. S. GORHAM.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

The scale committee, appointed at the May meeting of No. 429, wasted no time in the preparation of a new scale which was introduced and adopted at the last meeting. It is altogether fitting and proper at this particular time for the printers of Battle Creek to receive more money. The price of foodstuffs, clothing and other necessities which are essential to have at all times have increased in price to the extent that it was almost impossible to live at the old figure. Beginning July 1 floormen will receive an increase of $2 per week; machine men, $1.

By the acceptance of two applications, filed at the last meeting, the Moon-Journal becomes an all-union shop. This is the second time in the history of the local that any shop has been composed of union men exclusively. Although the Moon-Journal has signed no contract with the local typographical union, they have at all times showed the proper spirit in their willingness to co-operate with their employes.

The Journal, a local daily that discontinued publication but two years ago, may also be remembered as an all-union shop. President Robertson was foreman at the time and he also holds the same responsible position at the Moon-Journal. As the result, much credit must be given him as an organizer and a man of considerable influence.

Battle Creek has been chosen by the war department for an army cantonment. Arrangements are now being completed and about thirty thousand soldiers are expected to arrive in October.

MILTON H. MAURER.

BENEFITS OF UNION MEMBERSHIP.

I have just been looking over the applications for membership in the June JOURNAL, and find some proof of the benefits which accrue from joining the International Typographical Union.

In the list of applications for membership for June there are twenty of ages ranging from 41 to 65 years, some suspended for non-payment of dues, besides others in the New York and Chicago lists.

When our mortuary and pension funds are bravely holding their own, is it not suicidal to take in a lot of worthless material, as shown in so many cases to have been careless to their obligations? None of us can possibly know whether there are extenuating circumstances in any of these cases, but it is safe to say that the average union does not err on the side of harshness when passing on candidates.

Even if the committee on applications sifts out the applicant and shows good reasons for rejection, some injudicious friends will override its judgment and secure the admission of detrimental cases.

The International Typographical Union has no medical examination. It pays $75 after six months membership, up to $400. But how long can it last with such disregard of common precautions?

After five years' membership a member is eligible for admission to the Home. Still no medical examination to secure fairly healthy members.

The old age pension after 60 years and twenty years' cumulative membership or after the age of 70 with only ten years' membership. Here is where your 65-year-old member gets in his work. If he lives only six months he costs us $75, for six months' dues is negligible. Then in six years he is eligible to the old age pension. And still there is agitation to increase the pension.

If we are to survive as a benefit-paying institution we must adopt some common-sense restrictions. One should be an age limit for membership. What good reason can there possibly be for taking in worn-out rats, to feed them when the employers' association has discarded them? It is not justice to the younger members and it certainly does no good to the older ones.

"While the lamp holds out to burn,
The vilest sinner may return."

This may be good logic when applied to religious rewards, but when it results in straining the finances of an international union it is cheap politics.

We ought to have some system of medical supervision over our membership, so as to assist a man to keep well. Our fight against foul printing offices has been costly, for a large portion of the sickness of our members is traceable to them. But a great deal is due to the lack of care on the part of the individual and it may be reached.

MAILERS' DEPARTMENT

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

Kansas City has been given attention again, and I can report a 90 per cent organization in the Star and Times offices. This was accomplished after a lot of hard work by President Cowing. I interviewed the manager of these publications, and regret to say that I was unsuccessful in securing a contract in these two offices. I have August Seested's promise, however, that the chances of securing recognition and a signed agreement with that office is very good. I have an appointment to go to that city again within the next sixty days, and I am hopeful that I will be able to bring the matter to a successful conclusion.

While in Kansas City I took up the scale matter with the manager of the Post, assisting the local committee, and it was finally agreed to sign up a new contract carrying with it an increase of $1 a week for the first year, and 20 cents additional the third year; the elimination of the six-hour day, at reduced rate, which makes a straight eight-hour day in that city now; overtime rates to time and a half, which is approximately 60 cents an hour, where heretofore it was 37½ cents, and a six-day week for apprentices, who without our knowledge had been working seven days under the old contract. The agreement carries back pay for about five weeks.

Attention was given the new organization in Topeka, Kan., while I was in that locality, and a proposition was arranged with the manager of the Capper publications which will give our members employed in that office $18 a week for those with five years' service, and those with less than five years will be graded and will eventually receive the wage mentioned. Both men and women are affected by this proposition, which will not go into effect until the second-class mail matter has been adjusted by congress. We have the promise of the Capper manager, however, that he will put this proposition in effect immediately on receiving word of a proper adjustment of the increased mail rates.

I also opened up negotiations with the publishers of Omaha, which carried with it recognition of our organization and a scale of wages, but while there I received a request from Cleveland in connection with the automatic inserting machine which necessitated my leaving Omaha before the scale matter was adjusted. I have substituted Secretary McNichols, however, and no doubt he will have something to report at a later date regarding the Omaha scale. The new secretary-treasurer of the Omaha organization has just received an amount equal to the sum taken by an absconding secretary, and there is every indication that the organization will continue and be successful. This is a warning against overconfidence in friends, and teaches us to insist upon our financial officers being bonded in a reliable concern.

Information reaches me to the effect that several of our organizations have bought liberty bonds. New York Union bought $2,000 worth and St. Louis $100. There are several other organizations that have invested in this worthy cause, but as I have not the authentic information at this time, I will not mention their names.

Our Seattle organization has opened up negotiations again with the publishers of that city, and indications are that they will receive about 65 per cent of their demands. They have already been offered $4 a day, so I am informed, which is all they are asking for, and they are now taking up clauses covering conditions and are hopeful of adjusting everything without arbitration.

Conditions are no better in the city of Chicago than they were ten years ago. We have been trying constantly to get an audience with the members of the publishers' association of that city, but have failed up to date. There is always some reason given by the members of that association for their inability to meet our members. I don't believe we are getting the proper consideration from the publishers of that city, and I know that all the members of our organization there are very much dissatisfied with the conditions they are compelled to put up with. They have not received an increase in wages for five or six years, and now that the high cost of living is affecting every one, you can understand their feelings. The organization is proposing a new agreement, and intends to serve copies of same upon all the newspaper publishers in Chicago, and feel through that method that even though we can't get a signed agreement, that the publishers will see the justice of their claim and allow them some financial consideration.

Three of the inserting machines are now erected in the office of the Plain Dealer at Cleveland, and are known as the Halberson inserting machine. I have had an opportunity to watch the machines in operation, but on account of a peculiar insert that now exists on the Plain Dealer, it has been impossible for a machine to be given a proper trial. It is expected by the management of the machine, and I presume the publisher of the Plain Dealer, to so arrange their sections of paper that the machine will be able to operate without meeting with this difficulty. The machines are expected to collect three sections and insert them into the fourth section, which in the Plain Dealer's case makes a complete paper. It is estimated by the manufacturer that the machines will insert about 8,000 papers an hour, regardless of the number of sections. It has not been agreed yet as to how many men shall operate. I expect to be in Cleveland for some time watching these machines and I may have more substantial information for our members at a later date. I am also taking up the scale of the Cleveland organization with the publishers. The local committee has been offered an increase of $2 a week, but as there are many conditions that will have to be changed, I feel safe in saying that the final settlement will show a better increase than $2 per week in that city.

San Francisco is proposing a new agreement, and as it has been some time since our members there have received an increase, there is no doubt in my mind but what they are entitled to one under the present conditions.

Our Montreal local, which consists of men employed exclusively on French papers, has submitted a new proposition to the publishers. The subject is now in negotiation and no doubt you will hear something from that city within a reasonable time.

Representative Gadd has been instructed by President Scott to assist our organization in Oklahoma City to secure recognition and a scale of wages with the publishers. The mailers of Oklahoma City receive less money for their labor than any other organized mailing force that I know of on the North American continent, and there is no question but what their proposition will be acted upon favorably by the publishers of Oklahoma City, as their demands are very moderate.

CHARLES N. SMITH.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The Plain Dealer has installed three stuffing machines and President Smith has been called here by the manager of the Plain Dealer to take charge and teach our members how to operate them. We are all pulling for their machine to be a success, as it will mean more work for us.

Our old scale expired May 1 and to date we have not come to a settlement on our new agreement. We were offered a small raise with conditions the same as at present. This the members could not see at all. So I expect to see our scale go to arbitration unless President Smith can get a better proposition from the publishers than has been offered us at this writing. Albert Kemp and Joe Skinker, of the Press chapel, have joined the Ohio engineers and leave for training July 15. "Boo" Mitchell is back in our fold again, working regularly on the News. Secretary T. J. Martin was elected delegate to the convention at Colorado Springs.

R. L. SIMMS.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

Despite the fact that the night was very stormy, there was a very large attendance at our last meeting in May, when John Mitchell, former president of the United Mine Workers of America and chairman of the New York State Industrial Commission, delivered a very interesting address.

At our first meeting in June a very practical address was given by Victor Ridder, publisher of the New York Staats Zeitung, through whose efforts we obtained the use of the Staats mailroom for our stamping school. As a result we now have twenty-five or thirty more stampers than we had the first of the year.

The Evening Sun will install escalators about the first of July. This will probably mean two or more situations. The Williams Printing Company has applied for the label and negotiations are now under way to give us the mailing.

The Phillips Davis Company has acquired a plant in Thirty-seventh street and expects to get established by the end of July. A new publication, Truth, is now being mailed from the Rural New Yorker, thereby giving four of our men four days a month, which will be increased as the circulation grows.

The Ottinger bill, which permitted women to work at night in printing houses, was vetoed by Governor Whitman.

Denis Gordon died since our last letter. H. C. Johnson took out a withdrawal card; C. Mitchell, E. Patrick and T. Ingram took out travelers, and J. N. McKnight deposited a traveler.

Our new by-laws, which went into effect June 1, have been distributed among the members.

Regarding the Carroll benefit, which was mentioned in our letter last month, the amount of tickets purchased was $250, instead of $2.50.

Mailers' Union No. 6 invested $2,000 in liberty bonds.

CHARLES A. GALLAGHER.

THE SECRETARY'S LETTER.

THE ANTI.

An anti-administration man is a very good thing to have around, if he be one who uses good judgment. But so many of them do not. Especially is this true when a man sets his head to be an anti in all things without taking into consideration that some of the things he is "anti-ing" against are the very same ones he was preaching for a very short time ago; and the fact that it was proposed by the administration perhaps a little later than the idea was conceived in his brain finds him still an anti even to his own brain children. Some antis try their utmost to forget that a majority of their brothers voted for and elected the administration to office, and that the best way to get an officer to do his best is to encourage him, and that nothing can be gained by giving him hindrance. The only time an anti can justify his antagonism is at election time. Then he can work for the man whom he thinks is best suited for the office. If a majority of the members still do not agree with him, why should he go on retarding the progress of his organization as much as he is able? In many cases the anti's man is elected, and that should make him an administration man, but does it? No, he is still a good many times an anti, ready to do his best to block administration measures. If he would do it in the right way there would be no cause for censure, but he goes about the blocking in a way that makes him look foolish. If the least thing does not please him he starts talking, not thinking; and he does not limit his talk to the meeting nor keep it in proper channels, but talks in barrooms, or any other public place, and does not care who hears him. When he does this he has violated the oath of his obligation and has lost caste even with himself. We put our trust in our officers when we vote for them, and we do not vote until we have looked at all sides of the question. If we do not we should, and then we vote as our conscience dictates. If we are an anti we should always remember there were more on the other side, and as two heads are better than one, also should this apply even unto the hundreds and thousands of heads. When we are antis let us not do things which we would not want antis to do when we are administration men. Yes, an anti is a good thing to have around, but silence is the best quality he can exhibit outside of meetings and at times other than election. M. R. GRAY.

KAISER BILL.

He is dreaming, only dreaming,
Tell old Kaiser Bill for me,
If he thinks his Uncle Sammy
Isn't coming o'er the sea.

We are coming; yes, we're coming,
With Jack Pershing in command;
We'll show the kaiser, who is crazy,
That no "bull" from him we'll stand.

You started, Bill, this ruthless warfare—
The worst the world has ever seen;
You've made war on wife and children,
Sinking boats with your submarine.

You used to shower us with your glory,
But now the glory's turned to hate;
When we recall the things you've done us,
Upon the nerves they grind and grate.

Oh, Kaiser Bill, oh, how I hate you—
You will wake some day to tell
That the things you've planned and painted
Have every one been shot to hell.

You are just a poor, weak monarch;
You think we do not ken your scheme,
But wait till Tommy Edison
Gets working on your submarine.

When your submarine war is ended—
Take an old fool's tip from me—
The world you started out to conquer
Is larger than your Ger-many.

You will see Old Glory waving
From the trenches, Kaiser Bill,
Just as when in years it floated
O'er Valley Forge and Bunker Hill.

When the Liberty Bell rings freedom
And the whole world starts to shout,
Oh, Kaiser Bill, you've got your fill—
We're here to surely count you out.

Honest, Willie, I'm not fooling—
This is all I'm going to say—
You had better cut your shoestrings
And be on your little way.

OFFICIAL MATTERS

THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL

ISSUED ON THE FIFTH OF EACH MONTH
AT ROOMS 640-650 NEWTON CLAYPOOL BUILDING
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

J. W. HAYS, Editor and Publisher.

Entered at the postoffice, Indianapolis, Ind., as second-class matter.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES—One dollar per annum to any part of the United States or Canada; foreign, $1.50 per annum; single copies, 10 cents each.

To insure prompt insertion, all official matter and communications should reach this office BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF THE MONTH PRECEDING PUBLICATION.

All letters and remittances should be addressed to the editor and publisher.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES AND CORRESPONDENTS.

Items for the official columns of THE JOURNAL should be prepared on a separate sheet, and the style of the paper followed as closely as possible. Such items should not be made a part of a letter dealing with other subjects, for if this is done the items are likely to be overlooked, even though the greatest care be exercised. Write as plainly as possible—especially proper names—using one side of the sheet only. All official matter must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. The observance of the foregoing will tend to insure what is desired by all—promptness and accuracy in the publication of official matter.

Communications for the correspondence department of THE JOURNAL must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. No communication will be published that does not bear the full name of the writer.

THE JOURNAL MAILING LIST.

When a member requests a change in his JOURNAL address, he should give the name and number of the union with which he is affiliated, together with his present and former address.

Additions, corrections or alterations reported by local secretaries should be kept separate from other correspondence. When a member deposits his card, and his name is reported for the subscription list, the secretary should state where the member previously received THE JOURNAL, and give the name and number of the union with which he was affiliated. When a member draws his card, is suspended or expelled, or in any manner ceases to be an active member of the local, the secretary should request that his name be dropped from the mailing list.

A large number of those who take cards and remove to unorganized towns fail to renew their cards. To prevent loss in such instances, it has been decided that members holding cards, and located outside of the jurisdiction of a local union, must either deposit their cards with the nearest union and pay dues each month, or pay International dues in advance, in order to get THE JOURNAL. Where a cardholder pays his dues to the local in advance, a specific report should be made by the secretary upon the case, in order that the name can be placed on the list and the magazine sent to the member for the time for which dues have been paid.

The 20th of each month is the latest date upon which changes for the succeeding issue can be made on our mailing list.

Upon request, secretaries will be furnished with a copy of a list of their members to whom THE JOURNAL is being sent.

All correspondence regarding THE JOURNAL should be addressed to J. W. Hays, Newton Claypool building, Indianapolis, Ind.

DELINQUENT UNIONS.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 25, 1917.

Section 1, article ix, of the constitution, requires that "International dues for each month shall be collected by subordinate unions and transferred to the secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union before the twentieth of the succeeding month." Under this law May per capita and May old age pension and mortuary assessments of all unions were due at headquarters not later than June 20. The following unions were delinquent for per capita, or the old age pension or mortuary assessments June 25, having failed to make their returns.

In this connection attention is directed to section 16, article v, of the by-laws, as follows:

"Section 16. No mortuary benefit claim shall be allowed unless the deceased was possessed of a current working card at the time of his death, nor shall a mortuary benefit claim be allowed if, at the time of death, the union of which deceased was a member was in arrears for per capita tax to the International Union."

"A THOUSAND EMS."

1887.

"The International Typographical Union of North America recommends (to establish a fund for the Home) that each compositor in its jurisdiction contribute each year the equivalent of one thousand ems."

1917.

A thousand ems—and sixty thousand—
Communicate their messages of hope or of despair:
As Fate—impassive ever—the printer, deft and clever,
Composed his thousand ems to build his castle in the air.
What message did they carry? Did they speak in tenderness?
Did they lift a soul to higher things? Did they soothe a heart's distress?
Or did they speak in thunder tones within the minds of men
And stir a resolution to bring to life again
The glory of forgotten days, when this great land was new,
When men struck hands for liberty, and every man was true?
We do not know—we do but guess; but this we know full well:
The castle has come down to earth, and dwellers in it tell
Of those who set the thousand ems and dreamed of what now is—
To some a little mound, maybe, is all each holds as his.
What of it? Let him not be mourned, but lifted up for aye;
He did his work in life right well—and man was born to die!
Exult! The printer dreamed a dream and made his dreaming real:
The castle stands in verdured grace, and ever shall reveal
Intrinsic worth is not disclosed in men like worth in gems,
But memory holds him glorified who "set his thousand ems."

A. H. McQuilkin.

MASTER AND MAN.

The trumpet has sounded, its notes ring out clear,
Over mountain and valley, woodland and stream,
While the soldiers of Freedom are bending their ear
To the clarion call of Labor's proud dream.
Then, harken, ye masters on non-union labor,
The printers are gathering once more in the west;
They'll gird on their armor, renouncing all favor,
Voting Right against Might—the cause they love best.

For sixty-two years they have faithfully endeavored
To adjust all disputes between Master and Man,
Knowing their relations would never be severed
While mutually maintained on Unity's plan.
At each yearly meeting of the typos' convention
They have faithfully tried to meet ev'ry demand
Submitted to them, without serious contention,
Applauding each effort—each praiseworthy stand.

Now, in this time of turmoil, with war decimating
The proud land of the Briton and beautiful France,
They will heartily greet you, and without hesitating,
Sign mutual contracts for Labor's advance.
The days of oppression are gradually dwindling
Into fathomless gloom, while Hope stands out bright,
And friendship and love are daily enkindling
The heart of the Master for Man's inherent right.

All praise to the master who will patiently listen
To Labor's demand without insult or sneer;
His name in the annals of Labor will glisten
Far brighter than that of king, kaiser or peer.
The printers were first to set the example
Of just arbitration, without clique or clan,
And this is their motto—while others would trample
On mutual contracts between Master and Man.

The conflict of Labor with the caste of proud Might
Has been laughed at by millions all over our land;
And while we believed we were both in the right,
That for which we have fought seems now near at hand.
The age of distrust and foolish dissension
Have vanished forever on Liberty's wings;
United we'll stand at our sixty-third convention,
When we meet here in August—Colorado Springs.

Every Line in this Mammoth Catalog a Slug Line

Every line under 18-point in this 1000-page Montgomery Ward Catalog was set on the Linotype by the Hall Printing Company of Chicago. The larger display lines were produced by two operators with two Ludlow Typographs as fast as eighty men required the slugs for assembling and "make-up."

All-Slug Composition Is Economically Right

Linotype-Ludlow All-Slug Composition, as practised by the Hall Printing Company, dispenses with nearly all individual type—

Which means a saving in floor space of at least 40%.

It makes possible automatic re-casting of lines for multiforms—

Which reduces press runs and press wear, and eliminates the cost of duplicate composition or electrotyping.

It cuts out the waste of distribution—

Which makes every hour in the composing-room a productive hour.

And it effects many other short cuts to profit.

Reports of officers of the International Typographical Union for the fiscal year ending May 31, last, which are published as a supplement to this issue of THE JOURNAL, mark another period of marvelous progress in the history of the organization. The membership has increased 1,119 over the previous year, the earnings of the membership were almost four million dollars more than the year preceding, and there are now twelve more subordinate unions in the jurisdiction than there were at the close of the fiscal year on May 31, 1916.

The report of President Scott breathes optimism in every line. Figures are given showing scale increases in many towns and cities, and strike expenses were reduced to a minimum figure, being the smallest shown in any report during the past fifteen years. Money paid out during the year for strike benefits and special assistance amounted to only $12,281.35. Nothing further need be said in favor of the principle of arbitration as a method of adjusting disputes between the union and the publishers. These figures are the last word in the argument. The arbitration agreement now in force between the union and a large body of the employers in the book and job branch will show equal pleasing and advantageous results in succeeding reports. In practically every instance where disputes between the publisher and the union were submitted to arbitration the union benefited in the adjustment.

President Scott devotes a portion of his section to a discussion of the amendment to the constitution which Chicago Typographical Union No. 16 desires to be enacted. Quotations are printed from a number of scale contracts throughout the country which absolutely conflict with the proposed amendment which No. 16 terms a law which will prohibit the signing of "open-shop" agreements in the future. Among a large number of such contracts in force are those of New York No. 6, Cincinnati No. 3, Houston No. 87, Fort Worth No. 198, Dallas No. 173, Galveston No. 28, Duluth No. 136. These are only a few; there are many others.

President Scott pays a deserved compliment to the representatives of the International Union, and quotes a number of letters received from officers of local unions which have had assistance and advice from the representatives, commending them for their business sagacity and foresight and for the service rendered in negotiating wage scales and adjusting other union matters that are bound to arise occasionally in the best-regulated trade union bodies. The president also discusses our relations with the American Federation of Labor, and he warns officers of local unions to be continually on guard in protecting our interests whenever the federation's laws are violated and ignored and the principles of the International Union thus jeopardized.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Vice-President Barrett's services during the year consisted of assisting in scale negotiations in various jurisdictions and time spent at headquarters performing routine work in the president's department.

Vice-President Miller, who is the general secretary of the German Typographia, reports several scale increases in the German branch. Work has been fair during the year, but, on account of the war, this official says that no one can foretell what the future has in store for the German Typographia, "an organization that during the last forty-four years has battled manfully for the cause of labor."

Vice-President Smith, also president of the Mailers' Trade District Union, tells of a number of successful wage negotiations, in which working conditions were bettered and pay advanced. This official also goes into the merits of certain mechanical devices that are being installed in mailing departments, and states that so far the union mailers have been able to control the situation successfully.

SECRETARY-TREASURER.

Secretary-Treasurer Hays' report consists of statistical matter compiled in such a way that it is easily comprehended. Receipts for the year reached the enormous total of $1,090,362.87, with expenditures of $1,022,982.34. Interest on the various funds amounted to $35,086.34 for the year. There was an increase of $26,190.95 in the general fund, $40,057.98 in the mortuary fund, and a decrease of $425.15 in the pension fund. The last-named item appears notwithstanding the interest accruing to the pension fund during the year amounted to $23,282.75.

The secretary-treasurer shows that by reducing the size of THE JOURNAL, as authorized by the Baltimore convention, the subscription price—60 cents per year per member—produces a revenue which about equals the expenditure. But whether this condition will continue is problematical. Each month sees the cost of everything entering into the production of a magazine mounting higher and higher, and to this will be added an increase in second-class postage. The secretary-treasurer is also of the opinion that the price of union water-marked paper, on which THE JOURNAL is printed, is beyond all reason. Only two mills can furnish this product, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that advantage is taken of this condition to boost the price to people who necessarily must use it.

Assessments on the earnings of the members paid into the pension and mortuary funds each month give an accurate estimate of their yearly income. For the fiscal year the average yearly wage amounted to $1,086.43, compared with $1,041.18 for the previous year. The total increase of earnings for the year reached nearly four million dollars. While few persons will admit that wage increases are keeping pace with the constantly advancing cost in the necessities of life, nevertheless advances in pay of our members will compare favorably with increases secured by other trade unions.

The secretary-treasurer places especial emphasis on the receipts and expenditures of the mortuary and pension funds. There was a healthy increase in the first-named fund, but it is urged that no change be made in the laws governing this benefit at this time. It is pointed out that a thousand of our members are already serving in the cause of the entente allies, and the coming year will see this number increased enormously. While we do not like to consider an increase in the death rate through our members enlisting in the war to establish democracy throughout the world, nevertheless the vicissitudes of a world-wide conflict compels us to prepare for all eventualities. What changes the next few years will witness no one can accurately determine.

But the old age pension question is an entirely different matter. Conventions in the past have refused to heed the admonition of the International officers when they insisted that this fund should be safeguarded in every way possible. Expenditures have now reached a point, in the opinion of Secretary-Treasurer Hays, where any extension in the scope of the law would be suicidal, and he urges the Colorado Springs convention to adopt measures that will protect the fund, which decreased the past year, and which will doubtless show a further decrease at the end of the next twelve months.

The membership showed a healthy growth during the year, more than eleven hundred new members being added to the roll. Twenty-four charters for new unions were issued during the year and twelve were surrendered or suspended, leaving a total of 766 subordinate bodies, including thirty-nine mailers' unions, nineteen German, four newswriters' and one composed of typefounders.

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

The section comprising the report of the executive council includes decisions affecting the administration of the mortuary and old age pension funds, the minutes of the sessions of the National Board of Arbitration and the Board of Governors of the International Allied Printing Trades Association. A list of the bonds, with the rate of interest, in which a greater portion of the funds of the organization are invested, is published in full. The council applied for $50,000 worth of the liberty loan bonds, but notification has since been received that only bonds of the value of $30,000 would be allotted in the apportionment of the loan by the treasury department. The new arbitration agreement, effective August 4 (the present month), with the Closed Shop Division of the United Typothetæ and Franklin Clubs of America, appears in the executive council's report, also a list of the arbitration contracts in force between the International Union and the various newspapers of the country.

REPRESENTATIVES.

Seventeen representatives' reports are printed in the book. About half were employed continuously during the year in work for the organization. A knowledge of the nature of the activities of these men will explain the small number of strikes in the jurisdiction during the year. We believe the membership will agree that it is a better business method to settle disputes through conciliation than it is to pay out money for strike benefits and incur expenditures in attempting to gain our point through drastic measures. Employers have come to realize that a contract with the International Typographical Union means exactly what its terms set forth, and are always ready to meet our representatives to talk business in a business way.

APPRENTICE COMMITTEE.

Encouraging progress was made during the year in making effective methods of educating apprentices. Most of the new contracts now made between employers and the union embody clauses that insures the boy a proper knowledge of the trade when he has finished his term of apprenticeship. A new course of instruction by mail has been tentatively arranged, which will be ready for use on the first of January next. This course will be owned absolutely by the International Union and will be operated from headquarters. The first course, as is well known, was operated in connection with the Inland Printer technical school, Chicago, Ill. The apprentice committee of the International Union is co-operating with a similar committee of the United Typothetæ. It is recommended by the committee that local unions have a clause incorporated in all wage agreements requiring apprentices to take the union's course of instruction before being admitted to journeymen membership.

A. F. OF L. DELEGATES.

The report of the delegates to the Baltimore convention of the American Federation of Labor covers the important business of that session. Delegate Morrison dissents from the action of the other four members of the delegation in voting against an increase in per capita tax for the purpose of financing a legal department of the national labor body.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH COMMITTEE.

Nothing has so far been accomplished along the lines of governmental ownership of the telegraph and telephone service, so long advocated by our parent body. The standing committee in Washington calls the attention of the membership to the fact that some four years ago the present postmaster general recommended the taking over of the wire monopoly of the country, and has reaffirmed his stand in each subsequent annual report to congress. So far no appreciable progress has been made toward the government taking over the service. The committee says there is practically nothing to do but watch patiently, and when the time is opportune present to congress facts which we have at our disposal.

UNION PRINTERS HOME.

Superintendent Daley shows that this great institution is in the best of condition, and that there were more residents sojourning there during the past year than in any similar period in its history. The new addition just completed will accommodate thirty or more residents, and will take care of those on the usually long waiting list. The total expenditures of the institution, including the cost of building the new wing, were $156,726.69. The regular Home bills, however, totaled only $117,102.64. The residents were domiciled in about equal number in the main building and sanatorium.

Three doctors and seven trained nurses are at the command of the residents who need medical attention. One of the doctors is a specialist in tuberculosis, one a general practitioner, and the third a specialist in the treatment of the eyes, ears, nose and throat. When necessary the services of other physicians are employed. It will thus be seen that our members at the Home receive the best of attention in every way.

JOHN D. DINGELL, a member of Detroit Mailers' Union No. 40, recently returned to his home after a residence of two years at the Union Printers Home. In addressing the members of his local union at the June session stress was laid by Mr. Dingell on the great benefits of the union to be derived at so small a cost, and praised the good work the institution was doing for those members who were in need of its health-restoring features.

The Committee on Laws.

President Scott has appointed the following delegates to serve on the committee on laws at the Colorado Springs convention:

John P. Keating, Milwaukee Union No. 23.
Philip Johnson, San Francisco Union No. 21.
John F. Murphy, Providence Union No. 33.
Howard Keener, Tucson Union No. 465.
Thomas W. Johns, New York Union No. 6.
R. L. Woody, Richmond Union No. 90.
Robert Elliott, Toronto Union No. 91.

The committee will meet at the Hotel Acacia, Colorado Springs, Colo., Tuesday, August 7, at 10 A. M., to organize and proceed with the consideration of all propositions and amendments to the laws that will be brought before the session which convenes on the following Monday, in the Temple theater.

The Necessity for Vigilance.

Eternal vigilance is as much a necessity now as when it was said to be the price of liberty, and in these times of stress and turmoil it is as necessary to keep the world safe for democracy as it is to make it safe for democracy.

In these words James M. Lynch, industrial commissioner of the state of New York, punctuated an eulogy which he pronounced in memory of Thomas J. Carroll at the convention of the New York State Allied Printing Trades Council at Syracuse last month.

Using Mr. Carroll's loyalty to his friends, his union and to organized labor in general as a basis, Commissioner Lynch spoke briefly of the outlook for organized labor in these days of stress, saying, in part:

What of the night, you leaders of labor? Is the right to combine safe? May we go on with our usual activities confident that you our sentinels are pacing your weary rounds ever wakeful and ever vigilant to the end that the fruit of years of sacrifice and toil may not be pilfered from the tree of organization?

No administrator is charged in respect to the guardianship of hard-won progress with greater responsibilities than is the trade union official. He stands between capital and labor. He mediates on the one side and conciliates on the other. He knows full well that one false step on his part may mean the disruption of his union. He knows temperaments, conditions and obstacles, and he must be prepared and able to as resolutely combat overconfidence and radicalism among his own followers as he will, when convinced that it is necessary, fight with every weapon at his control for wages, hours and conditions.

He must be prepared to patiently bear with the malignity, the sneers and the ill-advised opposition of his own people while he steers his ship of state among dangers and difficulties, as well as he must expect to encounter and overcome the promotion of that kind of discontent by those who are often the loudest proponents in the local unions and eventually found to be in the service and the pay of the very employers with whom the harassed and assaulted labor leader is attempting to negotiate and concurrently maintain industrial peace.

In conclusion Commissioner Lynch paid an eloquent tribute to the memory of Mr. Carroll, whose life was styled as "one long chapter of devotion to the cause of the toilers." Others bore witness to the esteem in which Mr. Carroll was held in organized labor circles.

Printing in Holland.

Newspapers and periodical publications in general have practically no evidence of a scarcity of printing paper in Holland on account of the war. Daily newspapers usually have a morning and an evening edition every day excepting Sunday, when there is no evening edition. The only observable economy now practiced is the suspension of the Monday morning edition, by direction of the government. This was done with a view to economy in fuel.

There also seems to be no scarcity of paper for book printing in Holland.

Figures show a substantial decrease of all except periodical books in the year when the war broke out. As the next year, 1915, showed an increase which was maintained in 1916, it is evident that the decrease in 1914 was due to the panicky condition and the general uncertainty immediately following the beginning of hostilities.

In normal times about 80 per cent of the printing paper used in Holland was made there and 20 per cent imported from Germany. Now the import from Germany is only 5 to 10 per cent of the total consumption, the rest being made locally. There is no present scarcity of paper in Holland, and no prospect of any unless the shortage of fuel reduces the production of it.

Damages for Lead-Poisoning.

The Supreme Court of Illinois has awarded $8,000 as compensation in a case of death from occupational lead-poisoning. Mary V. Sheetz was a compositor in the printing department of the International Harvester Company. She contracted lead-poisoning in the course of her employment and died. Suit was brought in behalf of her estate under the occupational diseases act and the liability of the company affirmed by the circuit court, the appellate court, and finally by the supreme court. This judgment has aroused wide interest, since there have been few awards for occupational diseases, such as lead, wood alcohol, and mercury poisoning and anthrax. In view of the many sickness hazards in industry and the large number of victims who never secure compensation, it is being suggested that full protection of the workers requires a public system of universal health insurance to provide medical care and cash benefits as well as to stimulate measures of prevention.

Dallas Union's Successful Fight.

The city charter of Dallas, Texas, provides that in all work done for or by the city, either by day work or by contract, eight hours shall constitute a day's work. For several years the trade unions in Dallas, and particularly those of the printing trades, have tried to have this clause enforced. Repeated protests have been made to the various officials, but without much success. Finally the union representatives, tired of going to the city hall, only to meet with rebuffs, decided it was time to change their mode of procedure. As is usually the case, it remained for the printers to take up the gauge of battle, and the several printing trade unions were enlisted in the cause. One of the best attorneys in the city was employed in the case, and an opinion was secured from the city attorney which upheld the contention of the unions on every point.

For years the bulk of the city printing has been going into non-union houses where a nine-hour day prevailed. Union concerns operating on an eight-hour basis were unable to meet the prices of those who worked their employes a longer day. The opinion of the city attorney makes it clear that the printing trade unions have accomplished all that they started out to accomplish, and from now on it will be incumbent on the city purchasing agent, in asking bids for printing, to make the requirement in the specifications that eight hours shall constitute a day's work in the performance of such contract. The decision will force all the printing houses of Dallas on an equal basis, so far as bidding for printing is concerned.

Uncle Sam's Price for Paper.

Summary action has been taken by the United States government to secure for its use news print paper at a price considerably lower than that which it was offered through so-called competitive bids and at a private offering. In brief, the government officials believed that they were being held up, and therefore caused the paper to be furnished at the price—$2.50 per hundred—which the Federal Trade Commission decided was reasonable.

The government has invoked the national defense act to bring the paper company to terms, and this being the first time the act has been invoked along this line, it is believed that the precedent set is a very important one.

World Gives Soldiers Full Pay.

Forty-three men from the various departments of the New York World have enlisted in some branch of the army or navy. Some of the men were members of military organizations before the state of war with Germany was declared; others hastened to enlist at the first intimation that men were needed. And that these might be encouraged all the more to "do their bit" for the nation, a notice was posted on the bulletin board of every department of the World and the Evening World which said that "any men who may be called into active service in the national guard, naval militia, army or navy reserves, or who may volunteer for service in these organizations, will have the difference between their federal pay and their World salaries, for the duration of the war, made up to them by the World in every case where their federal pay is less than their World salaries."

Arbitration With the Typothetæ.

By a majority of 12,475 the union printers of the United States and Canada have given emphatic endorsement to the peace pact plan that prevents strikes and lockouts in the book and job end of this big industry. The result of the recent referendum vote shows that a vast majority of our membership is in favor of establishing the law upon the books of the International Typographical Union. Under its provisions the offices under the control of the Closed Shop Division of the United Typothetæ and the International Typographical Union will in the future settle all disputes by means of permanent arbitration and mediation boards, no lockout or strike to ensue during the period of negotiations. The agreement as adopted is similar to that now in force with the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. It is effective August 4 (the present month).

A Letter From the Front.

Members of the International Typographical Union, individually and through the medium of their local unions, are doing everything possible to establish the principles contended for by our government in its struggle against military despotism and autocracy, and have proved that, if it becomes necessary to make further sacrifices in order that the principles contended for shall prevail, they are ready and willing to assume whatever share of the burden is their portion. Members of this organization are heart and soul in their determination to help crush a government which breaks its treaties and murders an innocent neutral nation; a government which systematically and repeatedly bombards unfortified towns and villages, killing hundreds of innocent women and children; a government which torpedoes unarmed passenger ships; a government which in cold blood executes a woman nurse like Miss Cavell. Hundreds of our members are now fighting this autocracy and hundreds more are to follow.

Up to the present time most of our members on the firing line are citizens of Canada and with troops of that country. From time to time letters have appeared in the correspondence columns of THE JOURNAL from Canadian unions depicting experiences in the war zone in France, all of them interesting as well as enlightening. Vice-President Barrett received a letter from T. G. Rothwell, 116th Canadians, dated "Somewhere in France," June 2, 1917, giving a vivid account of his part in "helping to smash and muzzle the wild beast not only of Europe, but the world." Extracts from the letter follow:

You little comprehend how much pleasure it gives me to write you a few lines from this war-ridden country. I have been over here since last summer. I left Canada last August and after a short sojourn in England was sent across here to the actual scene of hostilities. As you know, my experiences have been varied and many, but they all fade into insignificance when compared with the "great and only experience" of doing one's bit for civilization, democracy and freedom. Little did I dream when "doing the rounds" in good old Canada and the United States that within a short period I would be over in France helping to smash and muzzle the wild beast not only of Europe but the world. Time works wonders. I have seen much over here which has been instrumental in considerably changing my views of life in general. "The fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man" has never been played by the enemy in this country. He has ruthlessly devastated and destroyed everything he has put his stained and guilty hands upon, even to the church of God. He has defiled womanhood, murdered children and old men; exiled those able to work to Germany and compelled them to work on death-dealing missiles to kill their fellow countrymen. He has broken all laws of God and man and ignored all national treaties and called them "scraps of paper." Where must it end, you may ask? You and I, possessed of some intelligence, know that right, liberty and freedom can only be achieved with the extermination of the murderers, junkers and thieves of Germany. What do you think of your fellow countrymen over here in the battle line? They are great troops; they know how to fight. It matters not whether they come from Toronto, Hamilton, Vancouver or little Brampton, which you are proud to call your home town. The Canadians have done big things over here. They have made history and undying fame for Canada and themselves. I know you Canadians who have lived in the United States and have accomplished "big things" for many years for yourselves and your fellow men were proud you sprang from a race whose sons won the greatest battle of the war to date. The press say we have surprised the world. Perhaps so, but we have not surprised ourselves. Were you to see the great, strong, strategic place held by the enemy, the significance of our great victory would reveal itself far more clearly to you. You would then be far more enlightened on the battle and what it stands for than the meager description of a fellow with a limited vocabulary. I was one of the proudest Canadian soldiers in France after April 9. Believe me, our efforts are worthy and worth while.

Now to the point that interests you very much. I am pleased and proud to know I am doing my "bit" with over six hundred members of our union (the great International Typographical Union) in the ranks. Many are officers, whom I know personally—Major Allan Stroud, for instance. Now that the United States has come in with us, there will no doubt be found in the rank and file of the American forces many printers. I have met quite a few American typos here in the Canadian army and was proud to call them brothers in arms, as well as brothers in unionism. I have met many of these same boys on my various trips in the good old U. S. A., some in job shops, others in newspaper offices. Yet we meet again fighting for the great cause of liberty, freedom and equal rights, which our grand old union has advocated and stood for all these years. Let me tell you the union printer boys here doing their "bit" for right over might are to be commended and are worthy sons of the great democratic countries we sprang from.

Printing Trades Pledge Loyalty.

Fifty thousand wage-earners engaged in the printing and allied trades in New York state, through their delegates to the annual convention of the New York State Allied Printing Trades Council in session at Syracuse last month, pledged their loyalty to President Wilson and congress, their services on the battle front, or in any other way demanded to aid in the successful culmination of the great world war.

Industrial Commissioner James M. Lynch, chairman of the resolutions committee of the council, introduced the resolution, which was carried unanimously by a standing vote. The resolution traced the activities of the men in the printing trades in all wars that have enveloped this country from the revolution, through the war of 1812, the Mexican war, the war of the rebellion and the Spanish-American war. Their action is written large in the history of these struggles, the resolution pointed out, which says, in part:

In the name of and in behalf of 50,000 allied wage-earners we pledge our loyalty, support and service on the battle front and in every other way that we may be of assistance to the limit of our endurance and capacity, to the president and congress, as the representatives of our ideals, in the direction and guidance of our country in its part in the great world war, and we express our conviction that no lasting peace will result until autocracy and all it represents is crushed and militarism and its apostles are made the servants instead of the masters of the nations that are contending against us and that are responsible for the holocaust of ruin and devastation.

Globe Litho Employes' Dividend.

On June 5 the employes of the Globe Lithographing Company, 186 West Fourth street, New York city, received their first profit-sharing dividend. Last Christmas the company presented each employe with 10 per cent of their salary for the week (thirty persons participating), and at that time the management informed their employes that whenever conditions warranted at the end of any one quarter, they would distribute a part of their profits to their employes, who take this opportunity of expressing their appreciation of this voluntary gift. The officers of the company are: T. K. Gardner, president; L. L. Blue, vice-president (a member of No. 6), and Anton W. Klika, secretary-treasurer. These gentlemen went further and stood sponsor for $1,250 worth of liberty bonds bought by employes. A day's pay has been pledged by the employes and office staff.

Seattle Hits the I. W. W.

Organized labor in Seattle, Wash., while rather late in its action, has officially condemned the Industrial Workers of the World and everything that notorious tribe stands for. On May 16 the Seattle Central Labor Council adopted resolutions that prove that organized labor of that city has simply been contributing to its own destruction in recognizing the I. W. W. anarchists and assisting them morally and financially whenever they ran amuck of the law. The following are the resolutions in full:

Whereas, The organization known as the Industrial Workers of the World was recently engaged in a most important fight in the courts of this state, involving the right of free speech and defense against criminal persecution upon the part of enemies of organized labor; and,

Whereas, The importance of these cases prompted many organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor to come to the aid of this so-called organization with both moral and financial support, and to refrain from any act which might cause friction or in any way embarrass the defense; and,

Whereas, The Industrial Workers of the World, while gladly accepting the aid so generously given, have taken advantage of the splendid spirit shown by American Federation of Labor organizations, by putting forth increased efforts to organize dual unions to those already in existence throughout this state; and,

Whereas, The trials aforementioned having now been brought to a satisfactory close, it behooves organized labor of this community to make clear its position with regard to the Industrial Workers of the World; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Central Labor Council of Seattle and vicinity, recognizing that the American Federation of Labor is big enough and broad enough to embrace all those who toil, and that its policies are subject to change according to the will of its membership, regards all other organizations representing crafts embraced by the American Federation of Labor as dual organizations, tending toward anything but solidarity; and, further, be it

Resolved, That this council call upon all those yet unorganized to beware of organizations that hold out high-sounding yet empty promises, tearing down rather than building up, and urge them to affiliate with the American Federation of Labor, which is recognized the world over as the organization representing the workers of America; and further, be it

Resolved, That hereafter this council refuse to issue credentials to representatives of the Industrial Workers of the World to visit unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor for the purpose of soliciting moral or financial assistance or carrying on their propaganda; and further, be it

Resolved, That this council recommend that local unions having no such provision in their constitutions take such steps as are necessary to bar their members from holding membership in any dual organization to their local union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, through which agency they can fully protect their interests and bring about improved conditions in a sane, orderly and effective manner.

THE JOURNAL is glad to see the Seattle Union Record take a firm stand for the legitimate labor movement of the country as opposed to the iconoclastic gang that has in the last few years been able to attract a large amount of attention to itself in the public print.

"Big Six" Aids Recruiting.

A finer spirit of patriotism does not exist anywhere than has been shown by the union printers of the country in the present crisis. This patriotism has been shown in various ways, by enlistments in the army and navy, by the purchase of liberty loan bonds, donating to the Red Cross, and activities in other ways that are necessary to the prosecution of the war. The New York Evening Sun of July 7 contains an account of the "Big Six" rally at the Midday Minute Men recruiting station in the big city. The rally attracted wide attention, and is one of the best boosts the International and "Big Six" have received in a long time. The Sun's account follows:

"Big Six" turned out for the colors today. Stimulated by the Big Six band, Typographical Union No. 6, representing more than 8,000 members, held a rousing recruiting rally at the headquarters of the Midday Minute Men, 57 Chambers street, today. On the platform besides the band were uniformed members of the union who have already joined the army and navy. Several hundred persons squeezed in to hear Leon H. Rouse, president of "Big Six," and William P. Burr, assistant corporation counsel.

Joseph Johnson, president of the Midday Minute Men, in opening the meeting, referred to "Big Six" as "the champion labor union of the world." Many men, he said, have attempted to fight them, but nobody yet has ever "licked" them, and inasmuch as "Big Six" had never yet turned out in a cause except that which was right he was especially glad to welcome them there today.

Mr. Rouse declared that it was time to let the people of New York city know where union labor stands "in this great struggle for the right, and it is proper for union labor to come here and do it." He said that the printer had always played a great part in the battles for human liberty. As great members of the trade who had been thus potent he named Benjamin Franklin and Horace Greeley, who was the first president of Typographical Union No. 6.

The union already has more than 100 men enrolled in the military service and is out to increase this rapidly, and subscribed $5,000 to the liberty loan. Individual chapels within the union subscribed much more—one reached a total of $14,000—while the International Union took $50,000 worth of liberty bonds.

"Why are we printers here today?" demanded Mr. Rouse. "Because, in the words of Congressman Heflin in the course of the debate on the declaration of war, 'if we do not engage in this, then we are the degenerate sons of a strong race.' Likewise we, as printers, if we do not take some part in this struggle for freedom, are the degenerate sons of a strong ancestry.

"The scripture says that God created the Heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is. But in no place can you find that God created any man to rule by divine right and who could mark off any section of the ocean and forbid any American to cross it!"

The speaker predicted that there would be no peace until the mailed fist of German autocracy was broken, and he advised all his hearers as they left the meeting to pass through City Hall Park and read the inscription upon the statue of Nathan Hale.

Mr. Burr, after apologizing for the fact that he himself was too old to enlist, delivered a broadside against the law of German autocracy. "We know no such law here," he said, "and when we get through with this war there will be no such law known upon the earth. All men are created equal, and if we fail, then liberty throughout the world will fall." He prophesied that the democracy of the future will be born in the trenches of Europe.

President Johnson and the officers of the Midday Minute Men made an earnest appeal for members for the organization from men who are exempt from military service.

Union Wins an Important Suit.

A decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, rendered a few weeks ago, before adjournment for the summer vacation, is of the greatest importance to organized labor, as the much-discussed Clayton injunction law was involved. The decision was in a suit filed about seven years ago in the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York by a number of lumber manufacturing companies against the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, its officers and divers minor officials. An injunction was asked, but an interpretation of the Clayton law by the court was in favor of the union.

The suit was begun and carried to its conclusion by the attorneys of the American Anti-Boycott Association, which had conducted the Danbury hatters' and the Buck's stove cases. They claimed that they were entitled to judgment the same as in the Danbury hatters' case, declaring that the activities of the carpenters in law paralleled the actions of the Danbury hatters.

Frank Duffy, general secretary of the carpenters' brotherhood and editor of its official magazine, goes extensively into the case in its last issue. The records show that when Justice Hughes left the bench to run as a candidate for the presidency in June, 1916, the court ordered a reargument, as several changes had occurred on the bench. This reargument took place before the United States Supreme Court on October 24 and 25, 1916. It is thus seen that the court had the case under consideration for more than two years. The court, although divided, ruled in favor of the carpenters on the point that under the Sherman anti-trust act a private party could not sue for injunction. The remedy for such a person was to apply to the attorney-general and have him institute a suit for injunction. He could sue himself, in an action at law to recover damages, as was done in the Danbury hatters' case. Regarding the point as to who should sue for such injunction, and notably in connection with the new Clayton act, which is amendatory of the Sherman law, the judges differed widely in their deductions.

Fostoria (Ohio) Union No. 475 has closed the office of the Gray Printing Company to union men. This order became effective July 1, 1917, and the union desires that it be given the widest publicity and that our members act accordingly.

Garner Bramwood, 21 years of age, only son of J. W. Bramwood, for thirteen years secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union, reported for duty July 19 at Newport, R. I., as able seaman in the United States navy. The young man is an active member of Indianapolis Typographical Union No. 1.

While there will be no tournament held this year, baseball interest among our members in the east will not be allowed to lag. The Boston and New York teams of the Union Printers' National Baseball League —which, by the way, is the largest in the country—will play two games for the benefit of the Red Cross fund. The first game will be played on Ebbets Field in Brooklyn on Monday, August 6, and on the following Monday the teams will cross bats in Boston.

The news print crisis Great Britain faces is the most acute in its history. Owing to the shortage of bottoms, occasioned by U-boat operations, many conversion mills in England have ceased operations, the available ships being used for the carrying of food supplies and munitions. As there is no prospect for alleviation, a further reduction in the size of England's newspapers is believed to be inevitable. Paper that before the war could be purchased for 2 cents a pound now brings 9 cents.

INCREASES IN SCALES

BOOK and job men at Los Angeles, Cal., are now getting $25 per week, under an agreement running for eighteen months. This is an increase of $1 a week.

A FLAT scale for both newspaper and book and job work has been arranged for the members of Astoria (Ore.) Union No. 682, with an increase of $3 per week over the old wage.

CLEVELAND MAILERS' UNION No. 12 has increased the foremen's wages $7 per week and the journeymen and assistant foremen $3 per week. Vice-President Smith participated in the negotiations.

MACHINE operators at Sheridan, Wyo., receive $2 per week more and all others $3 per week additional, under a contract running one year, negotiated by No. 264 with the employers of that jurisdiction.

BOOK and job men at Newark, N. J., now have a scale providing for $25 per week for handmen and $26 for machine operators, with an agreement running for five years. This is an increase of $1 and $2 per week, respectively.

A TOTAL advance in wages aggregating $2.50 per week for members of Burlington (Iowa) Union No. 75 has been negotiated. On July 1 $1.50 was added, and on the same date in 1918 and 1919 50 cents more per week will be added.

BOOK and job printers at Waco, Texas, get a substantial increase in wages, according to an agreement covering a period of two years. Operators' pay is advanced $1.20 per week, foremen $2 this year and $1.50 next, and hand compositors $1.50 this year and $1 next.

SECRETARY MYERS, of Camden (N. J.) Union No. 132, in a letter of June 23, says: "Find copies of new scale agreements signed by employing printers of Camden with the assistance of Organizer McLoughlin. The provisions of the new scale give us a dollar increase all around, which the employers have been paying since January 22, 1917, when the old scale expired."

SOME time ago Peoria Typographical Union appointed a scale committee to draw up a new working agreement and wage scale and present the same to the job proprietors. The contract as finally signed will be in force for two years, and starts January 1, 1918, at which time the scale will be increased $2.40 a week, making the wage $21.60 a week. On January 1, 1919, the second increase of $2.40 will go into effect, making the Peoria scale $24 per week.

IN a letter received from W. R. Hickman, delegate from Louisville, he says: "The newspaper scale adopted by the union and signed by the proprietors gives the day men an increase of $2 for forty-eight hours and the night men an increase of $2.40 for forty-eight hours, and back pay from May 1, as the matter went to local arbitration. Those of our members who do not believe in arbitration, I am satisfied, will not have to be forced to take this back pay. The newspaper scale here now is $26 on the afternoon papers and $28.80 on the morning papers."

REPRESENTATIVE HAYES assisted Clarksburg (W. Va.) Union to negotiate a new scale for all newspaper and job offices which provides for an increase of $2 a week this year, $1 next year, and one additional dollar the third year on the day side. The new scale this year reads $21 for hand compositors and $23 for operators on the day side, and $23 for handmen and $26 for operators on the night side. Operators receive $1 in addition for caring for their machines.

EAST LIVERPOOL (OHIO) UNION No. 318 succeeded in raising the minimum scale $1 per week, making it read $22.60 for all newspaper and job office employes on the day side and $25 per week for all members who work at night. Next year an additional dollar will be added to the scale, which was signed for three years. Representative Hayes assisted the union in the negotiations.

REPRESENTATIVE DRURY, in a letter of July 7, states: "Montreal has just signed up a new job scale, carrying with it an increase of $4 per week; a change of from $20 to $24 per week for two years; it is the same increase as took place in Toronto two weeks ago, and I understand that Ottawa is sure of the same terms."

MEMBERS of Typographical Union No. 45, Leavenworth, Kan., employed on newspapers have secured an increase of $1 per week, and those in the book and job offices $1.50 per week. This makes the scale $22 on morning papers, $20.50 on evening papers, and $19 in the job shops.

* * *

NIGHT workers at Uniontown, Pa., have a raise in wages totaling $2.25 per week, while the day men are advanced $2, under the terms of a three-year contract. The increase is divided in three installments.

ON July 1 an increase of $2 per week all around became effective for members of Boone (Iowa) Union No. 381, and on June 30, next year, another increase of $1 per week will take place.

THE newspaper scale at Nashville, Tenn., has been advanced $1.50 per week, with several weeks' back pay. Representative Hanson assisted No. 20 in securing the new agreement.

THE MACHINE THAT RAN BACKWARD.

I was reminded the other night, while working "all by my lonelies" in a book office, when my linotype motor went "dead," of a story that is being told of my old friend, Al P. (Al P. is not his name, but for obvious reasons will answer the purpose.) Al is addicted to "hitting 'em up" once in a while, and it was while recovering from one of his "spells" that an insistent request came in for his services on a "hurry-up" job in a certain book office. Al didn't like the idea very well, but concluded to call around and "look it over." The foreman was there and explained the copy and the occasion, saying that as he was shorthanded, he would himself have to work about half the night to catch up with the work, so that Al would not have occasion to get lonesome and he would consider it a personal favor if Al would "go to it." Al specified that he was far from fit, but would do the best he could.

Well, Al started in and for about an hour things went swimmingly, especially Al's head, then, quite suddenly, there was a "zizz" and a "bang" and the mill quit grinding. Al, hope illuminating his features, after a cursory examination to discover the cause of the stoppage, reported to the foreman that the motor had burned out, and as he was not enough of an electrician to repair the thing, he guessed he would have to stop. But the foreman dashed his hopes to the discard when he said he would call up a machinist from another office and have him put things to rights, meantime pleading with Al to "stick around" and finish the night. Al at length consented to "give her another trial," and they awaited the appearance of the machinist.

In the course of time their man arrived and, after examination, reported something wrong with the armature, and he could not fix it, but suggested that at his office there was a spare motor which he would lend to them until they could have the injured one repaired. His offer was received by Al with gloom and despair, but by the foreman with "glad acclaim."

The substitute motor was duly installed and as the machinist had meanwhile received another emergency call, he "beat it" as soon as he had connected up the wires. Al, his heart in his tan oxfords, resignedly sat down at the keyboard, with the idea predominant that he would surely die before morning. But what t'ell was this? He looked again, then got up, went to the cooler and got a drink of water, flushed his eyes, braced up and went to have another look. There was no mistake; the blankety-blank thing was running backward!

In his mind's eye, like a flash, was pictured the results of attempting to operate a machine running backward. When he should touch a key the probabilities were that the mat would fly up the channel plate, and if he were to touch enough keys to fill the line he would have to go behind the machine and pick the mats out of the distributor pan. In the event that he thus got a line assembled and threw the line into the second elevator, the thing would first go to the transfer position, the vise would come down to casting position and because there were no mats to meet the metal forced out by the plunger, he would have a nice, elegant squirt!

Al gave a gasp and a choke and made a dive for his hat and coat. He was half way to the door before the foreman "lamped" him.

"Hey, there! Where you goin'?" the foreman shouted.

"I'm gonna get out of this hoodooed dump as soon as the Lord will let me," said Al.

"Why, what's the matter?" asked the foreman, meantime heading Al off from the stairway.

"Matter? Why, I've got 'em again or this dump's jinx is working overtime," says Al. "I've done all kinds of stunts in my time, but I never yet tried to operate a machine that was running backward, and I'm not gonna try to learn."

And he didn't.

The explanation came next morning. The machinist, in installing the substitute motor, had some way got his "wires crossed" and had attached the positive wire to the negative pole and vice versa with the other wire.

Al is a well-known "down-homer" and has lots of friends, but he fixes on them a glassy stare when they ask him about the machine that ran backward. WILL C. SMITH.

OUR PENSION SYSTEM.

I think we may put it down in black and white that the average printer saves no money. The International Typographical Union officials are only too well aware of this fact; so are the officials of the pressmen, the mailers, electrical workers, letter carriers and other minor organizations who attempt to stem the tide of discord by capitalism—through the pension system. When we are young, both men and women, it is difficult to realize that in the distant future the capitalist, or his representative, is going to discriminate against us when he views the lineaments of our physiognomy or the variegated hues of our leonine locks. This day will surely come, as the average life of the individual is advancing by leaps and bounds. It may be the desire has something to do with it, as the psychology of the subject is a large factor in the persistency of physical existence and vital tenacity. This is the main reason for the establishment of eleemosynary institutions and paraphernalia of the pension order. The leader who has vision, as an adjunct of the proletarian class, has jumped into the maelstrom created by the capitalistic hydra, and has in a manner succeeded in stemming the tide of made-to-order pauperism by the creation of our present pension fund, dominating in proportion the United States pension to her veterans. The presumption is that much drastic legislation is ahead on account of the excessive liberality, so to speak, of our officers and delegates to the various conventions in letting down the bars or swinging the gate too far back on its hinges. To increase the tax to swell the fund the government has set the example of ignoring precedents and referendums and whipped the satellites who represent the people into line!

The expense of a referendum is not necessary to raise the tax to 1 per cent that the fund might acquire proper proportions, such as the pension fund of the amalgamated association. The union's tax will average throughout the nation some $10 per year, as the average wage must approximate $20 per week.

We will say the average age of printers on entering the union is approximately 30 years. The pension assessment will cost him at 60 some $300. The first year he is on the pension list he will draw $260, nearly reimbursing him for his outlay, which is an equivalent of saving and banking between $6,000 and $7,000 paying 4 per cent.

As there is not one printer in a thousand that can succeed in banking this amount to draw on for his livelihood, we see the absolute, yea, the dreadful necessity, that this fund should keep mounting, that it might ward off the storms and tempests that waylay the unnumbered hosts of the working class.

PROTECTING SITUATIONS.

Feeling that our magnificent organization is to be hit hard by the war's call, and knowing that the membership that is to first leave our ranks is that of the young, healthy pace-setters of the composing rooms, I do not feel that I would be imposing upon the efficiency of our worthy officials if I should make a suggestion that might find the proper form to accomplish some substantial good for our organization while our great nation is passing through its present unfortunate crisis. It is along the line of protecting the situations of the printers who are called out to do war service that I wish to touch upon.

For instance, let each local union take stock of every union printer who is working just outside of its jurisdiction and have such union printers give the local the names of other printers who do not have cards, but are eligible to hold them, and then let the local unions get busy on a membership campaign. For example: Let us take Tampa Union. Let Tampa Union, where I carry my card but work in St. Petersburg, an unorganized town, write me for the names of all competent printers in this city whom I think would make good union men. Let Tampa Union also furnish me with the number and class of situations that may have to be filled during the war, or, in other words, the number of men who were within the draft limitations of the recent registration. The typographical union will find many new members in this way, because when a young printer sees the opportunity of a union job being open for him when he joins he will show a willingness to come in that he does not show under normal conditions. The union will also find a willingness among union men like myself who are ready to give up their present situations and go to hold the job of some union man called to war. I have been on my present job for five years and am satisfied to stay here, but if Tampa Union sends to me the call to come and fill out the place of some one that must go, I would readily go and take the union job, leaving my employer here to fill my place the best he could. This would serve another union purpose also in creating in the minds of employers in cities the size of St. Petersburg the benefits of a local union to them, aside from the label work that they would get that now goes elsewhere—the benefits of being able to keep their forces up to standard in times of scarcity of men, as it now seems we are certain to see. I believe also that the intelligent publishers, when they became aware that the typographical union was taking a systematic census of all union printers in unorganized towns with a view of calling them in to protect situations of "war printers," that they would realize the possibility of their forces being crippled temporarily if not for a long period of time, and would want to talk unionism with their men, with the result that they would climb onto the union band wagon. For the past ten years I have spent most of my time working in unorganized towns and am familiar with conditions in them, and find that most employers, though they don't always admit it, rely upon the union men of their forces for the lion's share of the mechanical efficiency in their plants. Then, on the other hand, the union offices of the country that hold contracts with our organization would appreciate the efforts of the union in trying to protect them against a shortage in labor when the battle cry of our nation is really sounded, thus would a scheme of this sort work to the advantage of the typographical union in more ways than one. It would strengthen our standing with the union shops and be the means of awakening the sleepy publishers who never thought that a union would ever be of any material benefit to them and always discouraged their employes when they attempted to organize. It would mean many new members if carried on properly by every local organization of our great union, for it would cover the printing territory of this country so thoroughly that every printer in the United States would know of it, and the cost to the organization would be practically nothing compared with the benefits to be derived from such a lofty campaign. I sincerely believe that something along this line is worthy of our best efforts and is really due to the employers of organized labor. No man knows nor dares predict the knot holes and tight squeezes that this war may bring forth for capital to forge through. The safe and successful conduct of the printing industries of this country during the struggle of this war means the salvation of the printer. Our efforts to help create this safeness and crown it with success is a deed worthy of the high principle upon which our organization has builded. I am ready and willing to "do my bit" in any plan that the organization may inaugurate to protect the situations of printers called to battle and sacrifice for the existence of free humanity. I carry a union card, not for the sake of a job, but for my inborn belief that the man who has his skilled labor to sell upon the market is wise and just in organizing and co-operating with his fellow man to protect that market which is of such vital interest to us all. Show me a labor market not held intact by union organizations, and I'll show you a community of poor workmen and bad conditions, and the capitalists that rule such a market will not live in its precincts.

Let us get busy at once, that our organization may be ready to meet the worst if it should come. We have spent too much money, time and energy in perfecting the grandest union of them all to falter at this crisis and find ourselves wanting when the country needs us most. The typographical union will be found with few if any slackers, consequently there will be many printers in the make-up of Uncle Sam's "war extra," and it is the duty of those that are not called to see to it that the union composing rooms furnishing these printer-soldiers do not want for competent help in their absence, be it ever so long. If there comes a time in the glorious United States at the end of this monster war of unpardonable origin, that this great country must face long days of reconstruction, let the typographical union, through alertness and duty now, be exempt from reconstruction—let us be prepared to render aid instead of ask for it when the final test comes. Our opportunity to do this lies in the continuation of our progressive march, and now that this line of march has reached the frontier of war where the hand of greed is dripping with the life-blood of labor and right, let us awaken to our duty to those who have awakened to their duty to our country—protect their situations, and protect them well and do it now; delay might mean more than we can foresee. We may not have occasion to need such an inventory of our working forces as I have suggested, but in the distant outline of coming events it looks as though we will need this and even more, and I feel that an organization with the brains and resources that the typographical union possesses will meet the demands made of it squarely and strongly, and I offer the foregoing suggestion, in my humble way, for what it is worth to the organization of which I am proud to be a member.

Digitized by Google

ARKANSAW AT THE N. E. A.

The National Editorial Association met in Minneapolis during the middle of July, and, believe me, they were a more lively species of the genus than we ever saw around these parts before—visitin' or workin'.

When I say lively I want to emphasize that I mean the delegation from that often scandalized state of the razorback hog, Arkansas. Their party descended on Minneapolis carrying instructions to bring the 1918 convention to Arkansas. To see that they made good in their endeavors, they brought along the livest governor south of Mason and Dixon's line—Gov. Charles H. Brough, described in their very nifty little song book, which included the pedigree of each member of the party, as Supreme Historian and Speechmaker, Poetry, Flowers and Song. We wish to emphasize that those who christened him with that descriptive appendage knew him well.

Generally the printer is about as willing to mix with the editorial department as he is with the foreman, but long have we cherished an illusion, for, if there are to be found among the writing staffs of the papers on which we print, even a small percentage of such good fellows as came from Arkansas to Minneapolis, we need them with us. They belong with us.

Seeking publicity all day every day a very amusing and very fascinating little stunt was staged in the composing room of the Morning Tribune—the result of a collusion or conspiracy between Walter Ebel and Charles Goslee, of the New Era, of Hot Springs; Earl Hodges, former secretary of state of Arkansas, from Little Rock; Frank N. Henderson, owner and editor of six southern papers, who resides at England, Ark., and Fred W. Pattee, union man, practical joker, royal good fellow and therefore editor and union printer, who is proprietor of the Fred W. Pattee Printing Company, of Little Rock, Ark., said parties being aided and abetted by President Frank J. Schweger, of Minneapolis Typographical Union No. 42, acting Foreman Fred H. Curle and Chairman C. Z. Nelson.

The chairman was saluted one evening by F. N. Henderson, who attached an Arkansas button to said chairman, with the remark that "We grow them your size down in Arkansas." (I was innocent of the fact that Governor Charles Brough had stated in an address during that afternoon that his state grew the best and largest hogs in the world, and that if all the pork grown in Arkansas in one year were consolidated into one hog, said hog could have rooted out the Panama canal in twenty-four hours. Up to the time I discovered the trend of Governor Brough's remarks I thought Henderson was trying to get along with me. Now, I'm looking for him.)

I guess Henderson never saw James M. Lynch, Marsden G. Scott or John W. Hays, or he would never have picked on me.

Returning to the story: Henderson said that a union printer was included in his delegation who had the habit of "pulling off stunts," not only to the chagrin, but also to the expense, of the party, and he was in search of some plan to even up the score, as this union printer, being Fred W. Pattee, of Little Rock, was several points to the good. After telling him that with the co-operation of the local president and the foreman, the chairman would try and accommodate him, he therefore informed me that Pattee was to be found meddling with the typesetting machine displays at the headquarters hotel, and had set a line stating the fact that "Arkansas is in Minneapolis," which was run on the first page of the paper that day. Asking that Mr. Pattee be cited before me to explain why he was working in this jurisdiction without depositing his Arkansas traveler, said Henderson, gleefully thinking he finally had Pattee in a box, rushed with much pep for the rest of Pattee's victims to get them and Pattee herded together to watch Pattee get disciplined by the union.

"In nothin' flat," a tall, angular, crimson-faced man came tearing into the composing room, hat in hand, hair disheveled, tongue hanging out a rod, mopping the perspiration off his brow after climbing five flights of stairs because he thought he could beat the elevator. I was still at the door, not believing that Henderson could get such quick results, and asked this man what he wanted and if he were crazy. He replied between breaths: "No, I'm not crazy; I came from Arkansas—that's what makes me act that way." Upon making himself known, he stated that he had been told by his friends that the chairman of the composing room wanted to see him. Upon presenting himself, he stated that he had carried a union card for many years, in fact, was carrying a paid-up card now, and that he meant no wrong when he performed on the typesetting machine, also stating that he did not know what the local laws were in such circumstances, nor was he familiar with the International law on the subject, but that he would stand for anything that was the right and square thing to do to make amends.

The chairman then informed Pattee, upon assurances that he was one of us, that he should not fear the chairman's action, but to watch out for his delegation who were trying to job him. With a little preliminary scheming between Pattee and the chairman it was decided to fine Pattee $5—which he would readily pay but for the fact that he should "discover" he had only $1 in loose change on him, and that he would hurry back to the hotel and get it, in order to "be right" with the printer boys. When Pattee's Arkansas friends found he was "short" they immediately advanced $1 each and the chairman secretly dispatched the devil post haste for a box of cigars. Other conspirators in the composing room immediately brought up the point that the chairman had exceeded his authority and gone beyond his jurisdiction in placing a fine upon Pattee for a violation of International law, and prevailed upon Pattee to appeal from the action of the chairman.

A "kangaroo" chapel meeting was called immediately, in the busy part of the night, and President Schweger, of No. 42, represented Mr. Pattee in his appeal, moving that the chapel sustain the chairman, absolve Mr. Pattee from all blame, and instruct the chairman to dispose of the fine in any manner he saw fit. The motion was carried unanimously and Mr. Pattee was asked if he had anything to say.

Pattee thanked the chapel for their leniency in his case, stated that he was proud of the opportunity to show his fellow Arkansawyers what a fine bunch of men composed the International Typographical Union, then rattled his dollar which had been returned to him and thanked his Arkansas friends for making him solid with his brother craftsmen of the Tribune, whereupon he pulled out the cigars which had been quietly passed to him and told the chapel members to have a good smoke all around on his Arkansas friends. "Pandemonium reigned." Earl Hodges looked sheepish, even if he does live in the hog state, and every time I hear a rumbling in the sky to the south I believe I can recognize some such words as "brigands," "highwaymen," "robbers," etc., all the way from down in Arkansas. However, to carry the whole thing through in the true sportsmanlike way which you could not but expect from such a crew of southern gentlemen, the whole Tribune chapel was invited to dine with and "on" the Arkansas delegation the following evening at lunch time. The entire chapel, and Hodges says there were some ringers, dined the following evening with about the jolliest crowd that sat together around the festive board. Pattee presided, and what he didn't say about his Dollar Quartet no one could think of. The song book designates him as the Supreme Uncensored Nut of the Forest. (They know you well, old boy. No wonder you beat it home a day ahead of the rest of the bunch. You showed fine judgment and a good understanding.)

Speeches then followed by Governor Brough and others of the Arkansas delegation, which were responded to by President Schweger, Chairman Nelson, of the Tribune chapel; Thomas Russell, James T. Hanley, of Stanley, Wis., and Joe Limperich, of the proofroom, while Fred Dryg and others were called upon but were too busy to part their lips for speech for fear something would get away from them.

We never saw such a bunch of live ones in our lives. The party contained three professional and eighteen amateur press agents, numerous editors, editresses, governors, politicians, seceretaries of state, prints and printesses. They certainly demonstrated what a live delegation can do, because when they arrived from their home (hog) state, they were neatly "bringing home the bacon," because they landed, as they should have, next year's convention for Arkansas.

If this same bunch gets anywhere near Colorado Springs and is in search of our convention for Hot Springs next year, listen to them. Go with them. You might be able to tie them, but you can't beat 'em.

But if they don't have a delegation there, some quiet night open your hotel window, or put your ear to the ground, and you will surely be able to hear Earl Hodges squawking about his dollar.

Come again, Pattee. Bring your "missus." But if you don't bring your Dollar Quartet you won't have such a "fine" time.

Here's to you all, gentlemen and ladies of the south. If it wasn't for the fact that Minneapolis is the best town in the land of Uncle Sam, we'd be with you, but anyway, we always will be for you.

Arkansas was in Minneapolis. C. Z. Nelson.

REMINISCENCES OF AN OLD PRINTER.

This is the first of some "reminiscences" of a printer of nearly fifty years on the job. If it gets by, more will follow.

At the age of 9 years, while nosing around a country printing office, I saw type for the first time. It was a take of dry, solid nonpariel. Yes, nonpariel, for it was many years later before the point system was dreamed of. This solid take was standing all alone on what I have since learned was a stone. It was not bothering me, but just to find out what it was, I punched it—just ever so little. I found out. It reminded me of playing jack straws, at which game you see how many straws you can remove from a pile without shaking any other straw.

Well, I found out that this thing that looked like a small brick was in fact ten thousand little pieces of stuff, and no two alike. Just about the time I made this discovery, the foreman happened along, and what he said to me and to the printer who left this take on the stone will not bear printing in a nice journal. (He is now the Hon. A. R. McCollum, proprietor of the Waco Tribune, and state senator.)

Without using any cuss words, but in good, strong terms, I told the foreman that he needn't take on so, as I could "fix it." "Then do it," was all he said. I found a cracker box, and standing on it, began to "fix it." The more I fixed it, the worse it got unfixed. Finally, when a few were left standing, a printer with a heart came over and squeezed a wet sponge over my new-found friends, and later tore a piece out of a paper, and said, "Here is the copy."

At the end of the third day I had "fixed it," and this same printer took a proof of it, which I carried to the foreman, expecting to receive an apology. His only reply was, "That's fine—how would you like to be a printer?"

"Fine," was my reply—and there is where I got on.

I was taken in to boss, and we soon made a trade. I was to work nine months—until January 1, for the old papers I could save up and sell, and after January 1 I was to get $10 a month. I was assured by the good old gentleman that I ought to be able to clean up 50 or 60 cents a week, as old papers were selling at 20 cents per hundred.

Imagine my surprise and joy at receiving an increase of 100 per cent the first week—the proceeds from the sale at 10 cents each of several No. 6 bottles from the printers. The printers were a dressy set, and used a good deal of hair oil—several bottles a week. Some of it was labeled "Bourbon" and some "Corn," but they called it all hair oil.

Nearing the end of my apprenticeship, the boss sold his "plant" to a young, slender printer named Hogg. The sale was made Christmas eve, and I helped Mr. Hogg pack his new purchase that night, and just about daylight Christmas morning we put it on a two-horse wagon, and the last I saw for twenty years of the future governor of Texas, and the great Commoner, James Stephen Hogg, was as the wagon tipped the hill going west out of town.

I was not long getting another job, and from that day until this I have never been out of a job when I wanted one. Learning the trade in a country office, I learned it. Being sober, industrious, interested in my work, I usually selected my jobs, or "sits," as we would now call them. Later I hope to live again days spent in Little Rock, Shreveport, Memphis, Cincinnati, Chicago, New York, etc., in which I will recall some of the old-time printers, many of whom have passed away, some of whom may experience a quickening heart-beat at the recall of some trivial incident long since passed out of mind. W. A. ADAIR.

SOME REMINISCENCES.

I read with great interest some of the reminiscences of old printers and wish to furnish some of my own experiences as an apprentice to show how times have changed and the great opportunities boys are offered now learning the printing trade.

I entered the first printshop, a small jobroom with two Gordon presses, in the fall of 1867. I was put to feeding and took pride in learning to do it fast, although I was told to work slow but accurate and not spoil any sheets. The first job I handled was a tag, and I was instructed to be very careful and not to miss any, because if I did and the type was struck by the eyelet it would mash the type, and that they were very costly. I had run off about 500 when I missed one and then tried to catch it back, but it was too late and my hand was caught in the press, but not on the type. It gave my hand such a squeeze that it was quite flat and brought me near a faint. I was discharged for the day and told to be more careful hereafter. I never had another accident after this.

After four weeks I got a job through an old schoolmate in a German religious publishing house. My duties were, first of all, to arrive at the place at 6 o'clock in the morning in order to get up steam by 7 o'clock, build fires in four stoves and have all the floors swept clean by this time. I lived about three miles away and was, therefore, compelled to rise early, as in those good old days there were no street car accommodations in this neighborhood, the office lying outside the city limits.

After this routine work I fed an old style Hoe press which had points working up in order to get a good register, with a speed of about 700 per hour. It took all day to run off one side of the small weekly issue, and the next day the other side. After the paper was printed I helped to fold and wrap, which took till after 6 o'clock, when the expressman hauled it away. And as there were Sunday school papers, almanacs, books, etc., also printed, the express charges seemed too expensive for the young manager, who, by the way, had just arrived from Germany and was well educated, but under the influence of the "old German idea" of doing business. He was in for saving and making a good showing. With this purpose in view he bought an old plug of a horse and a wagon and ordered me to make the trips to the express and postoffice whenever necessary. This horse was certainly one of the slowest trotters I ever came across and consequently received much mauling from me when we were out of sight of the boss.

The postoffice was over three miles from the concern, and the book store connected with it, to which I had to drive to get whatever packages were there to be delivered, was about two and one-half miles away. It often was as late as 10 o'clock in the night before I got back with my nag. After unhitching and putting mail bags and other things away in the office I was allowed to go home and get my supper about 11 o'clock.

I received the enormous sum of $2.50 per week salary at the start, and for the express work I was granted 50 cents per week—but no Christian Christmas or any other presents.

This special work I did for one winter and summer, after which a "greenhorn," who tried to study to be a preacher, was hired in order to earn some of his board, etc.

When the second winter came on I was also released from feeding that Hoe press and put at the case with another young man who had some knowledge of setting type. So we split up the work in the morning, both of us arriving at 6 o'clock.

The good boss was very economical, so much so that he wouldn't even buy kindling wood to start the fires with, and we were compelled to steal everything in sight from our neighbors, and finally landed on the farmer's fence of rails which divided his place from ours. The boss never paid any attention to our appeal for kindling; he was satisfied as long as there was fire in the stoves and steam up. We had taken about fifty or sixty feet of rails from the farmer's fence and were about to steal some more one morning, when he spied us and yelled from his residence, which was a distance off, that if we didn't get away from there immediately he would shoot us, pointing a double-barrel gun at us—and he wasn't the kind of farmer to fool with, either—he was in dead earnest. Well, what were we to do? We scraped up all the short wood we found in the yard, but there wasn't enough to go around to build the fires. But we had two large, fine wooden galleys on which the good-sized Sunday-school paper pages were made up, and I suggested to my partner that we chop them up. No more than said, he took up the hatchet and chopped both to splinters—and we had all the fires going as usual when the crew came. Shortly after their arrival one of the men started to look for the missing galleys, but, of course, without success, and finally the whole force with the boss started the hunt. I was downstairs in the pressroom and my partner had sneaked to some other place while the hunt was going on. When he came back he pretended not to know anything about the missing articles, and then the boss called me upstairs, for he then suspected that something was wrong. I was somewhat trembling, and my partner said he was, too, and when the question was put to me I told the whole truth, like George Washington when he chopped down his father's cherry tree. I stated that we had cleaned up everything in the neighborhood, but when the farmer came out with a shotgun to shoot us, that was too much, and fire we must have by all means. The boss was one of those hotheaded "Dutchmen" who fly up and act like maniacs, and for a short time I guess we thought our lives were in danger, but when the men started to roar with laughter he cooled down and his temper became natural again and he asked them what could be done now. The men told him to send downtown and get two up-to-date brass galleys and also order a load of kindling wood for the boys, which he did, and in the afternoon a big fine load arrived, at the small sum of only $1.50.

During the second winter work was increasing rapidly, and although we two kids were doing well in filling the galleys with type, we were compelled to work overtime two or three nights a week (it didn't cost the boss much, you know); especially was this the case toward spring, when one of the old typos got a better paying job in another office and the "economic" boss thought he could spare him now anyway on account of us "rapid" fence-rail splitters, as he called us when he became somewhat "humorous."

It was on one of these nights, between 11 and 12 o'clock, while the full moon was rising, that I was strolling along the road swinging my big hickory club to ward off the dogs in the thinly settled region and going down the long, deep ravine, which had a large ice-pond on the south side of the log bridge over the creek, about twenty feet high, which I was about to cross, when I heard a peculiar noise, and stopping suddenly, I gazed down where the bridge had stood, and behold, I noticed in fright that it was gone and a big stream of water was running rapidly below. I knew all then—the big pond had bursted by the strain of the melted snow of the surrounding hills and streets, as there were no sewers to catch it. What was I to do? I stood there for some time thinking what step to take next, because this was the only road I could take in a radius of miles around to reach home, as this stream of water was flowing into another large mill-pond, and perhaps that had also been forced to burst now, which was actually the case. I finally made up my mind to follow the creek north as far as possible to find a possible crossing, and after traveling over a quarter of a mile I stepped on a log in the water and thought it not deep. But to my great surprise I got in up to my chest, but gradually managed to land on the other side and walked toward the road. On the top of the hill at the roadside was a Catholic cemetery and on the farthest end nearest the road were buried separate from the other graves those having committed suicide, and below this I was compelled to go, glancing upward in more fright than ever before. I think my hair was standing straight by this time; more so, because I noticed under branches of a tree a white thing, and the closer I got to it, the larger it seemed to develop. In those days students as doctors were oftentimes compelled to steal corpses from cemeteries for their studies and experiments, as there weren't as many free "stiffs" then as can be obtained now. People, especially women, would tell all kinds of gruesome stories about these robber students, and this all came to me while I noticed this white article above me, thinking that "something" had happened also this night. I had about a half mile yet to go to my home, but I finally landed there soaking wet from top to bottom, more dead than alive, hardly able to tell what had happened.

Although I had a very restless night I landed at the usual early hour the next morning at the office and performed my duties, but before this while on my way I was anxious to examine that white thing which had caused me so much fright—being compelled to take the same route as the night before, but the water had now subsided—and to my astonishment and amazement I discovered that the shroud of a corpse I imagined I had seen was nothing but a little snow which the rays of the sun hadn't melted.

If space allowed I could relate many more instances of hardship, to show how conditions in the printing trade have changed, especially for apprentices, since I became one on September 2, 1867—fifty years ago. HERMAN TAMMEN.

LIBERTY LOAN INTEREST FOR HOME BOYS.

This heading covers what is considered most important by some of the printers consulted in this neck of the country. I have noticed that quite a number of our members have bought liberty loan bonds, a few of the old-time roadsters making this territory included, and have broached the subject to them as, it being a fact, few of us have no home outside of the one in Colorado, and the consensus of opinion was to the effect that if an arrangement could be made with the secretary of the United States treasury the interest from the $50 and $100 bond could be clubbed together and sent direct to the members at the Home, to be used by them as spending money or to do with as they pleased.

This spirit of giving to our members to make their lives brighter, and to have them feel that they are not forgotten by those who are able to stay at their work, should be taken up by all. No doubt a good many of us have donated to the Red Cross, and have done this with pleasure—now why not do this other bit for ourselves? Many of our boys are going to the front, perhaps some will come back maimed or broken in health and not able to resume their old positions, with a possibility of becoming inhabitants of the Home through sheer necessity, and this money, derived, as it could be without being missed, could be used to help them in their days of enforced idleness.

I do not care to take up too much space in THE JOURNAL, and therefore will leave this matter with the readers and the wide-awake, unselfish membership of our great organization. How about it, boys? Speak up—let's hear from some others and then keep the ball rolling.

FACTS ABOUT THE COAL SUPPLY.

Writing of the coal production committee of the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense, Hugh Reid says in the current issue of The Public:

This body is made up almost wholly of large operators who are closely affiliated with transportation interests, both rail and water. Its chairman, Francis S. Peabody, is the largest operator in the Illinois-Indiana bituminous field. He is a director in various public utility companies, one of which operates in fifteen states and serves 355 cities and towns. The Insull interests with which he is allied are operating nearly 1,300 franchises in twenty-six states. Through their control of railroads and by grace of various friendly receiverships, a bipartisan coal-railroad-power combination has been built up.

It has necessarily gone into politics. And, like all similar groups, it has played no favorites. For instance, Frederick W. Upham, assistant treasurer of the republican national committee, and Francis S. Peabody, "fat fryer" for the democratic national committee, have for twenty years sat side by side on the same directorates.

Last fall when the great "car shortage" occurred the Peabody-Insull interests suffered little. Contracts which independent operators were compelled to relinquish because of failure of transportation were filled by the "insiders."

The condition today differs in degree but not in kind. The demand has become so enormous that there is nearly business enough to go round. This is not wholly true, however, with regard to cars. There are fewer cars than in 1914. Hence the importance of their control.

It is possibly true that there are less cars in existence than are needed. Yet the deficiency is intensified, by the practice of holding and storing laden cars. If these abuses were done away with millions of additional tons of coal would reach the cities. Hence the language of the Federal Trade Commission: "The commission believes that there are enough coal cars in the country, but that there are not enough coal cars delivered to the mines."

The position held by those who were in both the railroad and coal businesses was thus of high strategic value. Given the power and the disposition to manipulate cars to their own advantage, it is patent that the inner ring had the entire industry in their grasp. That they so used this advantage is also apparent. During May and June independent operators reported a 40 to 60 per cent car supply. The transportation interests were running full blast.

Meanwhile the price of coal mounted. At present the mine price has reached $2.50 for "mine run." At the same time contracts made last year are being filled as low as $1.25 a ton. At the latter figure, there is still a handsome profit, as the labor cost has not risen appreciably. The price paid to the miners in the middle west bituminous districts has risen exactly 4 mills per ton during the last year—10.6 cents in fifteen years. The records of various quasi-public consumers show contracts within six or seven months at prices well below $1.25. The Terre Haute & Eastern Traction Company reports the average price paid during the past year as $1.07½ per ton. The mining cost, by the way, as given by the last Illinois coal report, averages 67 cents per ton. The average price at the mine during twenty-five years throughout the United States has ranged from 80 cents to $1.25.

Under the circumstances, it is hardly necessary to cite further figures to prove that present prices are highly inflated. The chief beneficiaries were and are the "inner ring" and it was to their advantage to maintain the status quo.

The position of the privileged group seemed assured when Mr. Peabody was made coal director. He immediately made a patriotic offer of $2.95 per ton for bituminous. Considering that this price was far in excess of even the market, it is small wonder that Secretary Daniels rejected it insofar as the navy was concerned. That episode was the first sign of cleavage between those who saw in the war the necessity for sacrifice and those who saw merely a chance for added profit.

It remained, however, for the Federal Trade Commission to make the split wide and apparent to even the casual observer. It touched the heart of the problem when it announced that the coal and railroad problems were inseparable. They recommended that the railroads be pooled and operated as a unit under the direction of the president. Here was a plan with teeth in it.

What then should be done? The full weight of federal authority should be put behind Secretaries Baker and Daniels and the Federal Trade Commission. The roads should be pooled at once and operated upon government account. This would be government operation—ownership would follow. There is no immediate need for price fixing. If an adequate car supply is granted, there is enough coal in sight to flood the markets and bring the price down to rock bottom through the normal working of competition. Such steps will do much to bring order out of chaos and insure the supplies necessary to conduct the war vigorously and supply our normal wants as well.

Incidentally the president would do well to hint that Mr. Peabody and his associates should resign. It may be well to have "business in the saddle," but it is rather harsh on the rest of us when she uses the spurs.

THE PATRIOTISM OF A TRADE.

[From the Richmond (Va.) News-Leader.]

Make a note of this in your war-diary as indicative of the patriotism of thoughtful labor:

The International Typographical Union is one of the oldest, strongest and stanchest labor organizations in the United States. It insures its members. It operates a remarkable system of old-age pensions. It maintains extensive national headquarters. It supports at Colorado Springs one of the largest and best tuberculosis sanatoria in the country. Its members share among themselves the expenses of all this, in proportion to their wages, and they pay, in addition, monthly dues for their local unions. To identify him, each member of the union is provided with a card, which is renewable monthly. On this, to simplify bookkeeping, are entered and receipted the amounts he pays to the International and to the local union. Unless this card is "kept up," the member loses his standing and all the benefits that accrue to him in insurance, etc.—a very serious matter.

But what is a man to do if he is called from the printing office to the colors? His pay stops, but his obligations do not, and he can not meet his dues from his wages as a soldier. This question was raised and answered at the last meeting of the Richmond Typographical Union No. 90. If members go into army service, voted the printers, then those who stay at home would see that absent members do not lose their benefits: the card of every printer-soldier will be kept up by his fellow-craftsmen and his rights will be protected.

This bespeaks a fine spirit of patriotism—the right spirit of patriotism—and it ought to set an example to every other union and to every fraternal and business organization in the country. In the nature of things, the percentage of men called to service is not to be large, for the present at least. That very fact increases the sacrifice made by those who are to enter the army. What better things can those do who remain at home than to see that the burden men take up as soldiers shall be lightened, as far as may be, by generous comradeship. The nation will no more forget those who assist our soldiers than it will fail to visit retribution on those who take advantage of a fighting man's absence!

ON THE GREAT DIVIDE.

When man reaches Life's mountain-top—climbs its rugged tiers;
When he has gained the half-way post—the meridian of years,

He treads the Great Divide—the apex—the dividing line
That separates the uphill grade from the precipitous decline.

He rests for a season at the top of Nature's tower,
Where in retrospective vision that comes within his power

He views his past achievements—wrought mid peace and strife;
He views the route he's traveled, the first half of his life.

Past deeds no doubt seem simple that were arduous in their task,
Wrought with determination that in contentment he might bask.

Whether viewed with satisfaction, or, perchance, with sad dismay,
They are viewed from the mid-station—the high-noon of Life's day.

He sees mistakes, the stumbling blocks of his journey's upward grade—
And he sees, too, the God-inspired, the good moves he has made.

Both stand out in equality bold from his lofty point of view—
The good he's done, the evil, too, when life is just half through.

If he has lived a checkered life, remorse goes on the throne,
And he laments that he followed the course to which mankind is prone.

For while standing there on the Great Divide under the light of the past
He sees an outline of the real life lived—the die of his life may be cast.

In serious reflection he reviews the path he so wand'ringly blazed,
And at the stern reality he stands stunned—amazed!

He sees the marks of pioneers—those who have gone before;
Hears echoes of their warnings, remindful of burdens they bore.

He now plainly glimpses the sentinels, left for posterity's guide,
Which in youth's blind indiscretion he carelessly pushed aside.

Could he go back and straighten his path he'd give the warnings heed, He'd guard his steps, he'd watch his course in every word and deed;

For he now sees that a safe descent of the hill beyond the Divide
Depends upon the caution gained in the ascent of the mountainside.

But if he has given heed to warning signs observed along the road,
He finds the level of the mountain-top a restful place of abode.

If the Golden Rule was his climbing staff and his guiding star the Right
A peaceful sojourn on the Great Divide will be his from a righteous fight.

Yes, if he did his best while ascending life's rugged hill,
His conscience will ring in harmonious chime, "Thou hast done His will!"

And he arises with vigor! Feeling refreshed from his rest!
With confident assurance that he can safely leave the crest!

And he cheerfully begins the descent of Life's mountain's sunset side,
Because he did his best in life while climbing to the Great Divide.

OUR DEBTS.

The sums we owe our creditors in trade,
Or those we beg or borrow from a friend,
Are small, compared to obligations made
By virtue of collective duty's end.
We owe to all our votes for juster laws,
Our faith in fair environment's uplifts,
Our loyalty to equal freedom's cause,
Our gratitude for nature's common gifts.
Do we forgive our debtors as we seek
Our creditors to pardon what we owe?
Are all the crooks and deadbeats beggars weak,
Or those who reap by force what others sow?
How many are there of "the best of us"
Entitled to blacklist "the rest of us?"

"THE BLOW THAT KILLED FATHER."

The operator sat in his linotype chair
Working small keys of celluloid square.
The copy was good and the machine sang a song
That promised a string at least eighteen feet long.
He then took a look at the old copy hook,
'Twas loaded with medicine ads enough for a book.
There was "Tiz" for swollen and tired calloused feet.
And Gin Pills for cleansing whate'er you'd eat;
Zam-Buk, 'twas said, was used by the wise,
And Bon-Opto was sure a cure for sore eyes.
The operator then, with a groan of despair,
Grabbed the next take relating to hair,
In which were made statements reasonably fair—
Especially to those having plenty of hair.
He rose from his chair, his string did not "cash,"
And slamming the door with a splintering crash,
He vowed never more would he set such trash.
For in days of his youth, when hope springs eternal,
He'd read this same dope in many a journal,
And though each he'd carefully and valiantly tried
His round old pate was still a glistening slide.
So straightway he hied him to the Printers Grand Home
In the joys of good comradeship to forget his bald dome.

FROM LOCAL UNIONS

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

"Colorado Springs, the Home of the Home, 1917." Well boys, I'm still after you good and strong. To those of you who may possibly receive THE JOURNAL before starting for the silver jubilee convention, I want to say that the preparations are all made to show "you-all" a good time. The convention committee has announced that its plans will all be completed in proper time, so that all will be ready for the pressing of the button that will start the big show. And say, it will be some show.

As this will be the last shot I will get at you for many moons in boosting the Pikes Peak region, I am going to inject the dope good and strong this time, so you will remember it.

Away back in ages long since forgotten, when Pikes Peak was an active volcano, a lake was formed, not far from Colorado Springs, by the lava damming up a mountain stream. The water filling the lake became highly mineralized, and the action of the mineral upon the submerged forests caused petrification. Another convulsion of nature, hundreds of years later, broke the dam, loosed the water and exposed to view one of the grandest works of nature, a petrified forest. There are also fossil beds dating back to the miocene period, when the now cool climate of Colorado was of a tropical nature. Some of the trees, which are of the gigantic Sequoia species, are twenty feet in diameter, one stump being fifteen feet high. Some enterprising person tried to saw this stump into pieces so as to transport it to the Chicago world's fair, but the stone was so hard the saws became wedged into the stone so tightly they could never be removed and are still to be seen. There are also many logs as hard as rocks, in which the grain of the wood, and even the sap is visible. In the fossil beds, bugs, fish, leaves and all sorts of queer formations are discovered on splitting open the rocks.

To enable visitors to the Pikes Peak region to visit this wonderful work of nature, a firm has been organized to run daily automobiles to Cripple Creek, via Florrisant and the petrified forests, covering a distance of 110 miles in the trip. Powerful cars, guided by careful drivers, are sent over the Pikes Peak ocean-to-ocean highway through Manitou, up the famous Ute Pass, and past Rainbow Falls, in their journey through the forests and to the famous gold camp of Cripple Creek.

You will find many ways of enjoying yourself while at Colorado Springs, but none that will surpass the petrified forest trip. Stops are made at all important points to allow tourists to view the grandeur of the scenery, gather specimens and pick wild flowers, of which there are a glorious profusion on all sides. In ascending Ute Pass, the auto traverses one of the finest mountain roads, famed in history first as an Indian trail, next as the only means of communication with Leadville, and now as a pleasure highway of great importance. Before the coming of the railroads a constant string of canvas-covered wagons creaked and groaned up toward the Continental divide, loaded with machinery, building material and food for the hungry miners at the famous gold camps. So if you want to get the best out of your visit to the Pikes Peak region, take a seat in a petrified forest car and enjoy the day communing with nature at its best. It is an opportunity of a lifetime, and should not be missed. There has never been an accident on the trip, and one need feel no fear in taking the trip, which will be remembered as long as you live. Whatever else you see while at the convention, don't pass up the petrified forest.

The convention committee will have a registration booth at the headquarters hotel, the Acacia, corner of Tejon street and Platte avenue, and ample help will be on hand to see that all delegates and visitors secure accommodations. For the convenience of all it might be well to state that if possible arrangements should be made to arrive in the Springs during the day rather than at night.

Rooming Houses—Rooms may be secured at first-class rooming houses at $1 to $2 a day. Hundreds of rooms can be obtained in private homes, located throughout the city, at rates varying from 75 cents to $1.50 a day. The committee recommends these private home rooming houses, feeling confident that our guests will receive good accommodations at nominal rates.

Hotels—Rates at the major hotels are based on the European plan, and deposit for reservation is required. Those wishing reservations at the hotels should take the matter up with the hotels direct. Their rates follow:

Acacia—Without private bath, $1.50 and $2 a day; with private bath $2.50 and $3 a day.

Antlers—Without private bath, $2 a day; with private bath $2.50 a day.

Alta Vista—Without private bath, $1.50 to $2 a day; with private bath, $2 to $2.50 a day.

Alamo—Without private bath, $1.25 up a day; with private bath or bath connection, $2 and up a day.

Plaza—Without private bath, $1.50 a day; with private bath, $3.50 a day.

Joyce—Without private bath, $2 a day; with private bath $2.50 to $3 a day.

These rates are based on more than one to occupy room.

Colorado Springs has restaurants the equal of any in the country and their prices are very moderate.

Try to get here Friday or Saturday, if possible, so as to attend the "get-together" meeting at Temple theater Saturday evening and take in the auto trip Sunday.

John M. ("Jimmie") James, of Cleveland, later of the Home, and a visitor at most of the conventions of late years, is in the city and will remain over for the big show. He is an oldtimer of much note and will meet many friends during convention week. A. ALAN BULKLEY.

SAN MATEO, CAL.

For some time past the business of No. 624 has been to try and arrange a raise of scale on a level with the towns of this peninsula, and protracted negotiations resulted in a visit from George Mitchell, of San Francisco. Meetings with the proprietors—the San Mateo County Press Association—came to nothing, they declaring they could not pay an increased scale at this time; and revealed that they mostly are paying above the present rate—$18. A suggestion that the highest rate being paid be adopted as the scale was put out by the union in place of the rate originally asked, but was not acceptable to the publishers, and only a few among them were agreeable to signing a contract on that basis. With the turn of events that has come with the declaration of war by the United States this local deems it wise not to press the question, and there the matter rests for the present. An attempt is to be made to get the county printing done in the county, which would help local shops considerably. It is the custom of the authorities to send most of this printing to San Francisco, despite the fact that most of the representative people are behind a "trade-at-home" movement. Like many other slogans, this seems designed to be more for the other fellow, if it happens to be inconvenient or immediately unprofitable to follow. We hope to induce them to see further than the present, having another slogan for their ilk, that "foresight is better than hindsight." L. E. HARRIS.

At the June meeting of No. 624 the officers for the year were installed, J. E. Harris acting as installing master. President T. W. Love, Vice-President George Pracna and Secretary L. E. Harris were all put in office for another term, and A. L. Hamm was made sergeant-at-arms. The local went on record as supporting the proposal of the International Typographical Union that employers be asked to co-operate to keep open the positions of soldiers going to the front, and it was also decided that the union would keep the dues of absent fighting members paid up. One of the members has already enlisted, B. N. Fryer having been accepted for the San Francisco Masonic Red Cross unit to go to Allentown, Pa., with the ambulance corps. Further steps are being taken to keep county officials conversant with the views of the union on the subject of all county printing being done in the county, and it is hoped that some good will result from this agitation for the benefit of local printshops. BENJAMIN N. FRYER.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.

At the July meeting of the union a committee, composed of Joseph Durnin, Charles Hamel, Francis Dooley, William Marr and Warren Osborne, was appointed to arrange for raising a fund to take care of the convention of the New England Typographical Union, which will be held here next June. This convention is to be an auspicious venture for a union the size of North Adams, and every member of the union should take a genuine interest, attend their future meetings, and cut away from the small-town crabbing that never leads to anywhere. Boost for the convention from now on and put North Adams where it belongs on the map of the International.

James Brannigan, who resigned at the Herald a short time ago, is reported as having caught on at New Haven, Conn. Barnett Greek, who has been working for some weeks at the Herald, has taken a traveler and left town. Arthur Knapp, machinist at the Herald, has taken a similar position at the Transcript. William Connors, who has been subbing at the Transcript, has taken a traveler and gone to the Adirondacks for the summer. Charles Durnin and James Mahar, former members of this local, spent their vacations at their homes here during the past month. They are both employed at the Phelps company in Springfield. George Dempsey is working at the Herald. It is rumored that other changes are contemplated by members in various offices.

Fred Keiner, with a Worcester card, stopped in this city on his travels. EDWARD A. RYAN.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

To the strains of the "Star-Spangled Banner," played by the Rochester Park band, employes of the Rochester Herald Company Saturday afternoon, June 16, raised a handsome new American flag on the forty-foot steel pole erected on the roof of the new Herald building at 36 Aqueduct street. The flag, eight by twelve feet in size, was the gift of the company's employes, virtually every member of the large force having contributed in some degree to the fund for the purchase of the banner.

In accepting the flag from the employes of the Herald, Louis M. Antisdale, president of the company and editor-in-chief, paid a fine tribute to the loyalty of Herald employes—not only their loyalty to the paper, but to their country—for be it known that the Herald is a 100 per cent newspaper office in the purchase of liberty loan bonds. Incidentally it may be stated that five of the Herald employes are now in either the army or navy, and more to follow.

Mr. Antisdale called the attention of the employes to the importance and responsibility of the work each is performing, stating that the work of the apprentice is of relative importance to that of the skilled workman, the effects of each being necessary to produce the desired result. And to make this result possible, the Herald has provided a strictly modern plant and the best of working conditions. A beautiful souvenir program was issued by the Herald for the occasion.

G. W. LAWRENCE.

At the July meeting a resolution was adopted that the members of No. 15 would participate in the Labor day parade this year; last year they were conspicuous by their absence. It is to be hoped that a much larger number will turn out than has been the rule in the past. The job scale committee reported that all offices were paying the new scale with the exception of two offices, but they finally came across.

President Burns, who represents No. 15 as delegate to the convention at Colorado Springs, was accompanied by R. M. Bemish, ad foreman of the Times. B. L. Butterfield, formerly on the night shift of the Times, is filling in on the day side while the regulars are taking their summer vacations. Charles S. Sacks, formerly of the DuBois Press, has left this city to take charge of the Orleans American at Albion, N. Y. Thomas ("Kid") Horan arrived in town, printed a new outfit and a roll of the "green" and departed for Syracuse. Cards received: Harry Tourck, Lee G. Brown, Arthur Moore. Cards issued: Lee G. Brown, Emil Schmeid.

Work has been fair for the past two or three months, but the usual summer dullness now prevails, caused by the slack in advertising. The job offices are fairly busy for this season of the year, with plenty of help on hand.

Abraham Brovitz, a former member of the Herald chapel, but now serving in the United States marines, was home on a furlough.

No. 15 decided not to send a delegate to the New York State Federation of Labor convention to be held at Jamestown, August 28. Harry Bohrer, No. 15's representative in the local allied trades council, was chosen as delegate to the Syracuse convention of the state allied printing trades council.

The American flag will be draped in the meeting hall of No. 15 at every session of the union. This was ordered by unanimous vote. It cost just $9.65 to get thirty members at the July meeting; and with a membership of nearly 300. Some attendance.

J. O. RUPPERSBERGER.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

The monthly meeting on June 17 was well attended, the installation of officers being a feature. The applications for the International Typographical Union old age pension of Thomas Hancock, Henry D. Soule, Frank W. Van Tuyle, Louis Fernheimer and Michael A. Wyber were endorsed. Five probationary, five new members and three reinstatements were approved, while two applications were referred back to the membership committee and one was rejected. Jacob F. Lutz and Richard Wooster were endorsed for admittance to the Union Printers Home. The committee appointed to investigate conditions in the American and Journal chapel made a lengthy report, which caused considerable debate, but was finally adopted. A communication presented by Chicago Typographical Union No. 16, asking for the endorsement of No. 6 to submit to the referendum an amendment to the International Typographical Union constitution, also caused a lengthy debate, but the request was refused. A communication from the state women's suffrage party, requesting No. 6 to send two delegates to the working women's conference, to be held June 21, to advocate votes for women, was received, and Mrs. Elizabeth Keenan and Mrs. Julia Watson were appointed. Fred N. Cornell offered the following, which is self-explanatory, and was adopted:

Whereas, Governor Whitman on the eighth day of June vetoed the Brown bill authorizing the state industrial commission to suspend the operation of the labor laws during the period of the war; and,

Whereas, This bill was designed to render inoperative all past legislation affecting employment of unions, prohibition of the employment of very young children, hours of work for women, etc.; and,

Whereas, In his veto Governor Whitman has upheld the justice of all labor legislation and the willingness of the laboring class to meet any war emergency without special legislation; therefore, be it

Resolved, That Typographical Union No. 6 place itself on record as approving Governor Whitman's veto of this iniquitous measure; and, be it further

Resolved, That the secretary-treasurer forward to Governor Whitman a suitably inscribed copy of these resolutions.

A committee of three was ordered appointed to continue to oppose the Brown bill. The industrial educational survey was taken up and debated to some length. George Stein, who served on the commission as an appointee of Mayor Mitchel, spoke on the good points that would benefit the printing industry as far as turning out competent printers who are compelled to take up the vocational school for their instruction. The motion was carried to adopt the report and the officers were instructed to keep in touch with the plan as presented. The membership committee presented its annual report, which was ordered printed in the July monthly bulletin. It showed that the committee held fifty-three meetings; that 301 applications for membership were received from June 14, 1916, to June 14, 1917, inclusive. Of these applications ninety-four were probationary, 161 new members and forty-six reinstatements. Amount of fees received from applicants, $2,570. The report shows that 101 applications were withdrawn on request of the committee on account of incompetency, while fifteen were rejected by the union.

At the June meeting of No. 6 two propositions were introduced and ordered sent to the referendum for its approval to instruct the delegate to the coming International convention. The first proposition:

Whereas, Saturday afternoon is now considered a half-holiday throughout the country by various trades and industries, be it

Resolved, That Typographical Union No. 6 goes on record as endorsing the forty-four-hour week, and hereby instructs its delegates to the International Typographical Union convention at Colorado Springs, August 13, 1917, to introduce and support the necessary legislation for the enactment of same not later than January 1, 1920.

The second proposition was to instruct the delegates to vote for a numbered International Typographical Union ballot. Both propositions were endorsed by large majorities at the referendum election held on Wednesday, July 11.

Roy ("Reds") Tolleson, formerly of El Paso and Little Rock, dropped in to pay us a visit recently. He was in the uniform of a sailor of the United States navy and is assigned to the Maine.

The daily press recently printed an account of the will of the late John Bartlett Pierce, vice-president of the American Radiator Company, of Peabody, Mass., in which he directed that $1,000,000 be given to 400 employes. In addition, the residuary estate of $2,500,000 is left in trust, 60 per cent of the income to be distributed among the employes in the same ratio as the outright million-dollar bequest. The writer does not know as to whether Mr. Pierce's 400 employes are union men or not, but believes his action a laudable one. Mr. Pierce contended that they were parties to the making of his large wealth, and therefore, no doubt, he felt honor bound to leave them a large share of this world's goods. In the printing business we occasionally hear of an employing printer that believes that the employes are just as essential as the capital that is put in the business, but the percentage is very small. And when one considers the large percentage that formerly held union cards and worked for a wage that are not among the most successful employing printers we are bound to marvel at the peculiar turns of human nature, and the lack of recognition of the employer after he gains his wealth. But the writer believes that employers are gradually coming to the realization that employes should be considered a party to their business; that they are not only a necessity but better results can be attained by showing them that their services are appreciated. Charles Francis, a former member of the typographical union and now one of the most successful employing printers in New York city, has for years been on an educational mission in an endeavor to convince both employer and employe that their interests make them business partners. Mr. Francis' acts along these lines have been many. His latest act was taking out and keeping paid up a $500 insurance policy on each employe's life. Charles J. O'Brien, another successful employing printer, continues to hold his union card and has frequently shown his appreciation for faithful service. Should an employe receive injuries while in the performance of his duties he does not have to seek the aid of the state compensation law. Mr. O'Brien sees to it that he receives his full salary while incapacitated. He has made it a custom to give Christmas presents to his employes. The Isaac Goldmann Company recently surprised its employes by making each a present of a $20 gold piece. The following day a special meeting of the chapel was called, at which a set of resolutions were drafted and passed lauding the firm for its thoughtfulness. Another firm to show its appreciation of good service of employes is the Globe Lithograph Company. Last Christmas each employe was presented with 10 per cent of his salary. Thirty persons participated in the distribution of this fund, and at the time the management informed the employes that whenever conditions warranted, at the end of every quarter they would distribute a part of their profits to their employes. On the fifth day of June the employes of their firm received their first profit-sharing dividend. Loyd L. Blue, vice-president of the Globe company, is a member of "Big Six." Let us hope more employers will awaken to the realization that it is most essential for a successful business to have that cooperation that only comes with treating employes with respect and showing appreciation, thus gaining their good will. The employer whose attitude toward his employes is the same as toward so much machinery, to be cast in the scrap heap when worn out, is extremely short-sighted and never produces good results.

President Rouse recently received a communication from the officers of the Red Cross Society, which requested that he serve on a committee composed of employers. Mr. Rouse immediately made answer to the communication, in which he said he was perfectly willing to acquiesce, though president of a labor organization and not an employer, providing they would have their printing done in a union establishment. President Rouse further stated that there were many union establishments as capable of doing this work as was the non-union firm of Doubleday, Page & Co., who were doing it at the present time. At this writing the officers of the Red Cross Society have not seen fit to acknowledge the receipt of the letter.

What proved to be one of the most unique, interesting and entertaining outings was held on Saturday, June 16, by the employes of the C. J. O'Brien chapel, who, with their wives and sweethearts, accepted and hugely enjoyed an inspection and entertainment by the Peter Doelger Brewing Company. J. W. Hobbie, whom the chapel designated as manager of the "beerfest," proved himself as a past master in the art of entertaining. Fully 100 persons participated in this novel recreation. After inspecting and witnessing one of the most up-to-date sanitary and mechanical brewing establishments in New York—which was truly a marvel of twentieth-century methods of automatic machinery and the hygienic treatment in the brewing of the "amber fluid," the entire party being chaperoned by Robert Hunt, jr., the advertising representative of the Peter Doelger Brewing Company, who explained to the members of the party the various details of the complicated apparatus and machinery. The inspection over, the party repaired to the "roof garden" of the brewery, where ample refreshments, consisting of a variety of sandwiches and other side dishes, as well as an overabundance of the sparkling "hops" were lavishly dispensed by courteous waiters. Musical and vocal entertainment were provided by professional talent, recitations and patriotic talks were heartily cheered and encored. Dancing and singing were the main features, and it was truly a four-hour continuous performance of interest, mirth and joyfulness.

The New York and New Jersey Association of ex-Delegates to the International Typographical Union convention held their quarterly meeting at the Brooklyn Press club on the afternoon of Sunday, June 24. John T. Hudson, of Newark, presiding. The usual eats and drink were served and a pleasant afternoon was spent.

Sid Fleming, who served as president of Cincinnati Typographical Union for the past two years, is now located on the New York Times.

Lew Kilburn, foreman of the Macon (Ga.) News, and former member of the Georgia legislature, spent several days in New York recently. He visited Freddie Langley on the Herald, whom he had not seen since he worked with him in the old hand days in Georgia. He was also very much interested in the production of a large metropolitan daily.

The annual outing of the Herald-Telegram chapel took place on Wednesday, June 27. As has been the custom for years, the party left by steamer for a sail up the sound at 10 o'clock in the morning. The boat ride proved a most enjoyable one and in due time landed the party at its destination—Donnelly's Grove, College Point, L. I. The party was the smallest held in years, less than one hundred chapel members being in attendance. The usual baseball game and sports were indulged in, and at 4 o'clock the hungry assemblage sat down to dinner, after which the party again boarded the boat for the return trip, which landed at East Thirty-fourth street dock in time for the night's work. The committee in charge issued the usual near Herald. President Leon H. Rouse and Secretary O'Connell were among the invited guests.

The annual outing of the Sphinxes will be held at Donnelly's Grove, College Point, L. I., on Sunday, September 2. As it precedes Labor day, it is anticipated that it will be a largely attended affair. The usual athletic sports will be indulged in, with prizes to the winners. Breakfast will be served at 11:30 A. M. and dinner at 4:30 P. M. There will also be drawings for dinner prizes. Tickets will be $3.

The Midday Minute Men held a "Big Six" rally in aid of recruiting at noon on Tuesday, July 17, at 57 Chambers street. "Big Six" band led the parade up Broadway and the procession caused much favorable comment all along the line of march. On arriving at the Chambers street recruiting quarters there were a number of speeches made. Among those who spoke were President Rouse, of No. 6, and William P. Burr. Joseph Johnson, former fire commissioner of Greater New York, is president of the Midday Minute Men.

Typographical Union No. 6 has on deposit at the secretary's more than 100 cards of members who have joined the colors to fight for their country. The draft no doubt will prove very heavy on the ranks of New York Union. The membership of no labor union has shown more patriotism than has that of No. 6. Previous to the United States entering into the conflict there was much difference of opinion relative to the greatest war of all times, but at the announcement that the United States was compelled to protect her rights arguments ceased and the members became a solid front. Mayor Mitchel recently appointed President Rouse on the reception committee to welcome the Russian commission to New York city, which was a compliment to No. 6.

A few months ago Theodore F. Douglas started an agitation for a subscription list sufficiently large to purchase the Catholic Encyclopedia, which contains sixteen volumes, and present same to the Union Printers Home. Mr. Douglas has completed his mission and shipped the books to Colorado Springs. Each volume contains a tip, on which is printed: "Presented by members of No. 6."

William A. Gore, an old member of No. 6 and employed on the Evening Mail, recently received a highly complimentary letter from Major William L. Hallahan, of the First battalion, signal corps, in which he spoke of Mr. Gore's patriotic action in giving his three sons to the service of his country.

The Conway Printing Company, whose composing room gives employment to five printers, was recently unionized by Organizer Douglas.

The July meeting of No. 6 decided to revise its election laws, and to that end ordered a committee of three appointed. President Rouse named Peter Corcoran, Fred N. Cornell and John C. Maher to do the work. The meeting also adopted the membership committee's recommendations to raise the initiation fee of new members from $8 to $13 and for reobligation from $15 to $25. After the reading of a communication from the state federation of labor, it was decided to send the usual three delegates to the convention of that body, which meets at Jamestown, N. Y., this year.

James A. Crombie will represent the Intertype Corporation at Colorado Springs during convention week. Mr. Crombie is one of those genial fellows that combines business with pleasure, therefore the sequel to his rapid advancement since entering the employ of the Intertype Corporation. He has many friends in the ranks of "Big Six" and elsewhere who wish him success.

The second annual picnic and games of the Art Color Benevolent Association was held at Manhattan Casino, One-hundred-and-fifty-fifth street and Eight avenue, Saturday, July 12. Prizes were awarded to the winners of the various contests. Lauerman's orchestra was engaged to furnish music to the picnickers. The committee of arrangements was composed of Joseph Karcher, chairman; August Ehmer, Julius Brown, John O'Donnell, M. Cuddy and Charles Reilly.

The Boston and New York teams of the Union Printers' National Baseball League will play a game of ball for the benefit of the Sun's soldier tobacco fund at Ebbet's Field on Monday, August 6, and the following Monday the same team will play in Boston. The New York Association will bear all the expenses of the game in this city, including music at the park, and turn over the gross receipts to the above fund. Charles H. Ebbets heartily co-operated with the printers and donated the use of the field for the occasion. The New York team will meet the Boston boys upon their arrival with autos and convey them to the Hotel St. George, Brooklyn, where they will establish headquarters while in the city. The team will return to Boston Tuesday night at 5 P. M. The return game will be played in Boston on Monday, August 13. A dinner will be tendered the Boston team on August 7 at the Hotel Shelbourne, Coney Island, where the league was born. Members of No. 6 are invited to participate in the feast, the price of tickets being only $2. The menu may be procured of "Bill" Cowley, of the Owl club. In addition to the dinner a fine cabaret has been arranged. The league has chartered a sight-seeing yacht and will take the visitors on a trip around the New York harbor. After dinner an extended trip in automobiles will be taken and the principal points of Manhattan will be shown the Bostonians. It was at first the intention of the officers of the league to donate the proceeds of the game to the Red Cross, but this idea was dispelled when it came to their knowledge that the Red Cross publication and other printing was being done in the non-union establishment of Doubleday, Page & Co. The entertainment committee is made up of three energetic hustlers, namely, William Cowley, Willard Sweeney and Clarence Strawinski.

William H. Moore, of the World and secretary of the board of conciliation since it was organized, resigned from the board at the July meeting, having been ordered to the colors. His position on the board will be filled by the members at the August meeting of No. 6. WILLIAM MOUNCE.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

Frank Bayley, who for ten years had been employed in the Province chapel, has been killed in France in a recent engagement. Frank left Vancouver only a few months ago with the 231st Highland battalion, as corporal. After arriving in England he voluntarily reverted to private in order to get to the front quicker, and was there only a short time when he was killed. The Province chapel has had the following message of condolence engrossed and sent to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Bayley, Rupert street, Collingwood West:

It was with little thought that in bidding godspeed to your son, Franklyn Howard, little more than three months ago, that the members of Vancouver Daily Province chapel, in affiliation with Vancouver Typographical Union No. 226, would be called upon to send our condolences to you on his death in action on June 28.

Our sincere sympathies are with you in your great loss. The news of the death of our fellow-craftsman, and whom we all called friend, cast a gloom over us. That Frank's place among us will remain unfilled and his cheery salutation unheard, seems hardly realizable when such a short time has elapsed since we shook hands with him, then in splendid health, on his departure for the front.

Both as apprentice and journeyman during his ten years of service in the Province composing room, he was esteemed by all.

Though your loss is great, may we be pardoned if we think that in the call to duty that he responded to so whole-heartedly there may be cause for pride?

It was emblematic of his courageous spirit, and our sorrow is lessened by this and the knowledge that he proved himself so worthy.

Another Vancouver printer who was recently killed during the battle of Vimy Ridge was William E. Nicholson, for several years a member of No. 226 and junior member of the firm of Nicholson, Ltd. He went overseas with the 196th Western Universities battalion.

ing arrangements to absorb the News-Advertiser, although this report has not as yet been confirmed.

O. Shoemaker, after spending several months in Minnesota, has returned to Vancouver. Another arrival is D. Hawking, from Seattle. Mary Monroe, from Bellingham, and W. A. Euart, from New York, deposited their cards here, but have again taken out travelers. T. Wilson, for many years an operator on the News-Advertiser, has gone to Victoria, and M. Pettipiece has departed prairieward.

This bally war is so confusing, don't you know. When one hears the fellows talking these days about "subs," one doesn't know whether they are talking about substitutes, subalterns or submarines!

HENRY L. COREY.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

Edward Ashton, of Newark, N. J., was a recent visitor in town, calling on all his old friends.

Arthur G. Breckenridge and Owen J. Donnelly attended the annual convention of the New York State Allied Printing Trades Council at Syracuse as delegates from this union. Both reported having a very enjoyable time.

Rupert ("Zip") Oliver, of the Press, has been called out with the First ambulance company of the New York national guard, and soon expects to be "somewhere in France." Three of our apprentice boys belong to various units of the national guard and expect to see service soon.

Business is falling off here very badly. Some of the subs find it hard work keeping ahead of the sheriff. Perilous times, say we.

Cards received: Charles Hynen, Mrs. Clara S. Scott.

JULIAN H. WALKER.

COLUMBIA, S. C.

There is great joy in Columbia these days and times. This city has won the pennant of 1917 of the South Atlantic League, defeating Charleston four out of six games in the play-off of the second half. Columbia has been in the league since 1904. On two previous occasions she had played the winner of the first half, but failed until this year to be victor. Manager John Corbett, a clever Irishman, who had won pennants in the North Carolina League, piloted Columbia, which club had been called the Comers. It is an old and trite saying that where others fail the Irish conquer. Being one of old Erin's sons, your correspondent is just a bit proud of Mr. Corbett's achievement.

Columbia Union is now a 100 per cent union town, as the following, from the pen of President J. P. Sowers, of our union, demonstrated:

About seven years ago the Lutheran Board of Publication was organized in Columbia, for the purpose of printing the Lutheran church organ, the Luthern Visitor, and doing other printing for the Lutheran church. It was started as a union office, but only a short while afterward the concern employed as foreman M. L. Farrell, a non-union man. Mr. Farrell applied for membership in Columbia Union after going to work, but was rejected because Baltimore Union objected on the ground that Mr. Farrell had acted as a strikebreaker during the eight-hour strike in 1906. Every effort was made by the union to adjust the matter, but no agreement could be reached, so the union men came out. That was in 1910. The shop rocked along for several years, most of the time being hard pressed to find competent labor. Several attempts were made to unionize the shop or at least come to a working agreement, but the manager, the Rev. W. H. Greever, stated finally that he was not willing to meet the union halfway on any terms. Later the Lutheran Survey was organized by Doctor Greever, and he moved his part of the plant to a suburb of Columbia, Eau Claire, carrying Mr. Farrell with him as superintendent. In June, 1916, Dr. J. W. Horine assumed full control as manager of the Lutheran Visitor, with J. C. Lindstrom as superintendent of the mechanical department. Several union men were then employed from time to time, and a friendly feeling sprang up between Mr. Lindstrom and members of the union, although Doctor Horine was still more or less prejudiced against the union. About two months ago it became known that Mr. Lindstrom was going to leave the Lutheran house and the union decided it was time to make a move, so it sent a committee before the board of directors with the object of trying to at least have a thorough understanding. The board granted the committee a hearing. The meeting that followed was a very pleasant one, and matters were gone over in detail. The point that was stressed most and the one that had most weight was the fact that the Lutheran house was paying the scale and more, was working union hours and under union conditions, but simply because they hired others than union men they were denied even the privilege of bidding on thousands of dollars' worth of work that carried the union label. The outcome of the meeting was that the board left the entire matter with the new superintendent, Mr. Skinner, who had only been in charge a few days. The committee soon got in conference with Mr. Skinner, with the result that on July 17 the president of the union had the great pleasure of organizing a chapel in the Lutheran printing office.

This makes the city of Columbia 100 per cent union. The Lutheran Survey is still non-union, but it is out in the suburbs and therefore not considered strictly within Columbia's jurisdiction.

Mr. Sowers has worked hard and incessantly in this case. He has been a resourceful diplomat. In his every act he has had the endorsement, encouragement and full co-operation of all the members of our union, some of whom have at different times served on committees having the situation in their charge.

Columbia's cantonment has been called Camp Jackson, in honor of Andrew Jackson, a president of the United States and a native of South Carolina. At present 3,500 mechanics are engaged in its construction. This enterprise is without doubt the greatest boom to this city in all its history; in fact, its magnitude will not be realized until the new city will have been finished and occupied by the new national army. It is now believed that 50,000 soldiers will inhabit it. A former estimate was that it would mean one million dollars a month to Columbia. It is now estimated that it will be three million a month. Ever since work begun on the cantonment most of the men have been working ten and twelve hours a day, some of the mechanics without extra pay for overtime. The city federation of trades wired Secretary of War Baker protesting against the system instituted by the Georgia contractors who were awarded the job by the government. Mr. Baker was informed that it was unnecessary to impose this hardship on the men at the camp, as labor was plentiful in this section. He acted promptly, the result being that on July 16—four days after the protest to him—the workmen started to work eight hours a day.

The removal to Detroit of James A. Hoyt, banker and speaker of the house of the South Carolina legislature, leaves a vacancy that must be filled before the meeting of the legislature in January, 1918, its sessions being held annually. J. T. ("Jack") Miller, of the State chapel, will make the race. He was formerly a member of this body—four years ago—and opposed seven others in a race last August, but was declared defeated in a second, or run-over, race, after having been regarded as elected. A recount of votes defeated him by a small majority. He is possessed of ability, is a real union man of years of good standing and many of organized labor's best friends will support him. Here's success to him in his race.

TOM F. MACNALLEY.

PHOENIX, ARIZ.

Phœnix now is experiencing the lull usual in business circles during the warm period. However, in the printing line, the dull season does not materially affect the boys, because of the number taking a vacation. In this way reduction of the regular force is prevented and all are kept fairly busy. The Phœnix-Printing-for-Phœnix-People campaign, inaugurated jointly with the proprietors, through the allied council, has proved beneficial during a two months' trial, and will be made a permanent feature. President Ben F. Wood, the field man, is now on the coast gathering new ideas, so as to be enabled to carry to the highest possible degree of success the work so auspiciously begun. In the meantime the movement for the uplift of the printing industry is being promoted by contributions in the newspapers, showing many reliable facts and figures, such as the pay roll, taxes paid and number of people supported by the industry, money expended in improvements, etc.

C. A. Stauffer, business manager of the Republican, accompanied by Jack Halloran, an expert pressman, has returned from the east, where he inspected the plants of many of the larger newspapers before purchasing a thirty-two-page color press and stereotyping outfit. A cooling plant has been installed and the present quarters will be remodeled to accommodate the improvements. F. H. Keddington, superintendent, is on the coast selecting modern material for the McNeil company, the largest house of its kind in the southwest, carrying school and office supplies and fixtures, besides doing printing, bookbinding and engraving.

W. N. Baus, of the State Press, has returned from an unusually sad mission to the old home at Cleveland, Ohio. His mother and only brother were killed and father seriously injured when their automobile was struck by a street car. J. F. Meyer, machinist at the Republican, has returned from Kansas City, where his mother recently died. Announcement of the death of Wilfred ("Rube") Waddell at Albuquerque, N. M., was a shock, he having just recently been here, was looking good and displayed the usual humor and good cheer among the boys, all of whom liked him.

William Sutterlin, although a young man, one of the oldest in point of service on the Republican, has sold his valuable ranch three miles from town. "Bill" may have other intentions, but leaving Phœnix is not one of them. He has been taking a little well-earned respite from toil, and who would not if they had ranches to sell? Editor W. P. Doheney, of the Labor Journal, is entertaining the fair sex in a brand new machine. There is also some class to "Mike" Danson. With his wife, he occupies the home of her millionaire uncle on the outskirts of town, and during the absence of the owner is monarch of all he surveys. He has fruit and vegetables, including melons, chickens, milk and cream galore, and simply does not care at all about printing. When he finishes his apprenticeship at milking and irrigating, he expects to start operating a couple of large cars now "dark" in the garage.

D. E. McQuesten, son of C. G. McQuesten, who enlisted in the navy, won second place in the half-mile dash between the bluejackets and marines during the Fourth of July track meet at Mare Island. A. R. Redondo, in charge of the Republican adroom the past seven years, resigned and moved his family to the coast. They will spend some time around Los Angeles before settling permanently in San Francisco. F. S. Currens, for many years on the same paper, succeeds. H. D. Wilson, for six years in charge of the rubber stamp and seal department at the McNeil company, has resigned, and accompanied by his family, departed for Richmond, Va., where he takes a situation with the National Printing Company. T. E. Roper has taken a "sit" on the Flagstaff Leader, and Dick Porter and bride are at Jerome, where he is employed. James Cahill is avoiding the warm weather while taking special treatment in Los Angeles. Hugh Mason, of the Gazette, has returned from a two months' trip to St. Louis. Among those on vacation are Van Palmer, machinist at the Gazette, fishing in the White mountains; Walter Righetti, of the State Press, touring the coast; H. A. Skinner and J. M. Diebold, Gazette, at Prescott and Jerome. Some of those who miss home cooking are C. C. Williams, C. E. Tracy, H. A. Skinner, Blaine Harrell, Ben Estes and W. C. Lowry. Mrs. Williams and little daughter are spending the summer in Denver; Mrs. Lowry and daughter are in Dennison, Texas; Mrs. Skinner is in the east, and Mesdames Tracy, Harrell and Estes are on the coast.

Arrivals are W. M. Moore, H. E. Thornburgh, M. A. Pauly, R. E. Parker, G. E. Ferguson. Departures not already mentioned: H. E. Thornburgh, R. J. McDonald, Will G. Hoffman, Edw. W. Dawe.

W. S. SWENSON.

GREAT FALLS, MONT.

Subs have been plentiful the past month, but most of them have been able to keep the wolf from the door, as quite a number of the regulars have been taking vacations.

R. R. Marsh, foreman of the Leader, took an automobile trip to Helena, Missoula and Butte. He crossed over the Rockies near Missoula and claims the scenery is excellent.

J. W. Perkins, who has been operating a machine on the Tribune for the past twenty years and was foreman of the Butte Miner in the early days, spent a week at the stampede at Missoula, and says that the show brought back fond reminiscences of bygone days. Mr. Perkins is a personal friend of President Scott, of the International Typographical Union, and in talking over old times with the writer recalled the following incident which concerns our worthy president: At the time President Scott was foreman of the Anaconda Standard. On this particular occasion practically the entire composing-room force of the Standard was waylaid by "John Barleycorn," and President Scott sent an S O S call to Mr. Perkins at Butte, who responded thereto by sending him enough "type pickers" on a hand car to get out the sheet, for all of which President Scott is still grateful to Mr. Perkins.

Miss Mary Pearson, operator on the Tribune, has gone to her home in Eau Claire, Wis., to spend the summer with her mother.

At this writing the boys are getting their appetites and thirsts sharpened for the "annual mulligan," which will be held some time next month.

Arrivals: J. Alfred Kelly, Rex L. Griffin, William H. Dawson, George P. Murray, J. M. Largent, Roy E. Etter, J. H. White, Ralph Moore, Bryant James and George W. Keller. Departures: Marion Ashton, J. M. Largent, George C. Whetstone and Arthur J. Buell. L. W. WENDT.

GIRARD, KAN.

Work is very poor in this locality at present. S. B. Nichols, secretary of No. 348, is confined to his bed with typhoid fever. There is still some talk of two or more members attending the convention as visitors, no delegate being elected. The dry spell has been broken in this vicinity. May make work a little better. JOHN T. WALLACE.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

More than fifty of No. 2's membership have responded up to date to the president's call for volunteer service on the firing line. Tom Green, of the Evening Ledger, was dined by his friends before he left to join the colors. Manager Harry Shaner predicted the end of the war fifteen minutes after Green reached Europe.

At the meeting of the Belgian relief committee, held at 1524 Walnut street on Thursday, July 12, it was unanimously resolved that the chairman be requested to send a very special vote of thanks from the Belgian relief committee to the employes of the North American, who, on July 6, sent the wonderfully generous contribution of $630 for Belgian relief.

We have just received a copy of "The Old Liberty Bell" from William Crossin, now foreman of the American Type Founders' Company composing room. It was originally set up over forty years ago, and was inserted in an issue of the Typographic Advertiser during the centennial year, 1876, and is a fine piece of workmanship of the "art preservative." It is set in the smallest type made (brilliant) and contains 4,042 solid ems, equal to, say, three and one-half 12mo pages of solid bourgeois. Its depth from top to base of the clapper is thirty picas and its width at base is twenty-five picas, surrounded by stars of different dimensions. As the country is filled with all kinds of designs of colors in different forms, Mr. Crossin unearthed the original and embellished it with a red, white and blue border, with the American flag on each side at the top. It should be seen to be appreciated.

Scrantonians want this year's convention to select the Lackawanna metropolis as the terminus of 1918 convention delegates. In boosting the "Electric City," the Scranton folk point to the proximity to America's Babylon, New York, and to Philadelphia, with its vast storehouse of historical mementoes and scenes connected with the birth of this nation. It is also pointed out to the delegates who will select next year's meeting place that Atlantic City, the "Playground of America," is but a short journey from Scranton. As Pennsylvania has not had the honor of staging an International Typographical Union convention since 1892, when it was held in Philadelphia, the Keystone state, with a population of more than 7,000,000, urges the adoption of Scranton, printorially 100 per cent union, as the scene of next year's convention. That makes it unanimous, as well as imperative.

Not seen in the Hearst-Pathe films last month—Bill Myers, of the North American composing room, grabbing the check after entertaining the Italian envoys.

Among the distinguished gentlemen who silhouetted their horoscopes on the city's skyline last month were John M. Dugan, who will be a baseball magnate one of these days, and George Clifton, who motored up from Baltimore in his Hudson super-six. Both are well thought of in Philly. First Vice-President Barrett was also here last month on important business.

Philadelphia will have real interest in the Colorado Springs convention souvenir. You will have to hand it to the oleaginous Steve O'Donnell, who, as a shakedown man, bats over .300. A fac-simile of the original check for $10,000 to the Union Printers Home (then known as the Childs-Drexel Home) in 1888 will be reproduced in the souvenir. The check was presented by George W. Childs and Anthony J. Drexel. After payment, the original check was given to the late Mr. Daily as a souvenir by Anthony J. Drexel and it was found among his widow's effects by his son, Harry Daily, of the Ledger chapel, and loaned to the writer for reproduction in the 1917 souvenir.

Don't overlook the allied printing trades New York excursion on Sunday, September 9.

JAMES P. BOWEN.

RICHMOND, VA.

Interest at the July meeting of No. 90 centered on the report of the committee to revise the scale of prices. The committee was of the opinion it would be better to ask the employing printers and newspapers for a 10 per cent advance on salaries now being paid, leaving the scale as at present in force. It is hoped that the employers will meet this request, as it will help in a small way to meet the high cost of living.

The members of No. 90 are very proud of the honor bestowed on R. Lee Woody, our secretary-treasurer, delegate to the convention to be held in Colorado Springs this month, President Scott having selected him as one of the members of the laws committee. Woody has been a regular attendant at the conventions for a number of years, either as delegate or visitor, and is one of the best-known southern printers. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Woody.

Clarence P. Harwood, also delegate to the Colorado Springs convention, is mapping out his route. He is looking forward to a trip of great pleasure. Mrs. Harwood will also accompany him.

Edward W. Jay, machinist in the Times-Dispatch office, who was painfully injured some time ago, is getting on nicely. It was feared it would be necessary to amputate his right hand, but it is only a matter of time until he will regain use of his hand. Mr. Jay decided he needed some one to spend the idle hours with while his hand is getting in shape, so he has taken unto himself a "better half." He was recently married. He was congratulated by the boys at the hall the day of our meeting.

In my letter last month I mentioned the visit of our former member, C. C. Curtis, of Washington, to his home folk here on Memorial day. The members of No. 90 were shocked to learn of his death at Grace hospital, this city, June 26. He was taken ill while on his visit and went to the hospital for treatment. He was buried in Washington.

Secretary Walter B. Freeman, of the News-Leader chapel, is enthusiastic about the News-Leader chapel's "farm." Through the kindness of Stewart Bryan, the owner, the boys have several acres in cultivation near Mr. Bryan's handsome suburban home, "Laburnum."

John E. Burnette and Mr. Evans, who recently went to Chicago on a visit, have decided to stay there. They write that they are charmed with the big western metropolis. Mrs. Burnette and children have also gone to Chicago.

G. W. Mitchell, who is still unable to work on account of illness, was reported as in about the same condition.

One new member has been obligated—Spooner H. Hull.

Robert J. Ferriter, who has been in Washington operating for the C. C. Curtis company, has returned to this city, and is now holding the machinist-operator job on the Virginian.

Douglas Gordon, editorial writer and dramatic critic on the Times-Dispatch, this city, an honorary member of No. 90, has severed his connection with the Times-Dispatch to become editor-in-chief of the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch. The last night of his services on the Times-Dispatch, June 30, was marked by a pleasant event. The T.-D. chapel and two other departments at lunch hour presented him with a loving cup as a token of their esteem. R. Lee Woody, foreman, made the presentation. Mr. Gordon very feelingly responded. All the members of No. 90 regret his leaving Richmond, but are glad to see him elevated to the influential editorship of the Ledger-Dispatch. He succeeds the late Harvey Willson, who died several months ago.

GEORGE A. JENNINGS.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

T. M. Nice, formerly foreman of the News-Record, has opened a job office in the Triangle building and is getting out some very high-class work.

L. O. German and R. A. Edie, delegates to the convention at Colorado Springs, are packing their grips preparatory to leaving for the convention city the first of August. Both have expressed their determination to walk to the top of Pikes Peak before they return home.

President Reed has appointed his standing committees for the ensuing year and will expect more activity from the label committee than during the past year.

R. E. ("Bob") McLean, of Chicago, who was formerly president of No. 177, visited Springfield for a few hours en route to Minneapolis, where he superintended the exhibit of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company at the convention of the National Editorial Association.

H. L. Williamson, an active member of No. 177, has been appointed state superintendent of printing by Governor Lowden. Mr. Williamson has been manager of the Edw. F. Hartman Printing Company, a thoroughly union firm, for several years. Among Governor Lowden's other recent appointments in the office of superintendent of printing is John H. Bassett, a member of No. 560, Charleston, Ill, and Wesley S. Doenges, a member of No. 177. At present there are four members of the International Typographical Union employed in this office, T. E. Bland, treasurer of No. 177, being a holdover. This is the largest number of members of the union ever employed in this office.

H. L. Williamson, a member of No. 177, was elected secretary of the Illinois Press Association at its recent meeting held in Chicago.

R. E. WOODMANSEE.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

At the July meeting of the union a motion was carried instructing the secretary to donate from the treasury any amount which may be necessary to make up the life membership in St. Matthew's Home for the widow of J. E. Page, an old union printer who died a short time ago. The fund is being raised by the Daily Dispatch, and Miss Georgia Wright, daughter of W. A. Wright, proofreader on the Journal, has charge of the matter.

Harry Felt, foreman of the Austin American, spent several days in the city during the month. While here he was shown a good time by his friends here.

The union voted not to parade on Labor day.

Charles E. Wardell was elected vice-president of the union at the July meeting.

The following ad appeared in the Sunday News of July 8. The party advertising was considerate enough to give any one thinking of applying for the position plenty of time to ponder over it. We would not be surprised if the salary was not fully $50 per month:

PRINTER WANTED—We have until November 1 to select a printer, so don't come, but write us, giving references. Here is the man we want: One who can take an interest in our business, one who can handle the shop from hellbox to editorial chair; one who is tired of bumming around, who appreciates good treatment and is not a grouch. Prefer middle-aged man. Speed fiends and young squirts save stamps. We've harvested our oats crop and care nothing about helping you sow yours by giving you a job. Money first each month. MOTLEY COUNTY NEWS, Motley, Texas.

Members of Dallas Typographical Union extend their sympathy to E. J. Kiest, of the Times-Herald, on the death of his beloved wife, which occurred in a hospital at Baltimore on July 7, where she had undergone an operation. Mrs. Kiest was a lovable woman and had a host of friends in the city, where she resided so long, as was attested on the day she was laid to rest by the many floral offerings.

The amalgamation of the state printing trades into the Texas Allied Printing Trades Council, at the meeting in Austin, last month, is a step forward and seems to meet the approval of all. With this large body much more favorable legislation can be secured than where only one craft was represented. The work of the council has been endorsed by several of the state officials, and the state superintendent of public instruction expects to work with the council for the bill authorizing the printing of the textbooks for the public schools in Texas.

Ed Shaw, who has been making Galveston his home for some time, is now showing up on the News and seems to be getting his share.

Several members of this union have successfully passed the military examination and are waiting to be called into service.

BLUEFIELD, W. VA.

Nearly all the members of No. 644 in town were in attendance at the July meeting. This local has three or four members at Princeton, twelve miles from here, and as the fare for the round trip is 80 cents, the members can not attend regularly without making a sacrifice, especially at this time, when food speculators (allies of the German kaiser) are robbing the people by extortionate prices. But there is no excuse for members who live in the city failing to attend meetings. Paying dues is not all that is required of a union printer. He should attend the meetings and take an active part in its deliberations, else he is just a "card man" and occupies the technical position of a man who buys a substitute in war times.

Few tourists come this way, possibly because the towns are scarce and this is the only union between Roanoke, Va., and Huntington, W. Va., a distance of 300 miles. However, we have a member in the person of Henry Waddell, who has a "corner" on the coal fields district, and he drops in now and then to remind us of old times.

The Bluefield Telegraph has just erected a handsome new office building. In design and structure it will equal any printing office in West Virginia. H. I. Shott, the proprietor, is an old printer and an active member of our union. He made the Telegraph and the Telegraph made Bluefield, for it was a small town when he came to it and the Telegraph had a rocky old road for a number of years, but he persevered and the paper is now a prosperous institution, with three linotypes and a job plant, which he is now going to enlarge.

At the July meeting the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The present pension law of the International Typographical Union is unstable, unfair and ambiguous; and,

Whereas, Said law as administered is unfair to young members, who are compelled to pay into a fund without any guarantee of benefit therefrom, because only about one-third of the membership ever reach the required age to receive said benefit under existing law; and,

Whereas, A member, after paying dues for ten or fifteen years, may become disabled and unable to work at the printing business and be forced to go to a charitable institution and thus lose his membership in the union and his mortuary and all other benefits; and,

Whereas, The present law is inequitable, inasmuch as it gives a ten-year member as much as a thirty-year member; therefore,

Resolved, That Bluefield Typographical Union desires to go on record for a change in said pension law, so that all unfortunate members shall have an assurance of benefit if misfortune should befall them after a period of fifteen years;

Resolved, further, That we favor a graduating pension law, with so much per week for all members who have become incapacitated, whose membership has been continuous for fifteen years—that is to say, $5 per week for fifteen years, $6 for twenty years, and all over twenty-five years to receive $7 per week;

Resolved, further, That the foregoing resolutions be printed in the next issue of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

We have a trades council here and this local is affiliated with it. Harmony prevails among all unions here.

It is hoped our coming convention will be a business one. Many of our laws need changing, for we are groping in the dark on many questions, and while this condition exists we do not know what the morrow will bring forth. There is too much ambiguity in many of them and they should be more condensed. At the rate we are traveling in this line, it is only a question of time when our law book will be about as big as Noah Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, and just about as well understood.

The union elected your humble scribe official correspondent for THE JOURNAL. He will fill the bill semi-occasionally. This is a small town and unless something occurs of interest your correspondent will not write just to be filling space.

C. W. STRAUGHAN.

BUCYRUS, OHIO.

Miss Gertrude Frasch, the only woman member of Bucyrus Union No. 730, was married on Wednesday evening, July 11, by Rev. O. A. Bertram, to Vaughn R. Turner, an operator for the Pennsylvania railroad. Mr. and Mrs. Turner left immediately after the ceremony for a visit at Toledo and Monroe, returning the following Sunday. On Monday morning Mrs. Turner resumed her occupation as compositor in the job department of the Hopley Printing Company, and on Tuesday Mr. Turner left to join his company, having enlisted in the headquarters company of the Eighth Ohio volunteer infantry. Mrs. Turner will continue working at the trade until her husband's duties to his country are performed. H. H. RULE.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Since the late lamented Frank Seffing answered the call of the Grim Reaper No. 53 has been without an official JOURNAL correspondent, and the duties of that office have been carried along by our already overburdened president, Jimmy Hoban. Knowing that considerable time must be spent in gathering news for publication and that the work of his office would not permit of him continuing the correspondence, Jimmy settled upon the undersigned, and with many admonitions as to "watching your job, young man," appointed him as the official scribe for the ensuing year. As this is my first attempt at this line of work, I crave the indulgence of the members until I am further along.

The work of organizing goes merrily along, as the initiating of five journeymen and one apprentice member at the last meeting will testify.

The hearty congratulations and best wishes of the local membership are extended to the Rosgen brothers, Adam, late of the Rosgen-Thornton Linotype Company, and Henry ("Jerry"), formerly of the Press chapel, who have entered into a partnership and incorporated a company to be known as the Cleveland Typesetting Company. The office is located on West Third street and is running as a two-machine plant with a double shift. The members of the Press chapel were loathe to lose "Jerry" as a fellow workman, as his "sunny" disposition has endeared him to all the boys in the office, and his ability as a handler of insert movie liner ads has created a position that will be difficult to fill.

Samuel Hobbs Johnson, chairman of the sick committee for lo these many, many years and then some, received a rather severe but pleasant "jolt" at the last meeting of the union. In recognition of long and faithful services in alleviating the trials and tribulations of the sick and distressed, Sammy was given a vacation at the expense of the union and $100 was handed him to meet all financial obligations incurred while enjoying his sojourn. To say that Sammy was bewildered by the action of the union would be putting it mildly, as the usual fluency of his speech was hampered by an overflood of gratitude that stalked him still in his oratorical tracks.

A letter was received at local headquarters from Charley Scott, former president of No. 53, now organizer in the California district, saying that his son, Ernest, formerly of the Leader-News chapel, was "somewhere in France" with the General Pershing contingent.

Oliver C. Loughner, who left three months ago to take the foremanship of the Columbus (Ohio) Monitor, is back in town, showing up on the Press. Ollie was doing well with the foremanizing job, but the paper was unable to withstand the several injunctions and other court actions brought against it and was forced to suspend publication.

The value of the members of No. 53 in civic affairs was again clearly demonstrated when six members—Louis W. Ahrens, Ed A. Hacker, E. W. Stahr, Jesse W. Smith, James C. Bell and James A. Cannon—were appointed as members of the local selective service exemption boards. It is unnecessary to say that these men fitted themselves for this particular work, as this point stood out vividly when any contention arose, and the way the business of the committee was handled stamps the union printer as being especially adapted to work requiring a great degree of enterprise.

JOHN B. HOGAN.

MERIDIAN, MISS.

At the July meeting the undersigned had the job of correspondent wished off on him, after some dozen or more refusals to serve, and he being the devil, so to speak, being about the latest permanent addition, had to accept. However, we hope to appear regularly in the future.

Business in this section is just fairly good, but everybody is working, and with the prospect of two or three big July sales to be pulled off, it looks as if we will get through the summer without any real slump.

Our ex-president, H. H. Weir, made a trip to Jackson last month to appear before the state textbook commission, and reports good results. Last year there were three non-union book publishing houses represented, and this year only one, and it didn't succeed in doing anything. We have the assurance that as soon as the present contracts run out none will be let except to strictly union concerns wherever it is possible to get union-made books.

At the May meeting a committee was appointed to arrange a little "get-together" affair, with power to go the limit, and immediately after meeting the following month the members were invited into the big hall, where a bountiful Dutch lunch was spread, stand-up style, and ordered to fall to. During the evening some fine talks were made by H. H. Weir, representing the union; James A. Metcalf, representing the Dispatch, and Mr. Solomon, from the Star. The lunch was very much enjoyed, but as Mississippi is a prohibition state, iced tea (?) was served instead. More of the same spirit (and spirits) would prove of great benefit to the small unions.

John Powell has drawn his card and left for Memphis, where he expects to move his family soon.

J. C. Walker came to town just in time to get the "sit" made vacant on the Dispatch, and at the last meeting gave us a good talk on the situation at Jackson, which looks better than it has since the strike, as the offices are up against it for competent men. We are informed that they have the worst bunch of barnstormers in the United States on their machines.

We have been apprised of the death of C. R. Dement, which occurred in Macon, Ga., July 9. Mr. Dement was a native of Meridian, and spent the greater part of his life here, where he worked as operator on both the dailies. His death is deeply felt by our membership, all of whom knew and loved him.

W. G. GALLOWAY.

HAMILTON, ONT.

ANTICIPATION VS. REALIZATION.

For the I. T. U. convention
He had cherished the intention
Of touring with the New York Query club;
He had fond anticipation
Of a perfect joy sensation,
But to raise the "dough" was where came in the rub.

In his plans of jubilation,
At each and every station,
He would join the chorus in exultant tones;
But, alas! his high elation
Was the wildest dissipation,
For he couldn't raise the necessary "bones."

He enjoys a celebration,
Or printorial demonstration,
And as a gloom dispenser he's a peach;
But with war among the nations
And the increased cost of rations
The pleasure simply was beyond his reach.

In connection with this trip it is pleasing to note that the Query club's party intends to pay a short visit to Canada on its way back from Colorado Springs, and while there is no doubt the visitors will be warmly welcomed and thoroughly enjoy their brief stay in Toronto, it is a recognized and freely admitted fact that they would have seen a more beautiful Canadian city had they come to Hamilton. To dwell on the beauties of the ambitious city, the charming characteristics of its natives, and the numerous features to evoke the admiration of a party of tourists would require much more space than the editor is willing to grant in these days of soaring prices.

Speaking of Toronto, the typographical union of that city is to be congratulated on the very substantial increase in wages which its new agreement with the employers calls for. Hamilton printers can no longer point with pride to having a better scale than their fellow craftsmen of the neighboring city.

Through the instrumentality of George R. Allan, mechanical superintendent of the Spectator and chairman of the board of education, the Hamilton technical and art school has been presented with a typesetting machine by the Canadian Linotype Company. Under the supervision of Fred Atkinson, a member of No. 129, printers' apprentices will have an opportunity to get acquainted with some of the mirth-provoking qualities of a typesetting machine, such as hot slugs, squirts, double revolutions, transpositions, balky distributor, mats coming down the wrong channel, and things like that. Yea, verily, it is the merry end of the game!

Although it is not many months since he received the appointment, nobody will regret to learn that the board of education has seen fit to raise Printing Instructor Fred Atkinson's salary from $1,300 to

Digitized by Google

$1,500 a year. However, coming at the season when Fred's principal duties consist of rushing hither and yonder in a Palm Beach suit, acquiring a nut-brown coat of tan, the boost may have a tendency to make less fortunate followers of the art preservative feel a wee bit envious. But in the more strenuous days and nights to come it may be Mr. Atkinson's turn to cast the green eye.

There are bright prospects of the Appleford Counter Check Company's printing establishment in this city coming into the fold in the near future. Three men employed there, who came to the city from outlying country offices, have applied for membership in No. 129. They are: George A. Phillips, Joseph A. Garner and Harold W. Bass. Their cases are being carefully investigated.

One is frequently impressed with the thought that if some members would read THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL a little more closely they would not display such gross and pitiful ignorance when important subjects are up for discussion at union meetings.

R. J. ROBB.

READING, PA.

Clarence Riegel, a former member of No. 86, now working on the Ledger, in Philadelphia, becoming lonesome in that big "town," very quietly came to Reading and "put one over on us." He was married to Miss Lila M. Greiss, of this city, and so secret was the affair that the boys didn't get wind of it until the happy couple had departed on their honeymoon. They will reside in Philadelphia.

The foregoing is wedding story No. 1. Now for No. 2. William Miller, an operator on the Eagle, taking as an example his friend Riegel's doings, followed the same course and wed Miss Sarah T. Kitling. The young men have the good wishes of the members of No. 86 and may all the joys and happiness of connubial bliss be theirs. Only we still feel a little "peeved" over the secrecy that was maintained.

The third annual outing of the Eagle job and pressroom employes was held on Romig's Farm, near Black Bear. The affair was most successful, the day being spent in sports, games, races, etc. Paul Widmyer was chairman of the committee. The attendance was about thirty-five.

Our friend, William Young, jr., president of Philadelphia No. 2, whose appointment as a member of the industrial board of the department of labor and industry was rejected by the state senate in its closing hours, on account of factional politics, has, according to reports from the capital city, Harrisburg, been reappointed by Governor Brumbaugh. Evidently the governor is well acquainted with the makeup of Mr. Young, not only in size, but in ability.

Erwin Burger and William Lilly spent a few days in that dear old home town, Allentown. They came back with a sort of satisfied look. We suppose the old homesickness was cured by seeing the soldier boys parade and drill at the Allentown fair grounds, which have been converted into training quarters of the ambulance corps by Uncle Sam. There are 5,000 men in camp and the town has quite a military air.

John Helfrich is at Woerner's, William Boyer having resigned.

Putting THE JOURNAL under a microscope and perusing from cover to cover, it does not contain a line of news from our neighbors—Allentown, Harrisburg, Lancaster. We know they are not dead, for they were in full force at the last Eastern Pennsylvania district conference in this city, but we do not know what ails the "official" news gatherer for THE JOURNAL in those towns. Let's hope we may hear from them soon.

HARRY W. SHERMAN.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A. H. Speidel, an operator from Erie, Pa., sojourned here for a brief period during the month and called on some of our local shops. Clifford Nolan deposited his card from Philadelphia and is working in the ad department of the Daily Press. Joe Shea and "Whitey" Tieboldt, of New York, are here for the summer, the former running a machine at the Globe job shop and the latter doing likewise on the Sunday Gazette.

The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Davies died during the past month, age five weeks.

On Thursday, July 12, Francis MacLaughlan, of the Daily Press, while out in a motor boat, was partially overcome by the fumes of the exhaust, and came in contact with the fly-wheel of the engine, cutting a gash in his chin requiring six stitches to close. The cut was quite painful, but soon healed sufficiently for him to work. However, he lived on "graveyard stew" for ten days while his teeth and jaw were healing sufficiently for him to chew solid food.

Dick Vansyckle has arrived for his annual summer sojourn, but at last accounts had not landed his usual summer situation.

Jim Bowen, author of the Philadelphia letter of THE JOURNAL, was a Fourth of July visitor to the shore. Jim was elected to represent No. 2 in Colorado Springs.

Here's wishing the delegates to Colorado Springs a successful and enjoyable meeting.

EVAN T. SCHEERER.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

With deep regret we record the death of Charles C. Williams, age 52 years, which occurred July 14, from heart trouble, after a long illness. Mr. Williams was a member of the International Typographical Union for thirty-three years and foreman of the Milwaukee Journal for fifteen years. Resolutions were presented at our regular meeting, July 15, by the Journal chapel, and were unanimously adopted. After the passage of the resolutions the members stood with bowed heads for one minute in silent tribute to the departed. Immediately following the meeting we marched to Feerick's undertaking parlors, where we viewed the remains. The funeral was held July 16, and the following acted as pallbearers: John P. Keating, William Schreiner, Frank J. Hamm, Frank P. Kehoe, Detroit; Guy E. Thomas and O. E. Thomas. Many beautiful floral tributes were received, among others being a set piece from the Journal chapel and a bouquet from No. 23.

The many friends of Fred R. Boughner will be saddened to hear of his misfortune. He deposited a Chicago card July 7 and on July 15 was struck by an interurban car at the entrance to the soldiers' home, just outside Milwaukee. He was dragged fifty feet and his left foot was so badly mangled it had to be amputated at Emergency hospital.

The sympathy of No. 23 is extended to Louis Firnhaber, Sentinel night side, in the loss of his wife.

The union's offices in the Majestic building have been beautified by the laying of linoleum, new chairs and tables. Secretary Thomas spent the week of July 22 visiting at Oshkosh and fishing at Lake Butte des Mortes.

The Leader chapel held a stag picnic July 1, and the Meisenheimer Printing Company employes will hold a picnic on August 18.

No. 23 feels itself deeply honored in the appointment of John P. Keating as chairman of the laws committee of the Colorado Springs gathering and desires to express its appreciation.

President Blakely was chosen as chairman of the big peace demonstration at the Auditorium, arranged by the federated trades council and socialist party.

The following have enlisted for service: Navy, S. C. Gilmore and Edward Madden; base hospital, John Pinzl; national guard, Peter Altenhofen, Leo Kosak, captain Polish company. All are journeymen except Madden.

At our meeting July 15 we had as visitors Frank P. Kehoe, Detroit, and William F. Griffin, Chicago. Both were former active members of No. 23.

Frank X. Meyer has sold his farm at Lyndon Station, Wis., is now working at the trade here, and next fall will take up a farm at South Milwaukee.

Beginning September 1 all apprentices must attend the continuation school one night or one-half day each week.

Recent arrivals: George A. Higginbotham, George Ryan, J. C. McCracken, F. R. Boughner. Departures: Peter A. Altenhofen, F. H. Stanhope, R. S. Gillfoy, R. S. Betzer, B. A. Johnson, Otto A. Keihl.

With the writing of this paragraph the undersigned sings his swan song and desires to introduce Assemblyman Herman O. Kent, known far and wide for his able work in behalf of labor and who was appointed by President Blakely as correspondent. GEORGE W. RAPPS.

MIAMI, FLA.

At the last meeting of the local union $50 was donated to the Red Cross fund.

The Pratt Printing Company changed hands last month and is now known as the Miami Printing Company. Ernest Hodge is the new owner, who will act as his own business manager. The new owner came to Miami about six years ago and was employed in the Metropolis job department, and afterward held an interest in the Hefty Press until about nine months ago. Mr. Hodge is a member of the printing pressmen's union of this city.

Floyd Lloyd, of the Lloyd Printing Company, and A. Rau, a deafmute, were admitted to membership last month. The new members taken in just keep our membership up to normal and replace those who take out travelers.

Mr. Pratt, who enlisted in the coast defense corps some time ago, has been called into service and is now located "somewhere on the coast of Florida."

The employing printers all signed the supplementary agreement guaranteeing the situations of all employes who enlist or are enrolled for service during the war.

Business, which has been exceptionally good all the season, took its usual drop in July, and subs are now working on a regular summer schedule, making about four or five days a week; but still that is much better than last summer at this time, when subs were fortunate if they secured three days a week. As business generally begins to pick up about the middle of September, our short and unprofitable summer season is likely to be a very short one this year. We are looking for a very busy season next winter, when the tourists arrive, and our local merchants are stocking up heavily in anticipation of a "land office" business.

J. W. WITTY.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

What is a union slacker? Just one degree less a man than an army or navy slacker. We think that those who do not attend our meetings should be labeled with the title of "slacker," which means, practically, a traitor to the cause of labor. It is hard for us to understand why a man will whine and cry till he gets a union card, and then never attend a meeting except at election time, and then only when some candidate who is office hungry reminds Mr. Slacker that he has done him a favor, and begs for the support of the man. Rebate systems and fines do not do much good. Such men are union men in name only. If they would come out and help us who bear their burdens conditions would be better for us all and it would not be left for a few of us to carry on the fight. Union meetings are always interesting and instructive, and deserve the support of every member. The slacker is always a backcapper and a hammer thrower. Come out, boys; don't be slackers.

A. W. Wadham, superintendent of the Graph printing department, spent the week of July 9 on his farm in West Haven. James Cherry, foreman of the Graph printery, has acquired a "flivver" and can be seen at all hours (of the night) enjoying long drives with his family. Chris Cook, a late member of No. 252, was last heard from in Montana, where he is working.

Our June and July meetings were "some pumpkins." We had a time like a bunch of "Kilkenny cats." But say, after the meeting everything was smooth. The boys sure do raise a "ruction" over their rights, and the discussions are "some entertaining." Come out, boys, and join in the "festivities."

Business in this city at present is fair, with enough men to supply the demand.

Some of our boys are getting "creepy" on account of the draft. However, if any are taken they will give a good account of themselves wherever they are placed.

The Bridgeport Life, a weekly theatrical magazine, expects shortly to move into a new plant of its own and fly the "little joker."

The Standard, which recently changed hands, will move into a new building before January 1. The building will be up-to-date and is located on Middle street.

We have it from official sources that Bridgeport will shortly wake up and find a new morning paper, which will be owned by Mr. Lasher, president of the American Chain Company.

At our June meeting No. 252 voted $25 to the Red Cross and $200 for the purchase of liberty bonds. We are always willing to do our "bit."

Hugh Plunkett, our representative to the New England convention, gave us a fine report of what was done at the Manchester meeting.

William F. Gargon has taken the place of machinist on the Farmer made vacant by the absence of Herbert Booth, who has joined the navy.

pect to have the largest number in the parade that ever left our city.

The local plumbers have secured quite a substantial increase in their pay, without a fight and before the expiration of the old scale, which, with the new one, contains an arbitration agreement.

James H. Coates, of the Farmer, was elected at our July meeting to represent No. 252 at the state federation of labor convention in Danbury Labor day week.

M. M. Frankowski, of the Graph chapel, with his wife, spent the week of July 4 in Hudson, N. Y.

Joe Peck, one of our members who recently enlisted in the navy, is now stationed aboard the dreadnought Pennsylvania. Joe writes he expects to be made printer on the flagship.

Frank C. Winfield spent the week of July 4 among friends in the Hudson valley, New York.

Our vice-president, J. F. Lynders, spent his vacation visiting relatives in Huntington, Ind., and Aurora and Chicago, Ill.

The Standard has secured the services of Mr. McClavey as sporting editor. The new "sport" has had a long and successful career, and is one of New England's sport authorities.

ROBERT TARRING.

MONTREAL, P. Q.

At the July meeting of the union the book and job scale agreement was adopted on the recommendation of the committee, which calls for $24 per week for day work and $27.60 for night work over a period of two years. The committee, Messrs. Whitaker, Hamilton and Black, being congratulated and thanked for the services rendered at the conferences with the master printers' association.

At time of writing the newspaper scale committee is negotiating new contracts.

Syd Cockrell has been reported wounded, having spent some sixteen months in the trenches. He was formerly employed at the Daily Mail. E. Barney, of the Herald-News, is the latest member to enlist, joining up with one of the drafts of the Highland battalions. Reggie Lane paid the office a visit, newly returned from France, having been wounded in the Somme fight. Before enlisting he was a member of the Industrial and Educational Press chapel. Percy S. McKay, an apprentice member, has been killed in action, somewhere in France. He was acting as sergeant for a western battalion when he met his death. Previous to enlisting he worked in the Herald Press of Montreal. Jack Watt and Jock Somerville are now in France, having been drafted into one of the Montreal battalions. Bert Goodyer is still confined in one of the military hospitals in England.

On the occasion of C. C. Langelier leaving the city, the night side of the Montreal Star chapel presented him with a handsome pipe and pouch.

The members of the Star chapel and the craft in general heard with surprise of the sudden death of "Paddy" Loughren, which occurred on July 10, 1917, as few realized how serious was his case. At the time of his death he held the position of ad foreman on the Montreal Star. One of his sons, James, was killed in action recently, and another soldier son, Frank, is now in the hospital wounded. The Star chapel appointed a delegation to attend the funeral, which was well attended by members from other offices.

Cards received: R. H. Halsey, T. J. Coleman, J. S. Bamber, J. M. Buckman, jr., J. J. O'Connor, F. G. Letourneau, L. N. Marcoux, A. A. Eddy, Albert Charbonneau, E. Landry. Issued: W. Furry, C. C. Langelier, R. Bourque, F. Lefevbre, R. Clarke, R. H. Halsey, J. West, Miss Manta, W. H. Leonard, J. Fraser. JAMES PHILIP.

Jacques-Cartier No. 145.

At last the new contract, so long expected and so anxiously hoped to change the poor conditions of our members in the job printing business, is agreed upon and the report of the scale committee was received with joy at our last regular meeting, which took place July 7, when it was announced that a flat scale of $24 was established for two years. This is an average increase of $4 per week, putting the commercial printing on the same footing as the newspapers, thus realizing No. 145's great desire for many years past. Thanks were tendered the committee in a substantial manner by unanimous will of the members.

I congratulate Charles Marchand, the well-known printer of the Place Jacques-Cartier, for paying his men $25 a week since the first of July, giving a dollar more than the scale before anything had been arranged.

Henri Francq asked for a card of retreat, leaving for France, where he intends to work. He has been eighteen months in Flanders, doing his duty with the Belgian army. He was a member of No. 145 for many years.

Our president, Joseph Gauthier, accompanied by James Drury, is traveling all over the province for our organization.

I hope next meeting something will be done in the way of organizing a little gathering, as usual, early in August. ARTHUR LECLAIRE.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE.

The fifth session of the Western Pennsylvania Typographical Conference was held in Oil City Sunday, July 8, with a good attendance of members of the printing craft. Delegates were present from New Castle, Beaver Valley, Erie, Sharon, New Kensington-Tarentum, Oil City, Meadville, Butler, Warren, Franklin, Pittsburgh and Kittanning.

The meeting of the conference was full of business from the roll call of delegates until the time for adjournment.

President Johnson, of Oil City Union, called the meeting to order at 10 o'clock Sunday morning, and after welcoming the delegates, introduced the president of the conference, Theodore Eichhorn, of Erie. After a few remarks in the way of a greeting to the delegates, the conference took up the business of the day.

Among the business transacted at the meeting was a resolution condemning Theodore Roosevelt for his recent utterances in connection with the East St. Louis race riots. The resolution is as follows:

The cause and character of labor have been injured by charges brought by a man whose previous position of responsibility should teach him the injustice of lightly brought accusations and idle talk; one of the greatest moral and physical forces in the United States of America has suffered from these inferred charges—charges made without proper knowledge or investigation. The American labor movement can not let these charges, brought by so prominent a man, go unchallenged and unrebuked; it can not allow the unimpeachable integrity of the head of the American Federation of Labor to be attacked without assenting its indignation; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this fifth session of the Western Pennsylvania Typographical Conference affirm their faith in President Samuel Gompers and the cause he represents; that they denounce the imputations of Colonel Roosevelt as unfounded, cowardly and unworthy of a man whom the people of the country once honored, and that we urge all organized trades bodies and lovers of fair play everywhere to take similar action.

A resolution was also passed expressing appreciation to Gov. Martin C. Brumbaugh for his reappointment of William Young, jr., of Philadelphia Typographical Union, as a member of the state industrial board.

Much interest was manifested by the delegates in the business before the convention, and again brought out the fact that these sessions of the conference result in much good to those who attend.

It is hoped that the next session of this body, which will be held in Sharon in January, will see every typographical union in our jurisdiction represented.

President Padgett, of Pittsburgh Union No. 7, was at the conference and was pleased with the manner in which the business of the organization was conducted.

The social side of the session was not neglected for a minute. The local committee, consisting of President Johnson, Pete Balph and H. B. Scribner, worked overtime to see that the visitors enjoyed themselves. Most of the delegates arrived Saturday evening, and were entertained with a smoker and social session in Central Labor Council hall. A fine lunch was served during the evening, the visitors enjoying themselves playing cards and exchanging confidences. At noon Sunday the visitors were banqueted at the Arlington hotel by Oil City Union.

All in all, the fifth session of this organization proved to be one of the best yet held, both in a business and social way. H. A. WERTH, Butler, Pa. Secretary-Treasurer.

TACOMA, WASH.

Out-going President Mullins, in a review of the past year, detailed his experience with the remaining non-union job offices. "No inducement that I could offer," said he, "would even be considered; nothing but complete surrender on the part of the union, with recognition of the open shop, would be considered by them." This shows that the new officers will have their share to perform of the work that has been carried on for the few years past in our jurisdiction—the fighting of the open shop. May success in large measure be theirs! But our officers can do nothing unless they feel they have the membership behind them. And just now a lack of spirit seems to have invaded our organization—the same flagging of interest which has been observed and complained of in recent times in many parts of the country. Unless we set about to free ourselves from this remora of indolence and shortsightedness we shall not be able to improve our conditions of work or maintain those we have secured. An ever-alert attitude on the part of the members in face of violations of our scales and a less apprehensive attitude as to the personal welfare in every little union crisis will insure progress all around.

At its last meeting No. 170 approved an investment in liberty bonds of $500, and also a donation of $50 to the Red Cross.

No. 170 lost one of its most active and militant members through the death of Ralph R. Rice, which occurred July 10 at St. Joseph's hospital. Mr. Rice was the linotype machinist on the Tacoma Daily Ledger and had been employed there some nine years. He had served the union in many capacities and was a member of the old executive committee whose term has just expired. He died suddenly from complications arising from a renal malady of long standing. He was a young man, and we regret his going.

Tacoma Typographical Union, after much hard work on the part of its scale committee, numerous alterations and many conferences with the proprietors, has signed a new scale for a period of two years. In signing this scale and joint contract, which brings together all crafts of the printing industry, wherein all scales expire at the same time, Tacoma has no doubt taken a big step forward in a movement that is destined to become widespread and work advantageously for all crafts concerned. While the bookbinders, pressfeeders, pressmen and stereotypers working the night shift have secured a slight increase in wages, the job printers and newspaper printers did not ask for an increase at this time. This joint contract has also brought about the recognition of the mailers' union.

Miss Marguerite Walsh, vice-president and chairman of the executive committee, has the distinction of being the first woman member to serve No. 170 in an official capacity.

No. 170 voted a donation of $50 to the Red Cross Society. Besides this donation, many individual members have contributed a day's pay, thereby making a very creditable showing for this branch of organized labor in Tacoma. At the end of the campaign it was found the $100,000 fund for the city had been oversubscribed.

Acting in accordance with instructions from the executive committee, President Mullins reserved $500 worth of liberty bonds pending the action of the union at its June meeting. The union concurred in the action of the committee.

The Northwestern Typographical Conference has come forward with a plan to abolish annual International Typographical Union conventions by means of a district form of convention. This local acted favorably on the plan.

Charles Perry Taylor, secretary-treasurer of the Washington State Federation of Labor and a member of No. 170, has succeeded in organizing the Tacoma fire department under an American Federation of Labor charter.

That the small-town printers are awake to the benefits of organization is shown by the fact that the printers in Kent, Wash., have asked to be placed under the jurisdiction of No. 170. This jurisdiction has been granted No. 170 by the International and organization will begin at an early date.

No. 170 has taken a stand against the importation of oriental labor into this country.

One more shop, that of the Quality Press, Langford & Hopkins, proprietors, has been added to the list of label shops under No. 170's jurisdiction. A new press has recently been installed in this shop.

The apprentice committee to serve the ensuing year is composed of A. V. Morris, T. L. Jacobs and L. H. Place.

Mrs Hattie E. Cassidy, a member of this union and for a number of years employed as a copyholder on the Ledger, has accepted a similar position on the Tribune, filling a vacancy caused by the recent marriage of Miss Godfrey.

George Rieman has joined the "back-to-the-soil" movement and is now the proud possessor of a two-acre ranch in the fertile Puyallup valley, while L. A. Hawk, "spud king," is doing his "bit" on a few city lots.

Fay Demeree, who served his time on the News, is now serving time in Uncle Sam's navy, being rated as a third-class fireman.

With the coming of Uncle Sam's 70,000-acre army post to Tacoma also comes an opportunity for printers to break away from the trade during the summer months. A. La Duc is using his automobile as a bus to carry passengers to and from the American Lake camp.

Work continues slow, with plenty of subs on the boards. L. G. WHEELER.

BANGOR, ME.

Representative Joseph J. Dallas for the past month has been making good progress in the organizing campaign for No. 446. Bangor at present is doing its utmost to get the crew of the Commercial office to organize, and with the assistance of Mr. Dallas things should be greatly improved upon in the near future.

Secretary Elmer E. Roberts, after joining the ranks of the benedicts and spending his honeymoon in New York, has returned to his duties at the News office and has started the "long grind."

Charles G. Johnson returned from the New England convention at Manchester, N. H., loud in praise of the royal welcome he received.

Dr. Harry D. McNeil, one of the medical examiners of Penobscot county, has accepted a first lieutenant's commission in the army for service in France. Doctor McNeil was a former member of No. 446.

Work at present in Bangor is fair.

JOHN F. O'LEARY.

LA CROSSE, WIS.

To the members of La Crosse Union No. 448: Our regular meeting is always held the first Monday night in the month at Trades and Labor hall. Why don't you come up and make yourself acquainted outside of the shop in which you are employed? Probably the warm weather has something to do with your not attending the meeting, but forget the weather as you forget the meeting night and be with the "old standbys."

Work in the different shops is very light at the present time.

Vice-President Barrett was here on business during the past month. A special meeting was called by President Hoelzer to discuss the allied printing trades council which the pressmen of this city wish to organize. Mr. Barrett gave the local some valuable information and told us also in what kind of a manner we should go at it. Although this local can not break its label contract with the employers, it nevertheless will go ahead and form a council. Mr. Barrett proved himself to be a fine gentleman and made a host of friends on the first visit he has ever made to this city.

One new member was taken in at the last meeting, and John Eddy, of the Serres-Eddy typesetting plant, drew his card. Mr. Eddy has left the city for a short time, due to the lull in the printing business at this time of the year. He went with the Lanston Monotype Company. Mr. Serres is handling the typesetting end alone for the present.

The big picnic of No. 448 was held on Sunday, June 17, at Goose Island, about ten miles south of this city. The tribe of printers and a seven-piece brass band were taken to the picnic grounds in motor trucks, and on arrival Chef John Jansky and assistants, who arrived on the scene the afternoon of Saturday, had prepared the breakfast, which consisted of fish, bread, coffee and beer. Fishing tackle was taken along, but owing to the extremely high water so early in the season, practically no fishing was done; at any rate, no fish were caught. Plenty of music was furnished by the band on the grounds all day and on the homeward trip. Two indoor baseball games were played between the jobmen and the newspaper men. The morning game was won by the newspaper men and the afternoon game was won by the jobbers. The batteries for both games were John Eddy and Mike Roubik for the jobbers and Pete Wais and Tom Berny for the newsies. Chef Jansky and assistants Harry Eaton and Ed Sila prepared another big meal for dinner. A light lunch was served for the evening meal. Cards also helped pass away one of the most pleasant days members of No. 448 had ever spent together. There were many weary arms and stiff bones the next day and setting type was hard work.

Tourists a-plenty are making their appearance nowadays, all reporting work dull everywhere.

HENRY J. HOELZER.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

The piece scale is all right for some—
I no like um.
It makes a man a hog become—
I no like um.
The more you set the more you fret,
The more you fret the less you get,
The less you get the more you sweat—
I no like um.

The City of the Saints has tidings of great joy to unfold to the printing fraternity, in a sanitary sense, thanks to the unceasing energy of the local's officials and others. The Tribune, which installed fume pipes on its machines a year ago, has added intake and exhaust fans in the composing room, which is a great improvement. The Telegram also has piped its machines. At present writing the Herald-Republican has put in four additional windows, two on the south and two on the north side of the composing room, piped the machines, with the main pipe line connecting with a large suction fan, and cleaned the walls and ceiling. Heretofore improvements like those mentioned above were unheard of, and the members of our union are thankful for what has taken place. Of course, there are many other needed alterations, and we hope to have them later on. Some job shops of the city are in need of better sanitary conditions, and they, too, will be asked to remedy the defects.

C. M. Hecker, president of No. 115, who so nobly defended labor's interests as a member of the last legislature, is a candidate for city commissioner this fall. His record as a union man and legislator should elect him.

Paul J. Crabtree, chairman of the Herald-Republican, is spending the summer at the old home in Oklahoma.

D. E. Coleman, of Los Angeles, was a Salt Lake visitor during July.

Chris Pennartz left last month for a three-months' vacation to his old Illinois home. This is his nineteenth annual visit.

A new three-machine daily paper will be started in Ogden some time in August. Lester Baker will be foreman. The force has been selected this early, July 15, and everything points to success for the publication, which will be a democratic organ. Ogden, by the way, is now a "time" town, having done away with the piece scale. Salt Lake may be the next to see the light in this matter.

The Mutual Typesetting Company is a new Salt Lake firm. It is a stock company affair, and started business with two typesetting machines.

Fort Douglas, the United States military fort up in the mountains east of town, has all the resemblance of a sure-enough war barracks. There are at present four regiments of infantry, one of cavalry and one of artillery, and a stockade with 400 German prisoners. For the most part the prisoners came from Guam and Hawaii. The government has built hundreds of temporary buildings, covering 500 acres of ground. At one time 1,000 carpenters were employed at the fort.

Before this letter is published in THE JOURNAL Utah will be added to the list of dry states. After August 1 selling of booze, or even having it in one's possession, will be a felony, and the penalty is severe.

O. WILSON.

HARTFORD, CONN.

Representative B. G. Brady was here last month and gave an address on the apprenticeship question to the members of No. 127 and the apprentices.

Six new members were taken in at our last meeting.

Messrs. Flynn and Clintsman, delegates to Manchester, gave a very good account of what happened at the convention and they compliment the Manchester printers for the good time they gave their guests while there.

George Crockett, member of No. 127, has applied for admission to the Home.

O. E. Miles was elected as correspondent to the New England Bulletin.

Orange Pickett, of Boston, and well known in the Connecticut valley, and Mr. Downey, of New Haven, where Mr. Pickett spent his vacation as the guest of Mr. Downey, called on old acquaintances and made many new ones while spending a few days in Hartford the past month.

James S. Ryan, a native of Vergennes but a long-time resident of Hartford, died at his home here, age 81 years. The remains were accompanied from Hartford to Vergennes, Vt., by Harry McInnis and John Keough, representing Hartford Typographical Union, of which Mr. Ryan was a lifelong member. Resolutions were drawn up by No. 127 and a copy sent to his sister. Mr. Ryan was born in Vergennes on February 29, 1836, the son of John and Jane Ryan, and was one of four children. His birthplace was the first dwelling house erected in Vergennes by a white man, Donald McIntosh, the first white settler at Vergennes Falls. He traveled all through the west and south, but had made his home in Hartford and nearby towns for over forty years. "Jim" Ryan, or "Big Injun," as he was familiarly known, was almost the last of a type of artisan who flourished in the last quarter of the nineteenth century, since made impossible by the advent of typesetting machines. He probably had a wider acquaintance among the printing fraternity than any man in America, and those of his associates who are left will hear with sorrow of his death. His only near surviving relative is a sister, Mrs. Richard Maldoon, of Vergennes.

H. F. TROMMER.

PORTLAND, ORE.

D. O. Gallup, former secretary of No. 58, has drawn his card and at last accounts was located in Eugene. George H. Howell, newly-elected secretary, has taken hold of the work with enthusiasm and already has shown results.

The union will contribute to a fund being raised by the central labor council to fight the recently passed anti-picketing law.

Two members of the Journal force were married recently. Mrs. Marion Carr, of the proofroom, is now Mrs. Steven Neuberger. Arthur Anderson and Miss Lillian Thurkelson were married and have returned from a brief wedding trip. Both couples were remembered by the chapel with suitable presents.

L. H. Gotthardt, who for several years has been a resident of Portland and a member of No. 58, but who had been out of work much of the time and at his own request was about to be aided in getting to San Francisco, has disappeared. He was in a much disturbed condition mentally when last seen and it is believed he has made away with himself. He was a German of long residence in America and a highly-educated man.

The wife of J. W. Jackson, of the Telegram force, died recently. She was ill but a short time and was the victim of a paralytic stroke.

The Journal baseball team, besides playing a schedule in the printers' league, is accepting out-of-town dates, and John Yezerski, the business manager of the team, is "slipping the cranberry" to the boys in the bush quite handsomely.

GEORGE E. WILLARD.

MISSOURI VALLEY TYPOGRAPHICAL CONFERENCE.

Chickasha, Okla., with a membership of nine, is the latest addition to the ranks of the conference. The total of affiliated unions is now thirty-three.

V. S. Wilhite, with the World Publishing Company, is the new secretary of Tulsa (Okla.) Union.

Leavenworth (Kan.) Union has signed three-year contracts with all shops in the city, as follows: Newspapers—Night: Foremen and machinist-operators, $26.50; operators and handmen, $22. Day: Foremen and machinist-operators, $24; operators and handmen, $20.50. Job offices—Foremen and machinist-operators, $22.50; handmen, $19.

The Daily News of Oklahoma City has moved into its new $50,000 building.

Most of the unions in this conference district report a falling off in work during July.

The secretary is in receipt of a considerable quantity of literature from International headquarters, which will be distributed among non-member printers in the six states of the district.

Summarized reports of trade conditions in July are as follows:

Atchison—Quiet; regular force all that is needed.

Chickasha—Work dull; prospects good.

Coffeyville—Good; all members employed.

Columbia—Slow.

Council Bluffs—Business good in both branches.

Des Moines—Slow for the last month in job shops; plenty of men coming to town.

Hannibal—Fair.

Independence—Normal; all printers working.

Jefferson City—Fair.

Joplin—State of trade continues good, with all men working.

Digitized by Google

Kansas City—Dull; plenty of workmen to fill all requirements.

Leavenworth—Work only fair.

Mason City—Steady.

Muskogee—State of trade good for this time of year.

Oklahoma City—A little falling off in work during the last thirty days.

Pittsburg—Fair.

Salina—Good.

Springfield—Good on newspapers; not so good in job offices.

St. Joseph—Fair on newspapers; dull in job offices.

Topeka—Lull in work; some idle men.

Tulsa—Newspaper work holding up fine; slack in a few of the book and job offices.

Wichita—Fair in both branches.

St. Joseph, Mo. CHARLES RHODE.

SANTA FE, N. M.

Carl Greene has leased the Eagle, weekly and job office, non-union, and one of the first things he did was to hunt up the officers of No. 405 and sign a contract, thus giving this local two more situations. Our other non-union office, however, still remains outside.

Frank Jenkins some time ago sold his home here and has removed to San Diego. The change was caused by the necessity for a lower altitude for Mrs. Jenkins' benefit.

Jack DeMotte, formerly of Oklahoma City, but more recently of Cleburne, Texas, fell heir to the situation vacated by Mr. Jenkins.

William D. Starkweather has gone to Boston and New York for a month's visit with relatives and friends. F. G. Geddes, of west coast points, is subbing for him.

Joe Stivers came in from Albuquerque recently, headed eastward.

John Mehrs, for the past year and a half foreman of the New Mexican job department, has resigned his place to accept the position of instructor of printing in the high school at Albuquerque. We surely hate to lose John, but we are glad he has secured the better situation.

Work in the job department during May and June was quite rushing, but has resumed its normal status once more. W. H. MARTIN.

BUTLER, PA.

No. 415 recently negotiated a new scale, with an increase of $2 all around. The new scale calls for $20 for handmen, $22 for machine men, machinist-operators $24, with $1 additional for each machine taken care of. The night scale is $2 above the day scale in every particular.

Our union was represented at the typographical conference in Oil City on Sunday, July 8, by R. L. Collins, H. W. Eshelman, E. W. Baker, Cecil Eckels, Ross Colville and H. A. Werth. Oil City certainly entertained the boys in fine shape, and the conference was also a grand success in a business way.

The Citizen Printing Company now has its new press in operation, and it has certainly made a big improvement in the appearance of the paper.

Cecil Eckels, operator on the Citizen, has gone to West Virginia, where he will be employed in the future. Gus Reilly, formerly of the Eagle, is now a night operator on the Citizen.

The boys are all talking vacation at present. There will be much doubling up from the looks of things, as it is hard to get competent subs.

Our trade in this city is pretty hard hit by the war. Five printers will be called to the colors, and this will leave a big hole in some of the offices.

The printers' baseball league is making a strenuous effort to play out its schedule. There are four teams, Eagle, Times, Citizen and Ziegler. Wet weather has caused the postponement of a number of games. H. A. WERTH.

DEATH OF JOSEPH KOPECKY.

Joseph Kopecky, one of the oldest members of the Bohemian-Slavonic Typographical Union No. 131 and one of its founders, died in New York hospital, after a serious sickness, at the age of 55 years. Joseph Kopecky was born in Czechland (Bohemia), Europe, and lived in this county over thirty years. For nineteen years he was a member of the union. He was always a good-standing member, good fellow brother and his heart was always in the right place. He sympathized with every one who was worried with care and worked at all times for the benefit of the union. He also was a wise employer, being a co-operator of the daily paper, New Yorské Listy, and made no difference between the employer and employe, thus gaining the heart of every brother. His memory will always be revered. CHARLES JERABEK.

New York, N. Y.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Typographical Union No. 10 has signed a new scale with the newspaper publishers of the city carrying a substantial increase. When No. 10's newspaper scale expired, April 1, 1916, the publishers furnished evidence of such an enormous increase of expenses for paper, ink and other supplies that the membership voted to extend the old contract and scale for one year, in the hope that in the meantime conditions would become more settled. At the March meeting of the union a scale committee was appointed, which, after thorough investigation and comparison of scales of other cities, drafted a $30 flat scale. When this scale was presented to the publishers they made a counter-proposition to renew the old contract. The list of scale increases published in the May JOURNAL shows that operators in Louisville had received an increase of 48 cents per week in sixteen years. The membership felt that in view of the high cost of living they were entitled to a substantial increase in wages. The publishers admitted they were entitled to a substantial increase, stated that the scale adopted by the union was, in view of the high cost of living, reasonable and what they ought to receive, but—the high cost of publishing a paper. The scale committee and the publishers coming to a deadlock, it was voted by No. 10 to go to arbitration. After several weeks of investigation and deliberation the representatives of the publishers and the union reached a compromise agreement in conference, giving an increase of $2 per week to day men and $2.40 per week to night men, with price and one-half for the first three hours overtime and double price for all over three hours. The award granted back pay from the first day of May. Several men who have left Louisville have some back pay coming from offices affected.

Labor day in Louisville this year promises to be more generally observed than in many years past. With but one exception every union affiliated with the central body has expressed its intention of being represented in the big Labor day parade, and of taking a prominent part in the Labor day picnic at Phœnix Hill park. J. O. Ames, president of No. 10, is chairman of the Labor day committee of the united trades and labor assembly and G. B. Johnston is chairman of the parade committee of No. 10. The combined efforts of these two gentlemen, together with an enthusiastic parade committee, should result in a 100 per cent showing of No. 10. The fact that we have not been in a Labor day parade for over ten years also augurs well for a large turn-out.

Our moonlight excursion on July 30 was well attended and was a success in every way. These affairs, of which this was the second of the season, are doing much to link the membership together socially.

Bowling talk is again abroad in the land after a lay-off during the hot weather. We intend to make the coming season the best in our history.

George App, of the Herald chapel, surprised the boys by being quietly married recently. George was doubly fortunate, having secured a bride and a situation in the same week.

A. A. Flanagan, for some years an operator on the Herald, has located in Chicago.

The cause of unionism is "looking up" in Louisville. The big army camp located here has given employment to hundreds of union workmen in all branches of the building trade. The garment workers, of whom there are several thousand, were organized recently and are negotiating with the employers. ALVA M. BOWER.

OAKLAND, CAL.

Oakland is putting itself on the map again in large letters, and anything this city starts is accomplished with credit to itself. What Oakland is doing now is asking for a new scale of prices, viz., a four-dollar-a-week increase in salary and a reduction of a half-hour per diem in work. While the writer is not speaking for the union as a whole, he feels assured that the membership is a unit anent the increase in scale. Other trades have accomplished better wages, while the local typographical union has stood by until the increased cost of living compelled the action taken above. The four-dollar-a-week increase, while it will be a blessing to all of us, will not make up for the higher cost of foodstuffs and clothing, which one has to buy—especially the married men and the father of children. Many members of the union, especially the sub, find it a hard struggle to get by on the wages received and when the scale goes into effect on August 1 (provided there is no opposition from the newspaper publishers' association—and there should be none) it is hoped that every one will be able to have a steak or roast occasionally instead of the present plebeian dish—pork and beans or boiled rice Spanish. The union has a very efficient scale committee of three in Joe Rickard, C. F. Gunther and R. M. Olsen, and the union, in the writer's opinion, should have full confidence in their ability to pull the thing through to a successful issue.

The Enquirer has another foreman. This time it is E. C. Cointe, who held the position some years ago and who at one time was foreman of the Honolulu Advertiser in the Hawaiian city. He succeeded Joe Mulhall, who is again in the proofroom.

Work has dropped some in Oakland, though the subs are picking a little on account of regulars vacationizing. The situation holders are all taking their vacations before the raise goes into effect—not that that is the reason—just a mere coincidence. Otherwise things are normal here.

E. C. Stephens, delegate-elect, is buby these days studying time tables and telling every one what he will do when he gets to the convention. Steve is a live wire—always tingling.

President Cuthbert appointed the undersigned JOURNAL correspondent, vice Ed Hamilton, resigned. JOE A. MULHALL.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

Business is picking up. This is generally the dull season here, but everybody is busy now.

Saturday, July 14, the Dixon-Paul company closed up the shack and the whole force and their families took a day off. They went to Riverside park, one of Memphis' beautiful breathing places, and had a regular old-fashioned picnic.

The new labor paper, the Labor Review, made its appearance July 7. It is a six-column, four-page sheet. Judging from the amount of ads carried and the class of reading matter, it ought to be a success. The members of organized labor here are doing their part by furnishing a healthy subscription list. It is printed in the office of the Memphis Linotype Printing Company.

L. W. Thompson, foreman at the Linotype Printing Company, and Mrs. Thompson are putting in a few weeks resting in the mountains of old North Carolina. They are at Asheville.

Yes, we are going to parade Labor day.

A committee was appointed at the July meeting of No. 11 to report at the next meeting as to the feasibility of pensioning dependents of members who may enlist for active service in the war.

Cards issued: James Northcross, W. J. Wilson, A. Z. Hoffa, T. H. Prescott. Received: James Northcross, A. Z. Hoffa, Wood Allen, Fred N. Steadman. Obligated: Lonie Mae Hicks.

ALBERT STARRETT.

MINOT, N. D.

Ben Shroeder has arrived from Bismarck, N. D., and accepted the situation on the News vacated by Dick Murray, who is farming it near Boise, Idaho. Gus Anderson, of the News chapel, has pulled his card and left for Grand Forks and other eastern points. Roy E. Etter, after a brief sojourn as foreman at the Periodical, has pulled his card and wended his way westward to the "treasure state" in search of adventure and incidentally such employment as may come his way. P. P. Nail, of the Thatcher-Whalen company, is also somewhere in Montana. H. C. Wilbur has again taken over his shop, which he leased some time ago to Mr. Wüg. James H. Cross, of Grand Forks, has accepted the situation as foreman at the Messenger office.

Otto Gross has forsaken the printshop for the army, and at this time is busily engaged in whipping the raw recruits of Company D, First regiment North Dakota national guard, into shape for active service. Mr. Gross was appointed captain of Company D on July 13, having served four years as first lieutenant.

The last meeting of No. 376 was well attended, and the committee on by-laws submitted a very interesting report. Members of this local who enlist for the war will be kept in good standing.

At this writing business is good, with all members working full time and calls for men from both city and country. E. D. HICKS.

MADISON, WIS.

To stimulate a greater interest in union meetings Typographical Union No. 103 voted at its last meeting to inaugurate a series of discussions, to follow directly after the close of the business meeting. Speakers will be secured to address the union on the various vital topics; members of the union will also be asked to prepare short talks on labor problems, after which a general discussion will follow.

Frank Schillinger, who has been secretary for the past two years, taking office when Harry Collins left Madison, has resigned. Harry Collins, who has again returned to the city, was elected to succeed Schillinger. The union gave a vote of thanks to Mr. Schillinger, who will take the examination to enter the officers' training corps at Fort Sheridan, Ill.

Local printers are having a good laugh at the Madison Democrat, a non-union shop doing state printing, because this shop is unable to secure printers to turn out the state printing. Both the speaker of the assembly and Governor Philipp have sent the proprietors of this sweatshop strong letters threatening them with proceedings unless they turn out the work which is now overdue. This shop is certainly having a hard time to get competent printers. DAVID WEISS.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

Beil & Evans, who have conducted a job printing establishment in East Federal street for a number of years, have purchased a lot on the south side at Market street and Wayne avenue and will erect a modern two-story building for their printing plant. The firm expects to occupy its new home not later than October.

At a special meeting of No. 200 held July 2, Gerald Cover and John Scialdone were initiated as journeymen.

Harry Deschend, formerly of the firm of Deschend & Hurford, is now connected with the United Printing Company in the capacity of general manager.

George B. Havey, for several years a member of the Telegram chapel, has resigned his situation as operator of an ad machine and has accepted a lucrative position in the employ of the United Printing Company.

E. F. Black has resigned as foreman of the Edwards company composing room and departed for Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Black has been succeeded by Henry Nidermaier.

William F. White was in Columbus, Ohio, several days last month to see his son, Paul J. White, a local apprentice who is in training in the hospital corps at Columbus barracks.

Among the printers who have thus far taken vacation trips are: Harvey H. Green, who spent two weeks at various points in North Carolina; T. C. Gingell, who sojourned in southern Indiana for a fortnight; E. W. Tuttle, who visited in Wheeling, W. Va., and Herbert J. Jones, who had his fun at Conneaut lake.

Cecil Stewart is now working in the Vindicator adroom. Jake Barber, his pal, has returned to Buffalo, N. Y.

Before this letter appears in print several members of No. 200 will be in training in the local Tenth regiment. The Vindicator will lose four of its printers when the Tenth departs.

The Labor day committee is hard at work completing plans for the celebration to be held in this city. Every local in the city will participate in the parade on Labor day morning. It has not been announced who the speaker of the day will be, but the local committee is in communication with several labor leaders of national prominence, and one of these will be secured. The athletic meet and picnic at Idora park will be a feature.

LEWISTON, ME.

Our organization campaign is going along effectively and the membership is the largest in our history. Many of our new members are employed on the Evening Journal, and their interest and enthusiasm has instilled new life into the union. The old members, who showed courage and loyalty in the discouraging days, are proud of the splendid spirit shown by the new ones and are confident that the future will bring gratifying results.

Encouraged by the activity of No. 532, the pressmen have organized a local of sixteen members.

The Manchester convention of the New England Typographical Union was a success in every particular. Delegates and visitors were profuse in their praise of the manner in which the local provided for their entertainment. The New England Typographical Union is a great aid to the smaller unions. Words of good cheer were spoken by delegates and visitors, including President Scott, of the International Typographical Union.

At the recent convention of the Maine State Federation of Labor, held at Bar Harbor, it was voted to establish a weekly labor paper. It will be known as the Maine Labor Journal and edited and published by Edward S. Alden, president of Holyoke Typographical Union. Publicity regarding organized labor is needed in Maine, and Mr. Alden has shown his qualifications by his conduct of the Artisan, a first-class labor paper which he publishes in Massachusetts. J. T. MORRISSEY.

NEWBURGH, N. Y.

The regular meeting of No. 305 was held Tuesday evening, July 10. William C. Galloway, who has held the office of secretary-treasurer for several years, resigned on account of leaving the city. Mr. Galloway was formerly employed by the Newburgh Journal as a linotype operator. He leaves town to take a position with the Highland Democrat, of Peekskill. Milton K. Barrus, who has filled the office before, was elected to fill the vacancy, while Eugene K. Lanspery was appointed to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Barrus as recording secretary. The label committee was instructed to "get busy."

With the issue of June 30, 1917, the Newburgh Daily Journal ceased its career, after an existence of eighty-four years, having started as a weekly in 1833. The Journal has been purchased by the Newburgh News and has been consolidated with that publication, which leaves it the only newspaper published in Newburgh. The Journal was established by John D. Spalding, who died in 1853. His widow continued the paper, with the assistance of William Smiley, who purchased it in 1855, and continued it until 1858, when it was sold to Edward Nixon, who in the following year sold it to Rufus A. Reed, who changed the name to the Highland Chieftain. In June, 1861, it was purchased by Cyrus B. Martin, and the name was changed back to the Journal, and in 1862 issued as a daily. On March 1, 1877, the paper was purchased by Samuel Ritchie, L. C. Bodine and Frank Hull.

Digitized by Google

About a year later Mr. Bodine retired from the firm, which continued the paper until 1903, when the Newburgh Journal Company was formed. For six years Mr. Ritchie and Mr. Hull were the dominating members of the company. In 1909 there was a reorganization, since which time former Governor B. B. Odell has controlled the publication. Mr. Ritchie died in 1909. Mr. Hull died recently. John T. Ronk was the last editor. To celebrate the event the Journal issued a special edition of thirty-two pages. The high price of print paper and other material which enters into the publication of a paper is probably the cause why the Journal is no more. The Journal also had a job department, which was also purchased by the News Company.

The Telegram, a weekly paper established about thirty years ago, ceased publication about two months ago. Of late the mechanical work was done at the Journal office.

The first newspaper published in Newburgh was in 1795, 122 years ago, by Lucius Carey, and was known as the Newburgh Packet.

With the passing of the Journal quite a number of members of No. 305 are out of a job. Fred Hilliker, a charter member of No. 305, had been in the employ of the Journal for twenty-seven years. Mr. Hilliker operated the first linotype to be introduced in a newspaper office between New York city and Albany. He is a former president of the union. S. E. Huddleson, superintendent of the job printing department, had been employed in the office for thirty-five years. William Berry, head adman, employed for thirty-five years. W. C. Galloway, who has held the office of secretary-treasurer for several years, had been on the Journal force for twenty-seven years. This record shows that they all "made good."

MILTON K. BARRUS.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Scranton looks like a sure winner for the 1918 convention. A more deserving city could not be picked.

The committee in charge of the Colorado Springs convention is to be congratulated on its success with the souvenir. Major Snider and Steve O'Donnell, in charge of the book, left no stone unturned to get results.

The glowing tribute paid the management of the Union Printers Home in the July issue of THE JOURNAL by "Cowboy" Jones, of Oakland, Cal., should be read by every member of the International Typographical Union. Mr. Jones puts a quietus on the anvil chorus and uplifters who think the Home is not "worth the price."

The Commercial Tribune chapel sends five volunteers to the front—Harold Feare, Stanley Mathews, Arthur Haumasser, Oscar Weber and Bob Shannahan. This chapel leads Cincinnati newspapers with volunteers.

On July 7 the Grim Reaper invaded the home of W. D. Crowley, his wife passing away after a long illness. Mr. Crowley has been a member of the Commercial Tribune chapel for a number of years. The chapel sent a beautiful floral tribute and the bereaved husband has the sympathy of his many friends in No. 3.

Don't fail to attend the meetings. There is something interesting every month and you will meet your old friends and can indulge in a friendly back-cap before and after the meeting.

Neil Crowley, of Chattanooga, Tenn., looking well and prosperous, spent a week in Cincinnati last month. He is always a welcome visitor.

Work has been slack here for some time, the newspapers and job shops all running short-handed.

Jimmy Hocter, manager of the printers' baseball team, and Billy Crozier, jr., were presented with watches and a purse by the Enquirer chapel. They were volunteers from that office, both enlisting in the First Ohio regiment.

David W. Baird, chairman of the International board of auditors, stopped off in Cincinnati on his way to Indianapolis for the second audit of the International books. While here he was the guest of his colleague on the board, Johnny Dugan, and was also chaperoned over the city and through the cities over on the other side of the Ohio by Billy Finlay, foreman of the adroom on the Times-Star. It had been thirty years since Finlay and Baird met, they both being up in the Alaska country together and through the extreme northwest. Dugan accompanied Baird to Indianapolis and after a conference with members of the executive council he returned immediately to Cincinnati, where he is giving up most of his time to draft board work. Because of this fact Dugan is unable to assist at this session of the board of auditors continually, but will make trips to and from Indianapolis when it is absolutely necessary. As Uncle Sam has first call on Dugan's services, the executive council ruled that his duty first was to the government.

The pamphlet recently issued by the International Typographical Union, entitled "Somewhere in France," is a most interesting one and should be read by every member of the union. No labor or fraternal organization in the entire world can equal the International Typographical Union, let alone surpass us, when it comes to quickly and intelligently handling the mortuary benefits.

Fred A. Feare, formerly foreman of the Commercial Tribune, of this city, but now located in Paris, Ill., dropped in on us during the past month looking extremely good and prosperous. His business venture there is going beyond his fondest expectations.

Ed Hale, of Chattanooga, ran up to Cincinnati to attend the Latonia races, and, incidentally, called on a number of printer friends.

The handsome majority given the agreement with the closed shop division of the typothetæ shows our members are abreast with the times in eliminating the foolish idea that strikes bring results.

James Gillespie is spending a few months in "Cincy" with friends and relatives. He has achieved much success in the song-writing business in New York, several of his latest "hits" proving most popular.

The Newspaper Carriers' Protective Association of Cincinnati is having some difficulty with the corner boys about the distribution of the afternoon papers, but it is hoped all differences will be settled in the near future with the assistance of the allied printing trades and the central labor councils.

Hennegan & Co., of this city, wish to announce that they are now making flags under union conditions and solicit our support.

At the last meeting of No. 3 it was decided to parade on Labor day.

Several members of the board of governors of the International Allied Printing Trades Council spent a short time in the city during the past month.

George E. Bryan, who formerly conducted a job office in this city and has been a member of No. 3 continuously for about forty years, has made application for the old age pension. He has been in failing health for more than two years.

The Ohio State Federation of Labor will hold its annual convention in Cincinnati the second week in October. At the last meeting James Sheil, Frank L. Rist, Frank E. Bell and Charles E. Mayers were elected by acclamation to make up the full delegation. Secretary Harold P. Murray, of No. 3, and Thomas J. Donnelly, secretary of the federation, were elected at the time of the regular election in May.

Philip Koch, one of No. 3's pensioners, died at the Branch hospital Sunday morning, June 30.

The setting of the complete conscription registration by two of our afternoon dailies has been a blessing to some of our subs who have not been getting any too much work recently. Work in general is dull.

The board of trustees purchased $200 worth of liberty loan bonds. They also bought a large plot in Spring Grove cemetery, which adjoins our old section where No. 3's monument stands.

At the regular meeting of Typographical Union No. 3, held Sunday, June 10, 1917, the committee appointed by President Seaman to draw up resolutions to thank Charles P. Taft for his recent voluntary increase of pay for his employes, submitted the following, which was adopted unanimously:

Whereas, In times of stress and depression, and especially during periods of war, when living conditions become serious problems to wage-earners; and,

Whereas, The tendency of all is to economize in anticipation of harder trials to be endured; and,

Whereas, Hon. Charles P. Taft, proprietor of the Cincinnati Times-Star, has voluntarily given a 10 per cent wage increase to all employes of the composing room of said paper, same being given without any solicitation on the part of said employes; and,

Whereas, The Times-Star has a five-year contract with the Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3, the wages being regulated by this contract, and any increase would have to be voluntary; and,

Whereas, At no time in the history of contractual relations between Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3 and the Cincinnati Newspaper Association has such a generous action been noted; and,

Whereas, There have been seasons when the relations between Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3 and the Cincinnati Newspaper Association have been strained to almost the breaking point; and,

Whereas, It is not within our province to dwell upon the many benefactions of Hon. Charles P. Taft, such as his connections with various hospitals, etc., the Zoo, Anna Louise Inn, and the Union Bethel; and,

Whereas, All employes of the Times-Star composing room have for a number of years enjoyed yearly a week's vacation with pay; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we recognize Hon. Charles P. Taft's gift of a 10 per cent increase to our members in his employ as an act entirely in keeping with his well-known character for generosity; and, be it further

Resolved, That words can not convey our real appreciation of the character of a man who lives on such a high plane that he has more than a passing interest in the welfare of his employes; and, be it further

Resolved, That we will cherish with a feeling of deep respect the motive which prompted the Hon. Charles P. Taft's act; and, be it further

Resolved, That as a token of our appreciation of Hon. Charles P. Taft's interest in our welfare, we unanimously give him a rising vote of thanks and transmit to him a copy of this resolution.

OWATONNA, MINN.

Typographical Union No. 770, of Owatonna, Minn., at its regular June meeting voted $10 toward the Red Cross, while its membership at present is but ten and three of these have enlisted in the army. They are Herbert Liljequist, Henry Oberlander and Basil L. Bierce. These boys, however, will keep their cards with No. 770, thus making its membership as usual.

At this meeting No. 770 lost its president, R. R. Jones, who went to La Crosse to accept a position. Mr. Jones, who has been instrumental in organizing this local and encouraging the boys, will be missed very much. However, we all wish him success in his new position. STEVE BURZINSKI.

PATERSON, N. J.

A new weekly, to be known as the Jersey Jewish Journal, is soon to make its appearance. It will carry the label.

Alex McMillan, well known in Binghamton, is now running a Merg. on the Press-Guardian. Mike Greengrass has given up night work and is now running an intertype on the Clifton Times, a new weekly in New Jersey's newest city.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Stagg recently observed the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage.

Charles Albonica and George Hemer have forsaken "Big Six" and are now with the Manufacturers' Printing Company, of this city.

"Bill" Pickett, carrying a Bridgeport card, worked here a few days and left for Albany.

NOTES FROM UNION PRINTERS HOME.

Miss Jo Coffin, member of "Big Six" Typographical Union, and Miss Ann Hogan, B., S. U. of A., of New York city, spent several days at the Home during the week of June 11, visiting friends and renewing old acquaintances among the residents here. They were delegates from New York to the National Women's Trade Union League, which met in annual session this year in Kansas City. They are two clever young ladies and seemed to know just how to spend a vacation to get the most enjoyment out of it. Miss Coffin's brother, Sam Coffin, spent about eight months here last year as a sanatorium patient, returning home greatly benefited in health. The two returned east via Oklahoma.

Dr. C. O. Giese, of the Home medical staff, returned June 16 from a trip to New York city, where he was in attendance at the annual meeting of the American Medical Association.

J. R. Alford, of Washington, D. C., a tubercular patient in the sanatorium who left the Home a couple of years ago greatly improved in health, returned the fore part of June after a relapse of the old malady.

A 21-year-old son of O. W. Humphrey, a recent arrival at the Home, enlisted in the United States navy. He was one of two out of a squad of fourteen that passed the examination, attaining a percentage of 98 in physical and mental efficiency, and was at once made a petty officer. When asked why he failed on the other two points, the examiner replied that it was because he had two teeth missing.

Apropos of the foregoing, it might be advisable to state here that a month ago Allen M. Smythe, son of R. B. Smythe, of Virginia, and grandson of the writer of these chronicles, enlisted in the government aviation corps, and after passing a rigid physical and mental examination in Washington, D. C., was sent to a national school for air navigators at Columbus, Ohio, for a four-months' term of instruction. The young man is 22 years old and recently graduated from the State University of Virginia after a four-years' course in the study of civil and mechanical engineering, branches of education which are very essential to persons sailing in aeroplanes. At the conclusion of his preparatory service, if he is found efficient, he will be commissioned as a first lieutenant in the army and most likely ordered to France or Belgium for duty.

The Union Printers Home is certainly not behind in efforts to further the cause of humanity by contributing its "bit" to alleviate the sufferings incident to the world war going on in Europe. During Red Cross week in Colorado Springs there was collected in two days at the Home the sum of $122.10 to help along the amount asked for by the association. More than a hundred dollars of this sum was contributed by residents of the Home; the balance were contributions from employes. The following handsome acknowledgment of the money was sent to the Home by the local committee:

To the Residents and Employes of the Union Printers Home, Colorado Springs, Colo.:

Dear Friends—On behalf of the committee and myself, I wish to thank you for your very liberal gift toward the work of the American Red Cross in Colorado Springs.

The campaign has met with great success here, and your contribution is a mark of appreciation of the sacrifices which will be made by our soldier boys who go to the front.

Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) Spencer Penrose,
Chairman.

Miss Genevieve Gariepy, resident from "Big Six," who has been in the hospital for several months, has recovered sufficiently to be returned to her old room in the main building.

Miss Clara Worland, coming here some three years ago from Indianapolis No. 1 as a tuberculosis patient, has so far recovered as to be discharged from the "bug colony" and is now a resident of the main building.

Frank J. McCormick, a former resident of the Home from New York Union No. 6, and who vacated last May as "able to work," joined the field artillery service of the United States army in Denver and is now learning how to slug out enemy columns.

Col. Daniel V. Chisholm and wife, of Washington, D. C., were visitors at the Home during the latter part of June as guests of Superintendent Daley. Colonel Chisholm is deputy public printer in the big government office at Washington, and a member of Columbia Union No. 101. He is also commander-in-chief of the national organization of Spanish war veterans, and during his vacation from official duties in the capital city is making an extensive tour of the country in the interest of that organization. While here he met many of his old comrades in arms and a number of former associates in the government printing office.

A. F. Hill, aged resident from New York No. 6, is still confined to the hospital, where he has been for the past three months, suffering from sciatic rheumatism and stomach trouble. Occasionally, however, he hobbles out on crutches and sits in the sunshine for an hour or two of a fair day.

A. K. Marsh, resident of the Home for the past ten months from Sioux City, Iowa, has assumed the duties of night watchman.

John M. James, familiarly known to the craft as "Jimmy" James, and a former resident from Cleveland, Ohio, was a visitor here July 1, coming "overland" from Los Angeles to Colorado Springs. He expects to remain in this region until after the convention in August and then will return east.

Independence day was duly celebrated here. During the day the Home on the hill was almost deserted by everybody who was physically able to get away, some going to the city to witness the big patriotic parade in the forenoon, while others hiked to the canons or to the parks to spend the day as became good and loyal citizens.

H. C. Rockwell, member of Decatur Union No. 215, visited the Home July 2.

July 3 the angel of death visited the Home and lifted the mantle of affliction from the shoulders of our old comrade, William R. Wade, age 78 years and a few months. Mr. Wade was the oldest resident of the Home in point of time spent here, coming from Chicago Union No. 16 in June, 1894. He was an Englishman by birth, but came to this country when a boy in his early teens, learned the printing trade and for many years was employed on the Chicago Tribune as a compositor. For the past six years he had been a great sufferer, caused by a complication of diseases and the effects of a previous surgical operation which was only partially successful. "Billy" Wade had many friends among the oldtimers; was big-hearted, of a genial nature, and was loyal and steadfast in his devotion to principles of right and justice. He was buried in the union printers' section of Evergreen cemetery, his remains followed to the grave by a great many of his former associates. He was never married and had no known relatives in this country.

On Sunday, July 8, Harry ("Dummy") Smith, an erstwhile resident of the Home from Philadelphia Union No. 2, but now a business man of Colorado Springs, appeared at the Home in his automobile and took a number of his old printer friends out for a joy ride. The party visited the Woodmen's sanatorium, Glen Eyrie, Garden of the Gods and some other noted points of interest, and returned home just in time to escape a soaking rainstorm, one of the "wettest" we have had this season. And, by the way, it is quite proper to state here that Mr. Smith is an acknowledged artist in the printing craft, and for the present is specially engaged by the Gowdy printery in getting out the annual convention souvenir.

Richard Faulkner, universally known in printerdom from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast and from Montreal to the Mexican border as plain "Dick" Faulkner, "showed up" at the Home along about the Fourth and shoved his "slip" on the register. He comes from "Big Six," of New York, where for a number of years he has held down a "sit" as proofreader in the Evening Post job office. Dick is an all-round printer and a finished workman in any department, an ex-delegate three or four times over to the International conventions, ex-president of Providence (R. I.) Union No. 33, and has held different offices in various unions throughout the country. He is an ardent union advocate, speaking his sentiments fearlessly, in season as well as sometimes out of season. He is temporarily quartered downtown, where he will remain until after the annual convention.

July 8, 1917, was the eighty-ninth anniversary of the birth of Julius Engler, who has been a resident of the Union Printers Home since January, 1897, a period of twenty and one-half years, coming here from German-American Union No. 20, since consolidated with Omaha Union No. 190. Since the death of our old friend, "Billy" Wade, Mr. Engler is the dean of the Home, beating R. G. Thompson here three months, the latter coming in April following the former's admission in January. Thompson, however, ranks Engler in point of age eight months, as he (Thompson) will be 90 years old next October. Mr. Engler is a native of Freiburg, Baden, Germany; learned the printing trade there and in early manhood came to the United States, eventually becoming a citizen of this country. He is still enjoying fairly good health, his greatest affliction being failing eyesight.

W. L. Bach, a medical student in the State University of Colorado at Boulder, is in charge of the hospital laboratory during the school's vacation months.

Miss E. M. O'Farrell, head nurse, has resigned her position here to accept a similar position at the Oakes sanatorium in Denver. She is superseded by Miss Beatrice Mitchell, who was head nurse at the Home four years ago under the administration of Doctor Crouch.

For the month ending July 14 there were 423 visitors registered at the Home, among this number the following, besides those specially mentioned in this letter, registered as members of the International Typographical Union: C. P. Jones, Colorado Springs; Will C. Menke, St. Louis; C. C. Beatty, Chicago; James N. Floyd, Boise; B. C. Sweeney and M. G. Daniel, Denver; G. H. Griffin, Spencer, Iowa; O. H. Chapman, Denver; E. J. Stephens, Butte; H. C. Rockwell, Decatur; Frank L. Foster, Colorado Springs; Rev. A. F. Houser, Cleveland; G. G. Pearson, Modesto; F. M. Clark, Chicago.

F. M. Sprague, admitted to the Home in June last from Independence (Kan.) Union No. 584, is more than proud of his membership in such a union as his. The Independence local consists of only about fifteen members, yet if one of its number unfortunately drops into impecunious circumstances they don't forget him, as instanced in the case of Mr. Sprague. For months previous to his coming here he was suffering from some physical malady that incapacitated him from work, and his union took the matter in hand and generously contributed something like $200 toward his and his family's support, and then, by the advice of his physician, sent him out here to see if he could not be cured. A few days ago his union also sent him $10.

Following are the vital statistics of the Home for the month ending June 14:

ADMITTED.

June 16. W. P. Woodard, Seattle No. 202.
June 20. Stephan Kirsch, Chicago No. 16.

TRENTON, N. J.

War conditions, the high cost of living and the fact that No. 71 has received the munificent increase of 50 cents per week in the past six years seems to be no incentive for some members of this union to aid in negotiating a new scale of wages, to become effective October 8, at which time our present scale expires. In this respect the jobmen are the worst offenders, but not without a liberal sprinkling of machine hands. While few attend the meetings, the "regular absentees" show very little desire to co-operate with those who do attend regularly. Their eulogy is wasted in the various chapels, around the washrooms, before, during and after work, but not at the meetings, where they should be properly discussed. Some few are of the opinion that we are receiving sufficient for the present; others think a flat scale should be inaugurated, while still others are of the opinion that the machine men are overpaid, and if any raise at all is made it should be in favor of the handmen—but most of this talk is outside the union rooms. Such talk is absolute treason. The man who in the face of such wholesale cost increases in the necessities of life is content with the prevailing wage scale should be assigned a job at laboring, and in some instances even these men are receiving better pay than we are receiving at the present time. To say that we have some spineless creatures in our midst is putting it mildly indeed. In place of getting out and aiding the committees in every way possible, and offering them support by attending the meetings of the union, they continually criticize and offer advice outside the union rooms. If some of these malcontents would glance at the last issue of The Journal they would be amazed to see where scales throughout the country have jumped from $2 to $8 per week. Our cause is just, that we know, and if we are to conclude our proposed scale we must act as one. It is a sad condition indeed when the members fall short of their ideals, and extremely so when you attempt to negotiate a scale and discover enough "slackers" in your midst to "crab" the whole show. If, instead of a corporal guard at the meetings we had the co-operation of all the members, I'm sure the sentiment would be unanimous. This is written in a brotherly spirit; it is something we should all realize exists, and it is something we can shake off if we all do our duty. So, boys, all together.

At the state federation of labor convention, to be held at Paterson, August 20, 21, 22, No. 71 will be represented by President Ben F. Wilson, Warren A. Hannum and Reuben Forker.

A. Conlon and Warren Erwin. John A. Chapman without question was one of the happiest of the "old boys" at the league meeting, and the smiling countenance of "Pea Soup" Fawcett was seen among the throngs of printers present. These two gentlemen, both of the MacCrellish & Quigley chapel, are regular attendants at all the league meetings.

City Editor Lines, Assistant Foreman William A. Rogers and Warren M. Erwin, all of the Times chapel, are members of the home guard, and if the wishes of the state military authorities are carried out, will be drafted into the state service.

After being out on strike thirteen weeks, 1,200 porcelain workers, led by Warren A. Hannum, president of the central labor union, and a member of No. 71, returned to work recently, being granted an increase of from 75 cents to $1.25 a day, with an additional increase the first of October. The strike was settled through the mediation of Dr. Frederick W. Collier.

President Ben A. Wilson was successful in having a supplemental clause attached to the contracts of the Trenton Evening Times and State Gazette protecting situations and priority rights of members enlisting under the banner of Uncle Sam.

Edward McCall Dobson (47235), who jumped a situation on the Times, was fined $5 and had his card taken up by the secretary of Albany (N. Y.) Union, obtained his card "for a few days" to enable him to collect his fine, and "beat it." The fine remains unpaid and the secretary taking up this card should hold it and communicate with J. Ewing Leigh, secretary, P. O. box 308, Trenton, N. J.

At a meeting of the National Labor Publicity Bureau, held in New York, July 15, Trenton was represented by Warren A. Hannum. He is New Jersey vice-president of the organization and New Jersey organizer. LEON G. BASFORD.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.

Work for ad and job printers has been exceptionally poor for the past two months, but operators are in demand. The piece scale, no doubt, is the cause of the shortage of machine men, Merg. tourists steering clear of piece towns.

The Evening Light installed two Ludlow typograph machines recently. They are making quite a hit with the ad force.

The San Antonio Express has adopted the nondistribution system, using monotype casters in the adroom—to the sorrow of the sub. Two new model 19 Mergs. were also added to the battery of that paper recently.

F. R. McDade, for many years ad foreman on the Light, resigned recently and returned to his farm in Ohio. Hugo Rauber succeeds him as "straw boss."

The Alamo Printing Company, the largest union printing plant in San Antonio, positively refuses to print anything without the union label. John W. Ellett, the new foreman, was instrumental in this laudable determination. Manager Marvin Hill is so impressed with the working conditions under John's supervision that he tendered the entire mechanical force a "banquet" on July 7. It wasn't exactly a banquet, but more on the order of a Dutch lunch, plenty of "conversation water" being on tap.

E. G. Koerps, who has been secretary-treasurer of No. 172 for over a quarter of a century, will represent us at the Colorado Springs convention.

The E. L. Jarvis Linotype Company has installed a new model 14 and is now better prepared to handle work for the trade.

San Antonio was overlooked in the list of unions purchasing liberty bonds which was published in the July JOURNAL. No. 172 bought $1,000 worth of these bonds, and many members took from $50 to $500 worth just to show their patriotism. You can't beat the bunch here.

We had a visit recently by an up-to-date (auto) tourist in the person of J. B. Rivero, en route from New Orleans to Los Angeles. He was accompanied by his wife and ten children. He had to stop in all the principal towns on the way and hustle for the price of enough "auto juice" to speed the family to the next resting place.

William Moorehead (Opie Read's "Blalock") was a visitor here recently for a couple of weeks. He has a goat ranch on the Pecos river near the Mexican border. While in San Antonio he purchased an auto and secured Johnny Thompson to chauffeur him home. The latter will be Mr. Moorehead's guest till fall.

The union printers' band gave a ball at Turner hall June 20, which was pronounced one of the swellest affairs ever given by union men. It was a success financially. The proceeds were used to purchase uniforms for the musicians. Since the dance the band has changed its name to the allied printing trades band, and will lead the parade on Labor day, which promises to be one of the greatest demonstrations ever held by labor in this city.

H. H. Hodge, formerly president of No. 172, has been elected secretary of the Allied Printing Trades Council of Texas, vice Clint Tullis, of Dallas, who has joined the colors.

C. E. ("Thin Space") Jones has been in bad health for the past month, but has somewhat improved. He says that since he has been incapacitated for work he has a strenuous time trying to make $4.72½ weekly pension money meet the high cost of living.

Several members of No. 172 have volunteered in the army and navy, among them R. E. Schmidt (better known as "Fighting Dick Smith"), who, although above the conscription age, joined the artillery, Battery C; M. M. Hamill joined Battery B and A. C. Englehart is in Battery A, all in the Texas national guard; E. A. Smith, an apprentice at the Ludovic Printery, chose the navy, while Danial Perez joined Company K, cavalry, Texas national guard. There will probably be a number of conscripts from No. 172.

Construction work has begun on the cantonment buildings at Camp Wilson, which will house 40,000 troops. The aviation cantonment at Camp Kelly, adjoining San Antonio, will cost $1,500,000 and will accommodate several thousand aviation students. The officers' training school at Camp Funston, near here, has several thousand volunteers who are being drilled into future officers of the great army the United States will send to Europe. With the soldiers at Fort Sam Houston, these three camps will swell the population of San Antonio at least 100,000, and in that number will be many printers.

A notice to secretaries to hold up the writer's card was inserted by El Paso Union in the June JOURNAL. That union knew at the time where I was located, as I had written to the secretary of No. 370 on several occasions. It is needless to say that the request was denied by No. 172.

DULUTH, MINN.

At the last meeting of No. 136 Leigh Gunther, but lately returned from the Home, gave the members a short account of his experiences there, and expressed his appreciation and thanks for the benefits rendered while sojourning there. His remarks were very complimentary to our Colorado Springs institution.

Gus Winberg, of Minneapolis, was in attendance and gave us an interesting account of conditions and prospects within the jurisdiction of No. 42, and extended an invitation to our delegate to the convention of the state federation of labor to also attend the conference of the Minnesota Federation of Typographical Unions.

Juls J. Anderson, the delegate to the convention of the state federation, was given final instructions on the attitude of No. 136 regarding various matters pertaining to the welfare of organized labor.

Ed Anderson, of the Herald chapel, has removed to Minneapolis and Tom Moore has once more returned to the folds of No. 136 from the same place. Edgar McLeod, a long-time member of the night chapel of the Tribune, has gone to Milwaukee.

Duluth went dry on the first day of July, and while saloonless, it is not yet entirely boozeless or beerless.

Two of the smaller offices, one of which published a Slovenian paper, have closed their doors and been absorbed by larger and more prosperous firms.

Work has slacked up the past couple of weeks, and sufficient subs are on hand to care for extra requirements at this writing. WILLIAM E. TOWNE.

HALIFAX, N. S.

The July meeting of No. 130 was devoid of anything of a startling nature. There was nothing to arouse that lurking spirit of controversy which sometimes prolongs the monthly session. The scale committee has not yet been appointed, but the August meeting will decide the personnel of that important body. The Chronicle and Echo men have been granted a $2 increase in wages, this making a second increase within a short period. Both job and machine men of No. 130 feel that the trade must stand a substantial increase in the wage scale at the end of the year in order to keep pace with the high cost of living.

Mr. Tapley has resigned his position as manager of the Royal Print, and Mr. Kelleher has relinquished his position as manager of the Chronicle and Echo.

Business continues brisk on the newspaper end, the advertising keeping well up to the high standard of last year. The job end maintains a steady tone.

All members are reported at work, except Edward Pride, operator on the Herald. "Ess" was compelled to undergo an operation for appendicitis, but he is now on the fair way to recovery and expects to be on the job shortly. Mr. Kirk, of the Chronicle, has accepted a position as linotype operator with the Lino Print. J. L. Phelan has deposited his card and is at the Chronicle. George Scriven has gone to the Herald adroom.

No. 130 has decided to take part in the big fair to be held by the trades and labor council in aid of the fund for the proposed labor temple. There will be no Labor day parade this year. Sports will be held on Exhibition grounds.

The electrical workers are on strike for an increased wage. The street car men have received an increase in wages, but their endeavors to secure one day off in eight so far have not been successful. The bill passed at the last session of the legislature has some discrepancies, and shows the need of a permanent paid official of the trades council to look after the interests of labor in Halifax. A labor temple, a business agent and labor representation in parliament are three essential factors that a progressive age demands, and which the trade unionists themselves must solve in order to meet changed and changing conditions.

J. E. SCHAFFER.

RIDGWAY, PA.

The last meeting of No. 778 was not as well attended as previous meetings have been, due to the fact that meeting night came on July 3.

Everything is progressing favorably, and our scale will soon be signed.

Business is good in both branches of the trade.

EDWARD W. ECKLAND.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

No. 7 pays the dues of all members who have been called to serve their country in the war.

David Baird, of New York, a member of the International auditing board, stopped off in Pittsburgh on his way to Indianapolis and paid the secretary's office a visit.

William Fleming, a member of Columbia Union, Washington, D. C., was here recently visiting a daughter and called upon his old-time acquaintances. Mr. Fleming was a delegate to the convention held in this place in 1886. He has a vivid recollection of the picnic that was held during convention week at Mckees Rocks.

Megs L. Davis, a member of "Big Six," was here in July, displaying a beautiful Japanese signet ring, set with a diamond and emerald, which was presented to him by the members of the Charles Francis Press chapel as a token of his faithful performance of his duty as chairman of the office. The chapel further honored Mr. Davis at the recent election by giving him the unanimous vote of the chapel for auditor of No. 6.

William Corless, of Scranton, was here in July shaking hands with his old acquaintances.

President Padgett, of No. 7, represented the union as a fraternal delegate to the Western Pennsylvania Typographical Union Conference held in Oil City last month.

All of our life we have heard that the Baltimore & Ohio railroad was a slow road to travel over. I don't believe it. I consider it one of the fastest roads that I ever traveled over. If any one doubts my word I will prove it to them if they call at this office. In company with the president of this union about nine weeks ago I went to Braddock on a collecting tour for the union, and in alighting from the train, which was going at a higher rate of speed than I anticipated a B. & O. train could possibly go, I fell and broke the right wrist of my anatomy. To say that I have been handicapped in performing the duties of the secretary's office hardly expresses the situation, but with the assistance shown me by the members and my better half, I have been able to get through the work very nicely. I desire to thank the members and others for their kindly assistance, and am very happy to state that I am coming around in good shape and it won't be many days until I can "plow" through my work alone.

The Colorado Springs convention club, under the supervision of William M. Dawson, numbers over twenty people. C. Q. LAFFERTY.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

The following members of No. 46 have enlisted with Uncle Sam for the duration of the war: J. P. Olwell, jr., medical corps, regular army; Clinton Cooper (apprentice), motor truck service, regular army; Ralph Bothwell, engineer corps. W. H. Ambrose, of the Yountville soldiers' home, was in Sacramento the middle of July. M. T. Ayres, who worked at the state printing office during the last session, is now on a homestead in Madera county. A. B. Brown, who has been employed on the Morning Union for several years, is at present operating on the Auburn Daily Journal. F. W. Baker, late of Springfield, Ill., is in San Francisco seeing the bay city. Alexander Crossan, of the state office, has been in the bay region for a few weeks. G. M. Crawford, formerly foreman of the Star, is now in Oregon in the Rogue river country, where he is doing well on a ranch. B. I. Conant has left Sacramento and is now in Modesto. Jack Leonard and F. A. Meyer have left for San Francisco. J. C. Serrano, who has been employed on the Auburn Journal for some time, has departed for his home at San Luis Obispo.

On July 17 occurred the marriage of P. P. Coons, assistant foreman on the Morning Union, and Miss Sadie Pefficy, operator at the state office.

Trade in the job line in Sacramento at present is very slow.

No. 46 has donated $50 to the Sacramento Red Cross and has purchased a $100 liberty bond.

J. W. CRAWLEY.

CALGARY, ALTA.

Sunny Alberta! Glorious Alberta! Prosperous Alberta! Impoverished printers! Hard to imagine such anomaly, but it's correct. The Alberta farmer smiles at the price of wheat, but the printer with the poorest scale in the west frowns, and well he need. For the last six months and more the executive committee has been endeavoring to secure a war bonus. These efforts have not been altogether successful, for while in some cases a slight increase has been granted, this increase is nothing more than our old friend "bonus," slightly disguised, and if you can't do better than the "dead line" you don't get it. That's all. The employers' attitude is, as usual, brutally logical: So long as we can get men to work for the agreed scale, why give an increase? Our argument about the high cost of living only brings forth a counter-claim that the high cost of production makes the granting of a "war bonus" impossible. Tourists might take note: This is a great country for farmers, but a very poor one for printers. It is not fair by any means to blame the membership for conditions prevailing, as a word in explanation will convince: The old agreement expired just after the time hostilities started in 1914, and everybody was in a blue funk, had no idea what was going to happen. Business in Calgary was shot to blazes—or somewhere else. It was a question of taking a cut of 20 per cent or signing up our old terms for six months after formal declaration of "peace." The members did what they thought was best—signed up until "six months after war." It is singularly interesting to note how the employer regards our sentiments upon agreements. One of the principal newspaper men remarked to a member of the executive committee the other day that he knew the printers would not break their agreement, as the coal miners had done. (It is, of course, merely a coincidence that the miners, as a result of their fight, secured increases averaging 25 per cent!) In view of the attitude of statesmen—and even nations—who have stated that war conditions do not permit of static policies—the membership is beginning to wonder whether the economic conditions in Calgary consequent upon the war do not point to the adoption of a policy that at one time would have been regarded as distinctly revolutionary, but which is excused by the arbitrary attitude of employers and economic pressure. In other words: What is moral for a nation should be moral for a union.

F. H. NEWNHAM.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Officers for the ensuing year were installed last meeting. Excellent progress was reported in a summary of accomplishments by retiring officers, and the names of the men now at the helm are synonymous with "results."

William P. Kelly, late Detroiter, is battering the buttons on a new model C intertype at Lincoln's.

The local's apprentice proposition met with much favorable comment at the recent meeting of the Michigan Federation of Typographical Unions at Saginaw and numerous copies were sent to various locals. Delegates W. B. Wilson and E. B. Geary report an interesting convention.

When the mobilization order for call to the colors becomes effective there will be several gaps in our ranks. The following have beaten the draft: Fred Bek and Eldon Peterson, naval militia; Betran Bloem and Leon Ellis, hospital corps; Carl Bishof, Thirty-second regiment band; Frank Ratajezak, engineers' corps; Capt. James Sinke, national guard; Roy Hauser and Harry Robinson, Thirty-second regiment machine gun company.

"Shorty" Davis is subbing on the Herald. "Foxy" Smith appeared in our midst recently. John Taits, of Cargill's, has gone to Philadelphia to take up the monotype. Bill Wilson invaded Chatham, Canada, and Detroit for his annual. Henry Shalmo bobbed into town from points east. T. J. Connolly is showing up on the Herald. H. J. Kirk is a new caller. V. E. Bloem is back from a hegira to Detroit. All sworn to by O. L. Comfort, chairman yard committee.

Baron Munchausen had nothing on some of our back-yard printer-farmers. Contests in garden "patter" are threatening to become a favorite indoor sport.

Fred Gilleo, of the Herald, is the latest recruit to No. 39's ranks of bungalow builders.

Leon Ellis, of the Press, joined the benedicts July 5. His bride was Miss Ann MacDonald. Miss Alma Huff, of the Herald, was married recently.

North Adams and 5,000 members.

We had but six members out at our last meeting. The weather was pretty hot, but perhaps when we abolished our rebate system, the boys thought they would stay away. The rebate system, to my mind, is the only way to get a meeting with more than the regular half a dozen that are interested.

The convention at Manchester was certainly a great success in more ways than one. Manchester is to be congratulated.

The application of Charles H. Abbott was read at our June meeting and referred to the investigating committee. We hope to obligate him at our August meeting.

Andy Rogers, of the Boston Globe, was here for a short stay and also was in Manchester for the convention.

Business is still good for this time of the year.

Edgar Morse, our sergeant at arms, is on his annual vacation of two weeks.

The baseball team of the Rumford Printing Company athletic association is anxious to secure games for Saturday afternoons with any amateur team in New England. They have not been defeated this year as yet. They will play at home or away from home. Any amateur team in New England that wishes to play this team can make arrangements by communicating with the writer at 6 Prince street, and I will turn it over to the manager.

The city laborers and the street car men of this city have recently organized a union and affiliated with the central labor union. This was brought about chiefly through the efforts of the central labor union. Concord laborers are slowly waking up to the fact that it is much better to be organized, both for the employer and employe.

We have had an application for membership at our last three meetings. We hope we can continue this good work and get one every meeting for some time to come. E. B. McCauley.

GALVESTON, TEXAS.

We have all seen various efforts for the welfare of the printing trades inaugurated, flourish for a short time and then gradually dry away and disappear. This applies particularly to the average allied trades council. By electing delegates who have put their thought and efforts into discovering the reasons and remedy for this condition, it is believed a remedy has been evolved, and it has already been productive of some good results. The remedy is simply, "Know each other." The friendships and mutual understanding of personal acquaintance will remove a great deal of the criticism and misjudgment so prevalent in our crafts particularly. To this end the Allied Trades Council of Galveston tendered the membership of the organizations an oyster supper at one of the resorts on the island just before the close of the oyster season. The expenses of the occasion were met by appropriations for small amounts from the various crafts, the balance paid by those attending in pro rata proportion, thus making the expense very light on any one and the results in good fellowship and harmony considerable, all of which will be reflected in the workings of the council. The next entertainment in prospect is a basket picnic. The arrangement of these entertainments to the opportunities and needs of the locality, with the unanimous assistance of the trades, and choking the chronic knocker, will bring about a condition of benefit to the allied crafts which can not be estimated and do away with a condition from which many of us have suffered.

George H. Slater represented No. 28 at the Texas State Federation of Labor convention and J. B. Stephenson at the Texas Allied Printing Trades Council.

The Texas Press Association met here last month. The number of printers in the membership is large and a great many of them proudly exhibit paid-up cards. Two exhibits were noteworthy, by the Intertype Corporation and the Mergenthaler Linotype Company.

One of the pleasant social features of the month was a banquet tendered members of No. 28 by the representatives of the Intertype Corporation. Appropriate short talks, general good fellowship, plenty of eats and refreshments featured the evening. The courtesy was the effort of Messrs. Bading and Breckon, of the Intertype Corporation, both of whom carry typographical union cards.

J. B. Stephenson.

CHICAGO, ILL.

At the June meeting of No. 16 officers were installed. After the installation by President Carleton the executive officers each briefly addressed the meeting, giving an outline of the policy to be pursued during the coming year.

The Query club of New York, on its way to Colorado Springs, will make a brief stop in Chicago. Many other delegates and visitors will also pass through here, and, while no formal program of reception has been arranged, the visitors will be given a hearty welcome. The Union Printers' club, at 164 West Washington street, directly opposite the Herald office, will open its doors to the migrating throng of delegates and others, and has invited all to make the club their headquarters while in town.

With the assistance of Miss Mary McEnerney, of the bindery women's union, the Regan Printing Company was completely unionized and is now a label office. This firm has thirty-five cylinders and five rotaries, and is well equipped for the large amount of printing it handles. On July 13 the Steere bindery, one of the largest hand binderies in Chicago, was made strictly union, thirty girls being taken into the bindery women's union. The label was also placed in the Rapid Printing Company.

Barney Cohen, the new director of labor for the state of Illinois, has ordered the union label to appear on all printing for his department. Robert S. Jones, the new state factory inspector, also has given orders that the label be used on all work for the factory inspector's office.

The callroom of the union has been renovated and put into first-class condition. All calls for printers are now filled through the medium of the callroom, no men being sent out from headquarters.

The St. Louis club of the Union Printers' Baseball League will play the Chicago team three games of ball August 7, 8 and 9, at Comiskey park. A large contingent of fans from the Mound City is expected to accompany the team.

Newspaper printers are hoping that a settlement of the scale may soon be brought about. The men employed on newspapers are working for the same scale that was in force before the boost in prices caused by the great war. The only settlement offered provided for a raise of but 3 cents per hour for handmen and arbitration in regard to machine composition. Considered in the light of an increase of from 50 to 100 per cent in the cost of living, this did not appeal favorably to the members and it was rejected.

Employes of the American-Examiner chapel are enjoying better working conditions with the radical improvements installed by Superintendent Lamphere. All partitions and unnecessary gewgaws were ruthlessly torn out. Air circulation has been wonderfully improved; ceiling fans prevent the accumulation of noxious fumes; the proofreaders now have a habitable working place; the foreman's elaborate office has been removed, and the skipper now contents himself with a democratic desk. Several new linotypes have been added to the equipment, and the composing room presents a roomy and comfortable appearance.

James B. Hutchison, who died at Oak Forest June 25, and who was buried at Elmwood June 27, under the auspices of No. 16, was one of the real pioneers of union printerdom. Among his cherished possessions was a traveling card issued by the Hamilton Typographical Society of the Province of Canada, dated April 4, 1856, and also a traveling card of Buffalo Typographical Union No. 9, dated September 18, 1856. Many years ago he was employed on the Telegraph, the forerunner of the present Chicago Herald. He had not worked at the business for years, and had passed from the memory of the younger generation, but many of the oldtimers knew him well and favorably.

Fred Warmbier, a linotype machinist who had worked on Chicago newspapers for a number of years, committed suicide July 9 by jumping from a three-story window. Despondency because of ill health is supposed to have caused the deed. Burial was at Rosehill.

Among the members of No. 16 to offer their services to the government is Herman W. Heintz, who is now a private in the Twenty-sixth company, marine corps, Paris Island, S. C.

Don T. Stewart, B. F. Dundas and Harry Schaudt, all recently of the Herald, who joined the United States marine corps and until recently have been at Paris Island, S. C., have been transferred to Quantico, Va., where Schaudt is in the infantry and Stewart and Dundas are with the field artillery. Stewart's many friends will be pleased to know that he qualified as marksman before the transfer.

Max Kronman and D. C. Campbell, of the Tribune, have passed the physical examination in the officers' reserve corps and are now preparing for the "skull" test.

W. H. Gritzmacher has forsaken the printing game and is now employed by the Northwestern elevated railway.

John Cantwell, former chairman of the Inter Ocean, and a delegate from Montreal to Colorado Springs, has notified friends here that on his return from the convention he will spend some time in Chicago renewing old acquaintances.

Fred Whittingham, of the Herald, while east on a vacation trip, took advantage of his proximity to visit the boys in the marine corps at Quantico, Va.

Melvin D. Foor, who deposited a card from Portland, Ore., in June, and later enlisted in Company I, First Illinois national guard, and was sent to Camp Cicero, turned up missing at roll call one day and was not heard of until he was reported ill in a hospital at East Dubuque, Iowa. It is stated that he was subject to hallucinations.

At the last meeting of No. 16 the delegates to the Colorado Springs convention were requested to work for a measure by which the dues of all members enlisting for the war would be taken care of by the International Typographical Union instead of putting all the burden on local unions.

The Sears-Roebuck and Butler Brothers chapels are formulating plans for a joint picnic to be held some time in August.

Fred LaForge has returned from a visit to St. Louis, where he foregathered for several days with "Slats" Embick, who is at Jefferson Barracks, detailed to the printshop at that army post.

Jack Gaffney, of the Sears-Roebuck chapel, left for St. Louis July 1 to spend his vacation.

The Printers' Bowling League for the coming season will consist of twelve clubs, instead of eight, the number engaged last year.

At the election of officers of the Sears-Roebuck chapel Dan McDougall, chairman, and Steve Swain, secretary, were again chosen by a unanimous vote to fill their respective offices.

A special meeting of the Daily News night chapel was called July 2 to take action on the death of J. L. Carlson, a well-known and well-liked operator, who died from pneumonia. A suitable floral design was ordered and a committee on resolutions appointed. Mr. Carlson had been a member of the Daily News chapel about eighteen months. His body was sent to Ishpeming, Mich., his former home, for burial. BRYANT L. BEECHER.

Scranton—"The Electric City"—1918.

No. 646 is doing about as good as can be expected at present. All members are working, and business is very good. So far, none of our members have been drawn on the first draft. We have not so many to lose, and I hope we will be able to hold them.

Representative William Corless paid us a short visit a few weeks ago.

Your humble servant was entertained by Reading Union a few Sundays ago, and had a most enjoyable time. When you want to be royally handled, leave it to the "Judge" and "Mason."

R. J. HENNESSY.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

The regular monthly meeting of No. 20 was held on the afternoon of July 1. In the absence of President Hill, Vice-President R. E. McLure occupied the chair and presided in a most businesslike manner. Considerable routine work was dispatched. The food control bill pending in congress was endorsed, and J. W. White, one of our hustling members, was endorsed for a position as a member of the federal exemption board. The union donated a sum to those of the moving picture operators of the city who have been on strike, and who, it appears, have been given some harsh treatment by the authorities. Several cases against them for the "crime" of picketing are pending in the circuit court, and the outcome of these cases will be watched for with interest.

Cecil King, of the Cullom & Ghertner chapel, on the night of July 14 was run down and painfully bruised by an auto. His injuries, while not serious, necessitated the use of crutches for several days.

L. C. ("Cap") Herrington, late of Anniston, Ala., and still later of Tampa, Fla., came in recently and remained long enough to shake hands with many of his friends. He picked up Joe Roberts, of the Brandon chapel, in Atlanta and brought him on to Nashville, although Joe says he could have found the way back by himself. Joe had been on a visit to his old Georgia home and friends. "Cap" left Nashville bound for somewhere—and it wouldn't be surprising to next hear of him in Timbuctoo.

H. J. Loser, jr., has gone to Chicago, where he is now at work and will perhaps remain for some time.

James Graham, of Memphis, a former member of No. 20, attended the funeral of his brother, who died in this city the past month.

B. F. Jones, who has been here and in bad health for several months, has so far recovered as to be able to work, and has gone to St. Louis.

Harry Wall, who for a year or so has had charge of the monotype casters on the Washington (D. C.) Herald, was in the city recently accompanied by his bride, visiting relatives and friends. They left for a visit to relatives in the state after a few days' stay, and intend going to Texas, where Harry has a situation in view.

Ellis Allen, who was seriously ill for several weeks, has recovered and is again able to be at work.

Leslie B. Parker, of the Benson Printing Company chapel, has gone to Alaska on a pleasure trip of several weeks.

On Saturday morning, June 30, Hon. A. E. Hill and Miss Frances Mabel Jones were united in matrimony at the home of the bride. The happy pair left immediately after the ceremony for a trip of several weeks to Washington, Baltimore, New York and other points in the north and east. The bride has for a number of years been a teacher in the city high school, where she is universally loved and honored. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wood Jones. Mr. Hill needs no introduction to the people of Nashville, as he is well and most favorably known throughout the state and practically the whole south. He has served a number of times in the Tennessee legislature, and a few years ago was speaker of the senate, which automatically made him lieutenant-governor, and in these positions did conspicuous service in the interest of labor. Mr. Hill has frequently served as president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and of the Nashville Trades and Labor Council, and is now serving his seventeenth consecutive term as president of Typographical Union No. 20, which has also several times chosen him as delegate to the International conventions, where he always took a leading part. He is an intimate friend of James M. Lynch, and served as representative of the International Typographical Union in this section for a number of years. Mr. Hill has always been prominent in the political, civic and union affairs of his city and state, and is a member of the city board of education, of which he was at one time president. Although the approaching wedding was made known to only their most intimate friends, many handsome presents were received, among the most conspicuous being handsome silver services from the board of education and members of the typographical union. Upon their return Mr. and Mrs. Hill will be at home to their friends at 1801 Hayes street.

Southern Representative H. P. Hanson, of Memphis, who was in Nashville at intervals during the past few months and rendered valuable service in the putting in effect of the new job and newspaper scales, returned to his home the first week in July His physicians informed him he would be compelled to undergo a very serious and dangerous surgical operation, and the many friends he made here sincerely trust he may fully recover from the operation and his health be permanently restored.

At last the newspaper scale, which has been hanging fire for half a year, is off the hook. The settlement was made on a compromise of 25 cents per day increase on day and night papers, with price and a half overtime. This makes the day scale $4.25 and the night scale $4.75. The contracts were made for four years. The boys also received 25 cents per day back pay since the expiration of the old agreement, and that gave many of them considerable pocket-change.

Work is very dull in Nashville at present, and likely to continue so another month at least. Those seeking employment shouldn't light here now.

E. Roy Moore.

TEMPLE, TEXAS.

At the last meeting of No. 688 a nice donation was made to the Red Cross.

Miss Mabel Steffey is now a member of this local. Roy Wall, who has his card deposited here, was the soloist at a recent entertainment given in one of our leading churches.

The writer has been honored by the county judge of Bell county by being appointed as the labor member on the county defense board.

We hope the convention at Colorado Springs will see fit to make that city its permanent headquarters and convention place, and will do its utmost to have the salaries of the president and secretary increased to not less than $5,000 per year.

The central trades council has begun discussing Labor day celebration, and all delegates have been instructed to bring the matter before their respective organizations and report at their earliest convenience.

The efforts to organize a label league are still on the unfinished business list. We are going slow, with the hope of making it a success when it is started.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

Mention was made last month in these notes of the forthcoming outing of the members of No. 9. We are now in position to say, on the authority of Chairman Fred Schmidt, that it will be up to expectations, and all those who attended last year know what that means. The hearty approval of last year's basket picnic is what made it easy to decide on a similar event. The steamer Seabreeze has been chartered and will take along the barge George H. Striker as consort, giving plenty of room, as their combined carrying capacity is listed at 700. Of course, the trip around the island is the main attraction, and if the weather is good no more beautiful trip could be decided upon. Stops will be made, for "Freddy" has seen to it that a program of sports will be mixed in the day's outing. However, at this writing it has not been made up, but assurances are given that there will be fun a-plenty for young and old. This year the boat will leave from the foot of Amherst street (No. 5 car), thus avoiding the squally waters at the mouth of the river. Seaman's orchestra will be with us once again, for the seventh successive outing, and that is a guarantee of first-class music, with all the trimmings. Adults' tickets are placed at 35 cents and children's 15 cents. It is expected that this will be the largest affair ever held by No. 9, as the enthusiasm with which the previous basket picnic was received, especially by the wives, sisters, daughters and sweethearts who attended last year, will go a long way toward filling the boats this year. Good things to eat and drink may be had on the boat, and provision will be made for the comfort of the little ones. Chairman Schmidt has added half a dozen live wires to his already excellent committee and the members should show their appreciation of their efforts by attending in goodly numbers. Remember the date —Sunday, August 12, at 10 o'clock.

President Kinskey was in charge of the July meeting, at which there was a large attendance in the hope of hearing something definite in regard to the new scale. Nothing doing. The publishers were willing to chew the rag, but refused to do anything definite until congress had acted on the revenue bill. As the Buffalo newspapers are not profit-sharing institutions, it is hard to understand just why the printers should pay the increased cost of living and the additional revenue taxes for the publishers. Dilatory tactics seem to be the policy of employers in dealing with the wage question, and the city government is as bad as any one. The garbage collectors have been asking for a raise for a long time and finally had to go on strike in order to get attention. A lot of colored men had been brought here in the spring in anticipation of a "shortage" of labor which did not eventuate, and they were put to work in the strikers' places. But the unbleached brothers wanted $4 a day and board, with pork chops and pie at every meal—and the old men got the increase. The application of Herman Hartel for admission to the Union Printers Home was endorsed, and Delegates Coyell and Beilman were instructed to urge the publication by the International Typographical Union of an authoritative history of the eight-hour strike.

The Times and the Courier have put in monotype casters and are going in for non-distribution. Neither paper is sure of its identity now that its face is washed, as it were, and the admen are put to it for backcapping subjects now that there is no chance to put Caslon in the Cheltenham cases or caching thin spaces. The Times has put in ten new linotypes, models 16 and 17. Ralph Rafelson is running the monotype casters. Non-distribution is an old story on the News. It sure looks odd to see nice new type thrown away because it does not pay to "throw it in."

The latest addition to the library is "The Printer's Manual," published by Thomas Lynch in Cincinnati in 1872, and donated by R. C. Crotts, of the Express chapel. Other donations are convention souvenirs by Messrs. Coyell, McLaughlin, Stansil, Kilcawley, Shaffer, Patterson and Wallace, and the librarian feels that he has some of the finest specimens of the art preservative in the world, as well as many articles of historical value.

Walter Connor and Crissie Schilroth were united in marriage last month, and the ever-popular Walter's many friends in Syracuse and Rochester will be delighted to hear the good news. After the ceremony a reception was held at the K. E. P. clubrooms. The night crew of the Evening News, reinforced by a goodly crowd from the day side, was on hand to give the bride and groom a proper send-off. The luncheon was a delight, and the music a special feature of the event. As 90 per cent of the members of the K. E. P. club are musicians, the music was continuous. Buffalo friends of the bride unite in wishing them long life and prosperity.

Arthur Keehn, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., delegate to the Colorado Springs convention, was in town arranging for his trip to that section. He will accompany the Buffalo delegation.

We have moved. The new owners of the Chapin block have decided to modernize the building, and started in by raising the rent to an altitude that shows they intend to have lamb chops whenever appetite so inclines. The secretary's office is now at No. 224 White building.

Billy McKibben says President Scott's "plant-an-acre" scheme would be all right were it not for the high cost of submarines. He should have planted clams.

Printers in newspaper chapels subscribed for liberty bonds to the amount of $10,000. Figures from the jobmen are not available. When will the jobmen learn that it pays to advertise?

Daniel Flavin is still in very poor health, and George Fitzpatrick, formerly assistant foreman on the Enquirer, is in charge of the Courier composing room. Edward Fitzpatrick, foreman of the Enquirer, has general supervision of both papers.

David E. Peugeot, of the Express chapel, one of our printer-lawyers, is a candidate for the democratic nomination for city judge.

HUGH WALLACE.

WILKES-BARRE, PA.

In the last number of THE JOURNAL we noticed the name of John Graham in the recent arrivals admitted to the Union Printers Home for treatment. Jack has many friends here, all of whom hope for his speedy recovery.

W. B. Ankarstran, the representative for the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, transacted business in the city last month and incidentally shook hands with a number of his old friends.

Bill Melick, a former officer of No. 187, but now of Pottsville, was a recent visitor here and was given the glad hand by his many acquaintances.

Quite a few of the members of No. 187 have answered the call to arms and will soon be distinguishing themselves with the army in France.

Tom Randow has accepted a "sit" at Athens, N. Y.

Will Lloyd, of the News chapel, has purchased a "joy car," and he never forgets his friends.

Charles Casey, of the Record chapel, was the successful candidate for delegate and will represent No. 187 at the convention at Colorado Springs. This is a signal honor to Mr. Casey, as, owing to his convincing personality and his happy medium of winning friends, he was selected at this time as the one most suitable to help land the convention for Scranton in 1918.

Notwithstanding the hot weather the committee here on the entertainment of the delegates to the Scranton convention in 1918 are still on the job, "keeping everlastingly at it." Beyond a doubt, this will be the greatest convention in the history of the International Typographical Union.

We are glad to note that Sam Gilger, of the News chapel, has sufficiently recovered from a recent serious illness to be out again.

Work in Wilkes-Barre is very good under present conditions, and if the summer months are a criterion, the winter season will be a bumper.

BRAINERD, MINN.

Work in the three offices here is holding up well, especially the job end.

The Brainerd Daily Journal-Press is no more. The proprietor, Ralph M. Sheets, saw fit to discontinue publishing a daily and has gone back into the weekly class. The Dispatch, daily, was a strong competitor and Mr. Sheets wisely gave up the battle.

Frank G. Hall, president of No. 593 and foreman of the Tribune office, was recently appointed deputy state oil inspector for Crow Wing county. The job is very remunerative and Mr. Hall is to be congratulated on his success in landing it.

Fred L. Britton, a charter member of No. 593, was accepted as a candidate in the officers' reserve corps at Fort Snelling, and after a month's training was weeded out with scores of others. Fred said the commanding officer was well pleased with the showing he made, but as college graduates were given the preference it was up to him to so act. He may enroll in the second camp soon to be instituted.

W. W. Latta, for years a member of this local, is now editor and proprietor of the Luverne Journal, weekly.

E. Allen Burnette, of Daytona, Fla., deposited has card here last month and "grabbed off" a few weeks' work in the Dispatch office. Mr. Burnette expressed himself as well pleased with this north country.

John Webster and wife, of Globe, Ariz., motored to Brainerd to spend a few weeks with friends and enjoy the fine fishing hereabouts. Mr. Webster is a newspaper man of long experience.

Alfred Dahl, of the Journal Press force, has enrolled with the grand army that is taking to the farms these days. He will do his "bit" for Uncle Sam on his uncle's farm, which is located near Duluth.

A. NORMAN BREKKY.

ALBANY, N. Y.

The Labor day committee, which has been making extensive arrangements for a 400 turnout, is meeting with success. A patriotic demonstration is anticipated instead of the "thin-line" Labor day parade.

The union has voted to take care of the dues of its members who will go to the front, and their families will receive the death benefits should any of those splendid fellows fall on the field of battle.

President-elect McCann has his cabinet selected, but will not make it public until the August meeting.

The New York State Allied Printing Trades Council, representing 50,000 wage-earners, in convention in Syracuse last month, pledged "our loyalty, support and service on the battlefield and in every other way that we can be of assistance, to the limit of our capacity and endurance. We express the conviction that no lasting peace will result without autocracy and all it represents is crushed and militarism and its apostles are made the servants, instead of the masters, of the nations that are contending against us and that are responsible for this holocaust of ruin and devastation."

Reports from the recent election of the International Typographical Union from a Washington correspondent are very pleasing to Albany typographers. Four Albanians were elected by Columbia Union by large pluralities. Howard Gaylord and John Orton Cole were the two top men for membership in the executive committee, and on the list of alternate delegates to the Colorado Springs convention Joe Cummings was the high man, and farther on appeared the name of George H. Pease. Albany boys are "some pumpkins," eh!

Members of Albany Typographical Union No. 4 organized a band at a meeting held recently in German hall, which will be along the lines of the band of New York Typographical Union No. 6, known as the "Big Six band," and famous all over the country. The Albany printers chose the following officers: President, Henry Cranse; secretary, Harry P. Moffett; treasurer, James Bearup; director, James Dunigan. The other members are Wellington Grey, Francis Schoonmaker, Steven Feenan, Wallace Beebe, James McCaughan, James Walsh, Anthony Campagna, Herman Fry, Charles Fry, Charles Schultz, John Young, Richard Daly, John Bowers, James Hanson, Frank Monette, William Kalter, Joseph Rice and Peter Halpin.

R. H. PARMELEE.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Events in typographical affairs that may be of general interest to readers of THE JOURNAL include the progressive stages of newspaper scale negotiations. The scale committee of the union and the committee representing San Francisco Newspaper Publishers' Association have agreed on all points involved except the very material ones that fix hours and wages. On these two questions the committees have deadlocked and the union and the publishers both have stood firmly behind their committees. Negotiations had been pending for a long time, when the union gave formal notice to the publishers that the old scale agreement would be definitely abrogated on June 30. This action brought matters to a crisis, inasmuch as three of the four papers interested do not hold arbitration contracts under the International Arbitration Agreement and there could be no agreement locally as to the form of a local arbitration code of procedure. When this point was reached, and when a clash appeared almost inevitable, it was suggested that the International Arbitration Board be requested by both parties to try and find a way out. Inasmuch as the local parties had by conciliation really accomplished as much with the scale as a whole as would have been done had the entire matter been submitted to a local board, and it was proved that there had been no disposition to evade the responsibility of local arbitration, but that irreconcilable differences existed which made the form of procedure impossible of solution locally, President Scott and Commissioner Kellogg, while positively declining to accept the case for the International board, finally agreed to appoint a board to be composed of representatives of the International Typographical Union and representatives of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, this board to choose an odd member acceptable to both local parties; to have the hearing in Indianapolis on the questions of hours and wages only, the decision of the board so composed to be final. That solution of the matter has been agreed to by all parties and is accepted as the best possible solution of the case. President Tracy will present the case for the union and H. W. Norton will represent the publishers. Secretary Michelson will accompany the president and a member of the local publishers' association will accompany Mr. Norton. A date for the hearing had not been definitely fixed at the time this letter was written.

The local scale situation, as outlined in the preceding paragraph, would seem to point the necessity for some further action in arbitration legislation if the system is to continue. By reason of the fact that our International has repeatedly given its endorsement to the principle of arbitration in setling scale controversies, to the extent that subordinate unions are definitely and authoritatively instructed by our executive council that they must offer some form of arbitration when the International code is not acceptable locally, just what to do when there can be no agreement as to form presents a problem. In the present San Francisco controversy a way has been found out of that difficulty, but the solution of the question of how to obtain exact justice by arbitration has not been found by the temporary disposition of that particular case. Only recently the San Francisco printers again voted in favor of the principle of arbitration, but almost in the same breath they registered emphatic disapproval of that form of arbitration which provides for a decision by an odd arbiter who is of necessity subject to local influences because of fixed relationship either with one party or the other. While it is wisely provided that there shall be no fixed relationship between the odd arbiter and the interested parties, still experience in many cases has proved that prejudicial tendencies do exist, and in the very nature of things are almost bound to exist, to the end that justice is shaded, and all too often, perhaps, on the side of the most powerful or most influential contender. Added to all that is the risk of freak decisions, one way or the other, by arbiters who may be honest enough but whose lack of knowledge of conditions surrounding the newspaper publishing business makes their participation in the controversy hazardous to a dangerous degree. By taking the San Francisco controversy out of the atmosphere of local politics and local business influences we have removed that much of objection; but that, and only that.

San Francisco Typographical Union, in conjunction with the local associations of employers, is arranging for the protection in their situations of members who may enlist for war service, and the protection afforded will include all registered apprentices. While the local union had already taken up the question, the suggestions received from the International officers have been found helpful.

The women of No. 21 have done themselves proud in the Red Cross membership campaign. By reason of the activity of these ladies, 378 new memberships have been secured. Considering that many of our members already held membership and the further fact that the service rendered by the committee was entirely voluntary and the solicitations made after working hours in most cases, the result is highly satisfactory and most commendable.

The June meeting of the union brought out a satisfactory attendance and the proceedings were interesting throughout. An unusual number of subjects were discussed and acted upon, all having an important bearing upon the welfare of the organization. It was voted to withdraw from the California Typographical Conference because it was shown that the activities of that body were so limited in scope that the cost of maintaining it hardly justified the necessary expenditure. It is believed that all of the important work of the conference can be done in other ways and without the expense attendant upon holding the organization together, and at the same time be relieved from the annoyance of the petty politics that have been introduced into its affairs. The membership statement showed an increase of seventeen for the month. Miss Minnie C. Aguilar, Edward Johnson, Daniel Malloy and Stanley E. Williams were initiated and applications were received from Minnie C. Thom and La Ray G. Watson. The executive committee reported that it had invested $1,000 of the union's reserve in liberty loan bonds. Approval was given to the applications of Jerome W. Myers and William K. Rutter for admission to the Union Printers Home and one application for the old age pension also was ordered favorably reported to the International Typographical Union The executive committee reported on relations of No. 21 and the photo-engravers incidental to the union's strike on the San Francisco papers. The course being followed by the committee was unanimously approved. Upon recommendation of the records committee, the laws were amended so that the committee is now abolished, its work having been completed Another amendment to the union's laws purposing to repeal a section which has long been a subject of discussion among the members, that which prevented an officer of the organization from holding a political position and which also required that an officer must resign his position immediately upon receiving a nomination from a political party. A long and interesting discussion was had, with the result that the vote in favor of repealing the section was unanimous. L. L. Stopple resigned as a delegate to the label section of the labor council. Two vacancies in the union's delegation to that body will be filled at the July meeting. All of the delegates to the allied printing trades council, in a lengthy report to the union, suggested that they be withdrawn from the council and that new delegates be chosen to succeed them. The reason given was that more harmonious relations might follow a change of delegates.

Capt. Daniel V. Chisholm, deputy United States public printer, commander-in chief of the United Spanish-American War Veterans, active member of the typographical union for many years, accompanied by Mr. Chisholm, arrived in San Francisco Friday, June 29, and remained till Sunday evening when he continued on to Portland, where Captain Chisholm, by request of the mayor of that city, led the Fourth of July parade. Captain Chisholm was making a tour of the country as commander-in-chief of the Spanish war veterans, a custom established in that organization. While in San Francisco, Captain Chisholm and his wife were royally entertained by the veterans and on Sunday morning were guests of No. 21 on an auto trip to the site of the new military camp at Palo Alto. During all the years that Chisholm has risen from the ranks he has never allowed himself to be out of touch with old friends. He still retains membership in the union, and knows as much about the organization's every-day life as if he were still working at the case. His present position places him in a position where he can do many things for members of the union that otherwise might not be accomplished, and he is always ready to perform the service.

A. J. ("Teddy") Moore, of the Bulletin chapel night force, and Miss Lena L. Goldstein, daughter of M. Goldstein, Oakland capitalist, were married on Wednesday, June 27. Mr. and Mrs. Moore will remain in San Francisco till the early fall, when they plan to take up their residence in New York.

The Union Printers' Mutual Aid Society held its annual meeting Sunday, July 8. The reports of officers showed that the organization is in fine shape, financially and otherwise. Election of officers resulted as follows: George M. Hearst, president; C. A. Pirie, first vice-president; Carroll E. Fisk, second vice-president; L. Michelson, secretary-treasurer; J. D. Laing, marshal; William C. Reilly, guardian; board of directors, George A. Tracy, A. R. Chenoweth, C. E. Cantrell, H. T. Darr. Retiring President Fred F. Bebergall was presented with a beautiful pair of military brushes as a token of appreciation by the society of his services.

President Tracy has a few copies of "Handset Reminiscences," an interesting book devoted to incidents in the early life of J. B. Graham, now living at Salt Lake, Utah. The books are offered for sale at $1 a copy. Mr. Graham published the book after a life full of activities, and the publication is replete with good stories of the early days of printerdom in this country. Any member of No. 21 who would like to purchase the book will be amply repaid in its reading and President Tracy will be glad to forward the money to Mr. Graham.

GEORGE A. TRACY.

LONDON, ONT.

Owing to the holiday, the regular meeting in July was adjourned to the second Sunday of the month, and was fairly well attended. The most important of the volume of business on hand was the tentative clause of the agreement, which was voluntarily inserted at the outset of the war, and which at that time was to alleviate in some degree the hardship entailed upon the employers by the almost prohibitive prices of paper and metal. But now that these matters have adjusted themselves to about normal, and the burden has shifted to the employes, by the skyrocketing prices of the necessaries of life, and everything else accordingly, the members are of the unanimous opinion that the employers should be willing to reciprocate by throwing out the clause, and to that end the proper officers were instructed to take up the matter. It is not anticipated at this writing that there will be much opposition encountered, as the employers have been advancing wages individually until there are but few who are only receiving the minimum scale; and also the fact that Toronto has boosted its men at the rate of a four-dollar increase at the first shot out of the box. Numerous cities are making inquiries for printers, accompanied by handsome inducements, so there is presented the proposition of retaining their employes as well as the matter of playing the game fair. But, of course, No. 133 is prepared, in case of refusal, to live up to its agreement to the letter of the law.

Representative Kinskey, of Buffalo, was present and delivered an address on the fundamental principles of unionism. The major, who was at his best, was listened to with rapt attention, and made some telling points for the guidance of those who may be inclined to permit their enthusiasm to lag at vital moments. Taken as a whole, the meeting was the best in years. It certainly was a satisfaction and encouragement to the local administration, and they desire to take this opportunity to express their sincere gratitude to the membership for the hearty co-operation that has manifested itself of late, and feel sure that it spells unity to the end. Hugh McPherson presented the report for the delegates to the Ontario Conference of Typographical Unions, and the representatives were each voted a generous allowance for services rendered. Secretary Steele reported for the entertainment committee of the convention, announcing a balance of some $25 unexpended. The meeting, by unanimous consent, was adjourned to the second Sunday in August.

The employing printers of Toronto have set an example which might be emulated with profit by their contemporaries of London, in a generous boost to the wage scale.

The following cards were deposited during the month: J. L. Ostropol, H. Swayze, J. M. Norris, with one traveler issued.

Business conditions are bowling along at top speed, the newspapers seemingly reaping a big harvest of advertising.

A. H. WHEATLEY.

ANN ARBOR, MICH.

The meeting of Typographical Union No. 154, held July 2, was an interesting one with a large attendance of its members. Officers were installed for the ensuing year, and the various committees appointed.

Work, at the present writing, is very quiet, which happens with us at the closing of college, and generally remains so until opening in October, and vacations are now in order. Tourists take notice.

Arrangements are being made to take part in the Labor day celebration to be held here by the trades council.

The cards of R. T. Ethridge and O. R. Bishop have been withdrawn.

William Bischoff, of Terre Haute, Ind., was in the city a few days visiting friends; also to attend the funeral of his brother-in-law, Charles Esslinger. Mr. Bischoff served his apprenticeship here at the old Register office.

A smoker will be given at our next meeting.

GEORGE P. STANCH.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

In addition to those previously mentioned as having enlisted in the army are David R. Johnson, of the Success Linotype Company chapel; Stanley A. Russell, of Successful Farming, and Charles T. Tillotson, of Heilhecker's. A. A. Couch and E. S. Campbell have applications pending for admission to the officers' training camp at Fort Riley. A letter from James L. Quinn, who is with the cavalry at Fort Riley, brings the information that he is well pleased with his berth.

Arrivals have been numerous during the past month, and calls for help have been rare. The dull period arrived ahead of time this season.

W. H. Boyd, one of our delegates, left on July 16 for a visit to Salt Lake City, accompanied by Mrs. Boyd. They will remain in the west until time to report at Colorado Springs.

R. B. Miller, chairman at Successful Farming, is spending his vacation in California. Miss Carrie Schaben has returned from a month's outing at Lake Okoboji. J. J. Dwyer is enjoying an auto trip through Illinois. J. H. Allred spent his vacation in southern Iowa. Quite a delegation is planning to attend the convention.

B. F. Doyle, Register foreman, is at this date in the hospital, suffering from stomach trouble.

All is bustle at Camp Dodge, the thirteenth divisional army cantonment, ten miles northwest of the city. With 500 guardsmen training at the fair grounds, 1,500 colored troops at the fort, and the hundreds of workmen and soldiers putting things in readiness for the reception of 50,000 recruits at the camp, Des Moines is assuming a military aspect. The benefits of the location of the cantonment will be reaped by contractors, shippers and dealers in provisions, etc. The printing industry has received no impetus. W. G. WATERS.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

The July meeting was the shortest session held by Little Rock Union for several years, the reading of the minutes, reports of officers and committees taking up less than an hour's time.

There has been quite a slump in the newspaper end, but commercial work still is holding up pretty fair.

It is announced that a new paper, a penny daily, will make its appearance here about the first of August.

Rufus D. Briggs, S. Ward Rice, William H. Voss and Jesse L. Sneed, the latter an apprentice member, have enlisted in the motor truck company of the Arkansas national guard.

W. L. Oury, sr., for many years publisher of the Union Label Bulletin, who has been seriously ill, is reported to be improving.

E. G. Shoffner has gone to Manitou, Colo., in an effort to regain his health. "Shoff" is practicing law now, but carries an active card, and is held in high esteem by our membership.

It is a caution the way the members of No. 92 are buying automobiles, four members of one chapel having acquired brand new machines recently. The reason: Arkansas is a "bone dry" state and some of our members, instead of indulging in the cup that cheers, now have bank accounts, building and loan stock, gasoline buggies and other luxuries.

Arrival: T. K. Rockwood. Departures: L. R. Kellogg, Stuart Curran, Florence Brook, E. A. Rivers. G. S. LUCAS.

FORT DODGE, IOWA.

Since the last communication to THE JOURNAL from No. 713, notable changes have taken place in the printing circles of Fort Dodge. The consolidation of the Chronicle and Messenger, which took place July 1, has thrown some of Fort Dodge's best printers out of work in the midst of the dull season. The consolidation is only one of many such business consummations which have taken place in this section during the last few years. Fort Dodge should be able to sustain two live up-to-date newspapers if any town or city should. But the publishing of a creditable newspaper these days necessitates a large investment, not only for stock, equipment, etc., but for competent men to manage them. By combining the two papers into one (the Messenger and Chronicle) and by giving the public a bigger and better news service, together with an increase in both the subscription and advertising rates, the publisher will undoubtedly be able to weather the present times of financial stress. The Messenger has always given the public good news service, and it will undoubtedly feel its responsibility now more than ever before and continue to make improvements.

Following is a list of the towns to which the Chronicle printers scattered when the consolidation took place: Harry Webster, Clarion; Walter Kehm, Knoxville; Haugen, Minneapolis; Consbrock, Des Moines; Ramage, Chanook, Mont.; Hasson, Burlington. Pruess and Howard will remain working until August 1, when the job office will close.

No. 713 is following the example of her larger sisters and is keeping up the card of the member who has enlisted in the guard. Arthur Hutchison holds the distinction of being the only member of No. 713 who belongs to the national guard. He is with the boys at present encamped but a short distance from town. The boys are expecting a call to Des Moines at most any time now to concentrate for the trip south for a short camp to fit them for service in France in the near future.

No cards were received the last month. Only the cards of the former Chronicle printers before mentioned have gone out. GLENN EBERSOLE.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Members of No. 174 have had a great time during the past month attending the doings of the different chapels. On Sunday, July 1, came the "wayzgoose," otherwise picnic, of the Examiner, in which all employes of that paper, their families, and other members of the unions had the time of their lives at Scheutzen park, at which Joe Romero (he of the convention barbecue fame) served a barbecue that satisfied even the galley boy, so you know it was some "eats." All sorts of sports were enjoyed and fine prizes given for the winners, the prize at the baby show being carried away by "Councilman Grandpa" Criswell's granddaughter, and 'tis said Archibald was one proud young father.

Sunday morning, July 8, the annual banquet of the Tribune chapel was held at Levy's tavern, at which a large number of the craft more than enjoyed themselves with the good eats, drinks, etc.

And still another change in the management of the Express-Tribune plant has taken place, C. C. Rosewater having returned east after being in charge only a few months as general manager, followed very shortly by the resignation of Frank H. Chase as mechanical superintendent, he also returning east; then the change of foreman on the Tribune, Ed L. Schlegel being given charge of that paper in place of M. A. Olmem, who recently came to Los Angeles from Omaha.

After a month's visit with his parents in Washington state, Fred T. Beatty, of the Express, is back at work.

Charles J. Fisk, intertype representative, member of Helena (Mont.) Union and ex-delegate to San Francisco and Minneapolis, has been in Los Angeles some time now while a demonstration, or rather contest, is being held between an intertype and linotype on the Express, the outcome of which may mean the sale of over a dozen new machines to that plant.

George E. Mitchell, jr., of the Tribune chapel, while off on a supposed vacation early in July, married in San Francisco and spent his honeymoon in Yosemite valley.

Fred H. Sutton, of the Record chapel, spent three weeks in the mountains during July and returned to find himself promoted to the foremanship of that paper, George T. Hanson, who filled that position for nine months past, having resigned.

C. S. Crane, former sheriff of Ely county and member of Pueblo (Colo.) Union, and Cliff Moon are now proprietors of a paper in Lancaster, Cal.

Fred M. Adams, formerly of "Big Six," died in Holtville, Imperial Valley, July 12, being overcome by the desert heat. He leaves a widow, Jenny Stott, also formerly of New York.

Death overtook another old-time member of the International Typographical Union on June 30, when W. E. McLernon was stricken with heart failure while conversing with one of the city officials at the city hall. As representative of the International Typographical Union McLernon is remembered by many of the local members. For the past few years he had been publishing a paper at Culver City, and was on the way to easy street in his new venture when death overtook him.

Ruby Black, of the Herald chapel, and Charles Black, of the Tribune, were called to Stockton, Cal., the middle of June by the death of their brother, Freeman F. Black, a member of Stockton Union.

Once again the Los Angeles Times has been made to pay dearly for its habit of vindictiveness against any one who might not believe just as it would wish. After three years of fighting, Nathan Newby, of this city, was awarded $7,500 damages for libel.

The Wolfer Printing Company and the Superior Linotyping Company, who have been next-door neighbors on North Broadway for several years past, and having outgrown their present locations, are preparing to move into a new building being erected at Winston and Wall streets that will house both firms and give them plenty of room for future expansion. W. K. LOCKWOOD.

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES COUNCIL OF TEXAS.

The annual convention of the Allied Printing Trades Council of Texas, formerly the Texas Printers' State Council, was held at Austin June 26 and 27. The session opened on Tuesday morning with an address by J. M. Gilbert, of the arrangements committee of Austin Typographical Union No. 138, who introduced Mayor A. P. Wooldridge. Mayor Wooldridge welcomed the delegates to the city and was in turn addressed by President Colley in a response of thanks on behalf of the council. A. C. Wright, president of Austin Typographical Union, welcomed the delegates for that local.

Delegates from the following cities were seated: Dallas, Houston, Waco, San Antonio, Galveston, Fort Worth, Corpus Christi and Austin.

The main business coming before the conference Tuesday at the morning session was the hearing of the officers' reports and the appointment of committees on organization, resolutions and officers' reports.

Secretary Clint Tullis read his report for the past year, included in which was the work and operation of the employment bureau. The gist of this report was that this bureau had not been a great success.

Tuesday afternoon's session was taken up by reading of resolutions, which were referred to the resolutions committee, and the hearing of the report of the committee on organization. This committee recommended enlarging the scope of the council so as to admit unions of the other printing crafts and the changing of the name to the Texas Allied Printing Trades Council.

Strong resolutions endorsing the purposes of the war, expressing confidence in President Wilson and pledging the continued co-operation of the printing trades were adopted.

The council went on record as endorsing free textbooks and urged the establishment of a state printing plant.

At the conclusion of the afternoon session the visitors were taken for a tour of the city in automobiles, and the drive wound up at the Driskill hotel, where an elaborate banquet was served at 6:30. Perhaps 125 men were present, including a large number of the printers of Austin, a few employing printers and a few newspaper men.

The first speaker, H. C. Colley, of Houston, president of the state organization, declared that he thought the convention had taken a great step forward in broadening its scope to take in the allied trades. He also spoke of the better tone and character of the printers of today over those of a few years back, and the better feeling that exists between them and their employers. The present banquet, he said, was a striking object lesson, demonstrating the growing social dignity of the craft.

Clint Tullis, of Dallas, secretary-treasurer, said that the printing industry had made strides in Texas. He declared that state and county officials ought to see the advantage to everybody concerned —printer, printing shop proprietor, and the community at large—if Texas public printing was all given to Texas shops. The eight-hour day, he said, which used to be considered impracticable, has now been extended even to the small towns where the craft is not organized.

A. C. Wright, president of Austin Typographical Union, said that he believed that Austin printers would approve the broadened scope of the organization, for they have the spirit of friendship and co-operation. He also spoke of the good feeling existing between printers and editors, printers and employers in general. All prefer friendship and mutual respect to fear or enmity, he said.

Chester T. Crowell and Edmunds Travis were two editors who spoke, facetiously and earnestly by turns, demonstrating their good feeling toward the men of the printing fraternity.

A. C. Baldwin, head of the house of Baldwin & Sons, declared that no craft had made such forward strides in the past third of a century as has the printing craft. The union used to be controlled by the anarchistic element, the rough fellows who gave the employer credit for no good quality and was always bent on gouging him. At the present time the best of social relations exist between the front office and the composing room, and adjustments from time to time are made in a spirit of reasonableness and good will.

Tom Bell, a printer, of the state purchasing agent's department, emphasized the point that organized labor, while demanding what justly belongs to the laborer, should look at things in a broad way and be considerate of the rights and interests of other groups.

William M. Reilly, editor of the Dallas Craftsman, declared that, although he had attended many printers' conventions, some of them International conventions where thousands of dollars were expended for entertainment, he had never attended one where there was a better spirit of hospitality than here, or more pleasing entertainment. He favored "making Austin permanent headquarters."

The Wednesday morning session was given over to the passing of resolutions asking the government to conscript surplus wealth as well as men during the period of the war, and endorsing President Wilson and his policy. Upon the receiving of a favorable report from the committee on organization, the council's name was changed to the Allied Printing Trades Council of Texas, with the necessary amendments in the by-laws to admit pressmen, bookbinders, stereotypers and photo-engravers.

Another change in the by-laws adopted was one making the date of meeting three days before the state federation of labor convention and the place of meeting the same city as the federation.

The following resolutions were adopted at the afternoon session: Asking all allied trades in the printing industry to pay the dues of their members who were called to the government service; petitioning congress to relieve the news print situation; against the increase of postal rates on second-class matter; supporting the buy-it-made-in-Texas movement. This last resolution also called the attention of that convention to the fact that cases had come to the notice of the council where the printing of the B-I-M-I-T association had not been done in this state.

Some discussion was caused by A. C. Wright's resolution, reported unfavorably by the committee. This resolution condemned linotype operators who willingly let any speed record made by them be published. This resolution was argued pro and con on the floor, but the report of the resolutions committee was eventually adopted.

After hearing the reports of delegates on their local conditions, the council listened with great interest to a speech in favor of free textbooks by W. F. Doughty, state superintendent of public instruction.

A rising vote of thanks was then given Austin Typographical Union for the hospitality shown during the two-day conference, after which President Colley declared the 1917 conference adjourned.

The delegates were taken at 5:30 P. M. by the members of Austin Union for a boat ride up Lake Austin. Sandwiches, with all the "moist trimmings" and cigars, were served during the ride on the lake. J. M. GILBERT.

WESTERN CANADA CONFERENCE.

The Winnipeg Voice devoted over ten columns to its résumé of business transacted at the Regina convention of the Western Canada Conference.

The Western Print (non-union), Edmonton, has suspended business.

Alf Brett, a member of Saskatoon Union, and Jack Rivett, an apprentice, both of the Star staff, have enlisted in the division cycle platoon, with headquarters at Regina.

The conference at its Regina convention decided to ask the Dominion and provincial governments to curtail unnecessary printing of blue books, etc., on account of the war, it being felt that this work could be handled more in the interests of the community if this policy were followed, as it would go a long way toward meeting the unemployment problem that is possible at the close of hostilities. Replies from different governments intimate that the matter is receiving consideration.

After a campaign of several years, in which Saskatoon Union and the officers of the conference have been engaged, it is announced that work has been commenced on the installation of a ventilation system in the premises of the Saskatoon Phœnix.

It is possible that Fort William and Port Arthur, Ont., will link up with the Western Canada Conference. At the suggestion of the Western Conference, the matter was considered by the convention of the Ontario organization, with which the two cities have been affiliated, and it is understood Ontario looks with favor on the proposition. It is expected the Ontario Conference will branch out by taking in several Quebec unions.

William Burgess and David Wood, of Medicine Hat Union, were given a bad shaking up but not seriously injured through an auto accident in which their car turned turtle in making the turn at the foot of a steep hill between Redcliff and Medicine Hat on July 2. B. W. BELLAMY.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

Although we are too far removed from the seat of most of the International Typographical Union conventions to send delegates each year, the members of No. 85 take a deep interest in the deliberations of those who frame our laws, and eagerly scan the pages of THE JOURNAL as soon as the mail brings it within their grasp. The several matters dealt with are thrashed out in chapel and at the regular meetings of our union. When next a convention is held within reaching distance of St. John it will be found that No. 85 will be represented at the gathering.

On Sunday evening, July 8, a memorial service was held in St. Mary's Episcopal church in honor of Frank McKenzie, a former member of No. 85, who made the supreme sacrifice in the cause of freedom on the battlefields of France. He went from here with the Fifth Canadian mounted rifles and served his country well until a German shell snuffed out the existence of a thoroughly capable and well-trained master of the art of typography. He served his time with Barnes & Co., became a member of our union and perfected himself in the art preservative of the arts by taking the I. T. U. course. Besides his skill as a printer the fallen hero was no mean artist with the brush, several marine paintings existing as monuments to his skill in that line. He was well liked by his fellow craftsmen and his genial smile is sadly missed by those with whom he was wont to associate. Although the notice was short and not widely spread, a number of the members of No. 85 were present at the service, which was conducted by Rev. Robert McKim. The preacher referred to the departed's many good traits and expressed his pleasure in knowing that there was an organization such as the printers' union, whose members took thought of their fellow workers and were not slow to dip deep into their pockets to aid each other in distress.

A. S. Moore, one of our members, who has apparently been doing well in New Glasgow, N. S., recently built a fine residence for himself in that thriving town; but being one of those fellows with a business streak among his gray matter, he sold it at a substantial profit.

At the last meeting the matter of a Canadian vice-president of the International Typographical Union for Canada was freely discussed and the action of Montreal Union No. 176 was endorsed.

The secretary-treasurer presented his reports for the past six months at the last meeting and they showed No. 85 to be in a flourishing condition. At the present time we are about 100 per cent in good standing membership, which will compare most favorably with other unions in the eastern section of the jurisdiction.

Word has been received from James Drury, the International Typographical Union representative for Quebec and the maritime provinces, that he will probably stop off here on his way to the big convention. There will be no doubt as to the welcome he will receive, for the boys all like to put forth the glad hand to visitors from other sections of the jurisdiction.

Now that the committee having to do with the apprenticeship regulations has completed its work, the next in order will be the revision of the local constitution and by-laws. This work is most necessary, as there have been so many changes made that it is difficult to keep track of the several laws which govern our union. Therefore it is probable that the work of this committee (which was interrupted by the apprenticeship matter) will be resumed at the next meeting.

"Back to the farm" seems to be embossed somewhere in the craniums of a goodly number of the membership, as each day the trend of conversation is about how fast each one's potatoes, beets or other garden stuff is growing. There are no more idle back yards; each one is working full time to supply the printer and his family with at least a portion of the winter's supply of vegetables, etc. So, minus the hayseed, many of the boys are developing into veritable farmers.

Work is not overplentiful just now, but about all the members are employed. There is not much prospect of any improvement before the fall.

A. D. COLWELL.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The biggest event which took place in printerdom during the past month in Providence was the sixtieth anniversary banquet of Providence Typographical Union. On account of the war the celebration was somewhat restricted and did not include as many entertaining features as the celebration of ten years ago. The banquet on June 27, which was attended by state and city officials, men prominent in the newspaper and job printing industry and many out-of-town guests, took the form of a patriotic night, and all speakers referred in some manner to the crisis now confronting this nation. International President Marsden G. Scott was present, also Representatives Joseph J. Dallas and Bert G. Brady.

On July 25 the following men employed in the composing room of the Journal and Bulletin answered the mobilization call of the national guard: First Lieutenant William A. Powers, Second Lieutenant Walter Bennett, both of the coast artillery corps; First Sergeant Percy J. Cantwell, Corporal Bernard J. McLaughlin, Privates Joseph Melarkey, John F. Russell and Albert Fraser, of the first battalion field artillery. There are many more from other departments of this paper, and with those who have gone into training previously or who have been already called into service about 10 per cent of the force will be under arms after the 25th—twenty-nine men from the Journal family in all.

Action has been taken by President Murphy and the executive committee to insure the positions of those members of No. 33 who respond to the call, and in line with the action of the executive council agreements are being signed protecting all members going to the front.

Al Martin, of the Journal, joined an ambulance unit of the regular army during the month and is now in training. Dan Harrington has taken up a course in radio for Uncle Sam and is at present stationed at a school in Newport. Walter Maginn is to join an ambulance unit of Brown University when he returns from his honeymoon, and will shortly go into training. William R. Broadhead, who left the Journal employ and enlisted in the English cavalry, writes from France that he is enjoying good health, though by no means enjoying the carnage that is going on over there. Mr. Broadhead has received a number of promotions since going to the front, and is now a doctor in the veterinary corps.

Notwithstanding the terrific drives of General High Cost of Living and the necessity for economy and conservation of our man power, the following members have not only gone into an immediate costly enterprise but have saddled themselves with added and perpetual expense for the rest of their natural lives (they have all been married recently): Walter Maginn, William Hasney, Ulric Shortley and Harry O'Hara. Alderman Eugene T. Dion, of Pawtucket, a member of the Providence Printing Company, was married on July 3 to Miss Mary Rose Maguire.

The secretary of No. 33 has had a communication from the chairman of the convention committee of the Providence Chamber of Commerce urging him to have our delegate to the Colorado Springs convention bring to that body an invitation to select Providence for the next annual session. This, of course, is out of the question at this time, on account of our recently having had that honor. But the communication is important, as it shows the way the wind is blowing in Providence. The 1914 convention in Providence made a deep and lasting impression on the business people of this city, and they are only too anxious to again bear their part in assuming the duties of host. Tentatively, we have placed 1924 as our next International Typographical Union convention year. We might be coaxed into having the honor thrust upon us sooner, but we will not let it go beyond that date.

President Murphy announces that plans are being laid for a fall campaign to secure as members of No. 33 every working printer in the job shops of Providence. This looks like a big task, but should be entered into with zest by every jobber in this union. Only by the united exertions and cooperation of the jobman can this be made an accomplished fact. Ways and means will be discussed at all meetings while the campaign is on, and if the jobber has the will for the task he will find here the inspiration and help to insure success. Come to the meetings from now on. The newspaper man is anxious to see the jobber raised to the same scale as he is, but without the jobber doing the bulk of the work it can not be done. Missionary work is the keynote to success in this endeavor.

Samuel R. Macready, grand old man of No. 33 and a hard worker in its interest for many years, has been confined to his home for the past two months by illness. For many years Mr. Macready has been our representative in the local central labor union and untiring in his efforts to better the condition of the toiler not only in his own trade but workingmen generally. On July 14, the occasion of his sixty-seventh birthday, he was remembered by his fellow workmen on the Bulletin by receiving from each man a birthday card. We all hope to see him back soon.

H. Beck & Co. are distributing to their patrons an attractive folder in red, white and blue colors, entitled "To Prevent Misuse of the Flag." The outside page carries the imprint of Old Glory and the inside of the booklet gives a brief history of the flag and the several different forms in which it is proper to display it.

George Flynn, of the Bulletin proofroom, has the sympathy of the membership in the death of his wife, which occurred on July 17.

Mrs. William Abell died at her home in this city on July 5. Her husband for many years was secretary of No. 33 and at the time of his death was on the International pension roll. A few years ago Mrs. Abell took an active part in the organization of a woman's auxiliary to No. 33.

Daniel O'Connor, ex-president of No. 33, ex-delegate to Colorado Springs 1906, and to Nashville, Tenn., 1913, has been elected chairman of the Journal chapel in place of Al Fraser, who resigned to enter the United States forces.

Herbert Jackson, formerly employed on the Pawtucket Evening Times, has been made foreman of the job printing office of Thompson & Thompson, of this city. Matt A. Hayes has deposited a Utica traveling card and has gone to work on the Narragansett Times at Wakefield, R. I. Si Mulsnoch, of the Bulletin, has been called to Philadelphia by the serious illness of his father.

The writer, when it comes time to send the next letter to THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, expects to be in the field in the service of Uncle Sam. While we all expect intensive training, and that a great deal of our spare time will necessarily be devoted to study, it is the present intention of the Providence correspondent to send just a few lines regarding our members at the front, in the hope that the editor will find a little space under the regular Providence letter for our contribution.

PERCY J. CANTWELL.

SCRANTON, PA.

"The Electric City, 1918!"

During the past year the Scranton monthly contribution to THE JOURNAL has carried the above quotation. The writer has endeavored each month to give the reader an insight into our thriving city by noting some particular point of interest in and surrounding Scranton. For additional information, the convention committee of No. 112 sent out during the month a booklet to the delegates elected to the Colorado Springs convention, entitled, "Trolley Trips in and Around Scranton, Wilkes-Barre and Hazelton." Many views of these cities are shown in this unique publication, together with a panoramic picture of this city. It also points out how the traveler may reach objective sections by "trolley" and enjoy the invigorating air while touring through our picturesque mountain scenery. The beautiful Wyoming valley—in which is located Wilkes-Barre—is vividly described, and should prove of additional interest, due to the fact that our neighboring union has asked for the privilege of entertaining the convention for one day in case Scranton secures the plum. The next convention city will be chosen about the time this issue of THE JOURNAL reaches a majority of its readers. Will it be Scranton? We hope so. Delegates: "Make it Scranton, 1918, and help us celebrate the golden jubilee of No. 112. We'll do the rest."

Patrick J. Harrity, a member of No. 112, joined the ambulance corps of the army June 21. At this writing he is stationed at Allentown, Pa., receiving instructions preparatory for his departure for France. Mr. Harrity was employed at the Polyglot office, where he manipulated the ivories, setting the different languages for the papers issued by this company. His familiarity with the foreign "stuff" should prove of material assistance to him when he lands on foreign soil. While we regret to lose Mr. Harrity at this time, still we are proud of his patriotism, and the members of No. 112 wish him a safe return home in good health.

Vice-President "Clint" Corless, of No. 112, and Charles Wilson, both members of the Times chapel, have located during the summer months at Clark's Summit, a suburb of the city. They have taken President M. G. Scott's advice and tilled the soil. These two husky printer-farmers look forward to gratifying results from their labor in the near future.

"Joe" A. Battle, of the Republican chapel, who occasionally harkens to the smell of gasoline in preference to the metal pot, entertained his friends and co-workers, "Joe" Hosie, "Billy" Holtham, "Eddie" Golden and John P. Kilcullen, recently to an automobile trip in his high-power car. Another of No. 112's members, Austin Frounfelker, can be seen almost any evening on the prominent thoroughfares driving a new car. Other members of the local union who have the honk fever are: T. J. Evans, of the Evans Printing Company; W. A. Sanders, of the Sanders Printing Company, and Charles Wilson, of the Times.

The Machine Composition Company, Komorowski & Elbert, proprietors, is the name of a new firm recently located in this city. A new intertype has been installed and they are now catering to the trade for composition. Messrs. Komorowski and Elbert came here from Reading, Pa., the former gentleman being quite well known to a number of our members, due to his activity in the Eastern Pennsylvania Typographical Union. The hand of good fellowship is extended to Messrs. Komorowski and Elbert and we wish them success in their venture.

The convention committee of No. 112 will conduct an outing to Moosic Lake, Saturday, September 1, the proceeds of which will go into the convention fund. Frank McTeague is chairman of the athletic events, while John J. Donnelly is chairman of the refreshment committee. This outing should bring out every member of the union and his family, and the younger members should see that their "best girl" is not left behind. The only exceptions are those employed on the Scrantonian, our Sunday paper. Amusements of every description will be provided and the committee guarantees a day of rare enjoyment to all who attend. Our members should get behind this outing and boost it to a successful finish. Tickets are only 50 cents.

Hobart H. Muir, special representative of the Ludlow Typograph Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, was in the city recently installing one of the Ludlows at the I. C. S. printery. He was followed later on by George Stone, another employe of the same company. Both gentlemen are members of the typographical union. Mr. Muir is a great booster for Cleveland Union and its officers, and paid President James J. Hoban some very nice compliments for his untiring efforts to keep No. 53 in the foreground. George Schoen, assistant foreman at the I. C. S. printery, is teaching his co-workers how to use the new "italic stick," one of the attachments of the Ludlow machine.

A. J. Jennings, one of No. 112's younger members, has "lifted" his traveler. This is Mr. Jennings' initial trip, with Pittsburgh as the objective point.

C. A. Keller, No. 112's hustling financial secretary, spent a week in New York city during the month. He motored through several Connecticut towns on his jaunt, and used the same locomotion to return home.

Thomas S. Brown, a former member of Carbondale (Pa.) Union, has been added to the I. C. S. force at the printery. He is operating one of the new No. 19 Mergenthaler models, which is one of three recently installed by that company. Joseph Miller and Frank McTeague were assigned the other two new machines.

John Damal has taken over the Riverside Press Printery, formerly the property of R. Kunz, sr. Mr. Kunz has accepted the foremanship of the Prendergast Printery. Mr. Kunz is a thorough, competent workman who is always injecting original ideas into his work. He is sure to please the trade of this exacting printery.

"Dick" Murray, JOURNAL correspondent from Minot, N. D., remembered his Scranton friends recently by sending views of his trip through Yellowstone Park. Mr. Murray is a regular cyclopedia on the geographical outlay of the country, having visited every city of any size during his many years in the printing business. "Dick" has many friends in this city among the "old guard," who worked with him in the handset days.

Thomas H. Evans, former member of No. 112, but now of "Big Six," was in Scranton during the week of July 8 to 14, issuing the "last call" for the Query club trip to the Colorado Springs convention. He predicts an enjoyable time for those taking advantage of the arrangements made by the Query club, and looks forward to a satisfied "bunch" after the trip is completed.

The members of No. 112 were extending condolences during the month to two of their number, M. Andrews and Edward Kinny, who had the misfortune to lose their mothers. A. J. LANGAN.

WINNIPEG, MAN.

At a special meeting the job scale committee was discharged, with the thanks of the union and a gratuity of $15 each in recognition of their services. The scale negotiations are at present in the hands of Representative Ed Smith and a special committee. The only thing which is now preventing an amicable settlement is a strange reluctance on the part of the employers to pay the $27 scale asked for.

There have been bumper attendances at the last few regular and special meetings, the cause being the job scale negotiations. It has been quite a pleasure to the "regulars" to sit back and listen to the new crop of orators who have suddenly sprung up. But, after all, the average worker doesn't need to have labor bureau books quoted to him to prove that the cost of living has gone up enormously. He knows. And as to whether if the people had voted the labor ticket instead of putting into power the representatives of the exploiters, that that would have prevented the present state of affairs is not now the question. The printers at present are faced with the fact that their present wage scale is entirely inadequate and they want as big a raise as they can prevail on the employers to pay. That even the policemen are alive to the conditions is evidenced by the following incident which occurred lately: A policeman reported to the desk sergeant at the central police station that a gentleman who had been carried into the station in an unconscious condition had nothing on his person by which he could be identified. "Has he any money?" queried the sergeant. "No." Whereupon the desk sergeant marked down, "Printer. Name and address unknown."

Dave Hutchison, alias Daredevil Dave, is intending, if his rabbit farm turns out the great success financially that he anticipates, to pay a visit to New York shortly. Dave was a member of "Big Six" during Geary's presidency and was one of the first members of the New York Herald Rambling club, Manhattan and Nonpareil clubs, and claims John L. and Jack Dempsey as old pals.

Bun Foley, printer, fight manager, horseman, ex-club owner and general, all-round good sport, is hard at work on his farm at Murray Park. To be as great a success in the greater food production movement as he has been in his other ventures is Bun's ambition now. It is stated that he has even imbued his hens with the national service spirit and that they are all laying double-yolked eggs. Although he has not worked a day at the printing trade since he quit the Telegram ten years ago, Bun still keeps his card paid up.

If there is anything in that old Biblical saying that "It is more blessed to give than to receive," then the members of the Telegram chapel have been having a whale of a time lately. What with members of the chapel joining the army and others getting married, the past year has been one continual round of presentations. There have been nine presentations to members enlisting for active service, and three to members of the chapel getting married. The latest happy victims of Cupid's dart are Miss A. M. Bastien and Albert Holroyd. Although little over a year a member of the chapel, Miss Bastien has during that time endeared herself to the hearts of the members. Albert Holroyd, who is a member of the stereotyping chapel, has been nine years with the Telegram and is a very popular young man. Miss Bastien was presented with a handsome tea set and beautiful tray, and Albert with a magnificent cabinet of cutlery. Other marriages of members of the composing-room staff were those of George Dohoo, apprentice machinist, who kept his marriage a dark secret until after the deed was done, and W. D. White, who was married at the Spiritualist church on July 28. The presentations to these two gentlemen are still to come.

Acting on instructions of the union, the news arbitration committee took up the question of a shorter workday on Saturdays during the summer months with the employers. The committee had very great difficulty in getting the proprietors to come to any mutual agreement, owing to the fear in the minds of each that his contemporaries might get ahead of him in some way. However, after negotiations extending over five weeks the proprietors finally agreed to go to press with their Saturday home editions not later than 1 P. M. during the remaining Saturdays of July and August. The conditions upon which the half-holiday was granted did not find favor with the employes, only one of the three chapels affected being agreeable, so the arrangement fell through.

The recent heat wave, combined, perhaps with the fact that the beer-dispensing establishments have been put out of business, has been responsible for some peculiar incidents during the past month. One member, holding an important position on the floor of one of the Winnipeg dailies, was so overcome by the heat that he put on his hat and coat at 11 A. M., one-half hour before the paper was due to go to press, and beat it, under the impression that it was 4 P. M., and that the jig was up. Another member, who was booked for the very important position of best man at a wedding, was somewhat similarly affected. After the jig was up he hurried straight home (so he says) to change his attire for the glad rags suitable for such an auspicious occasion. However, when he got himself undressed all thought of the wedding had slipped his mind, and, acting through force of habit, he dropped into bed and went sound asleep. As we have it on the authority of the social service council that there are no intoxicating liquors sold in Winnipeg, it must be the intense sunrays acting on constitutions weakened by excessive toil that is responsible for these mental aberrations.

Sam Vivian, 65 years of age, is now in France with the labor battalion.

W. A. Reid, Tribune chapel, acting on the doctor's instructions, has decided to quit printing for a time.

George Poulton, Henderson's chapel, was chairman of the sports committee at the allied printing trades picnic at Grand Beach July 28, and is to be congratulated on the excellent program drawn up and the efficient manner in which all the events were handled. H. J. W. Powers was on the ticket committee and kept a vigilant eye to see that the union label appeared on all the printing this time.

It is consistently rumored around town that the Telegram will start publishing a morning edition in October. The Morning Telegram was one of the first casualties of the European war.

Mr. Kennedy has donated $75 of the mortuary benefit he received through the death of his son, F. R. Kennedy, who was killed in active service, to the newly-formed woman's auxiliary.

CHARLES RYAN.

JACKSON, MISS.

The constitutionality of the state printing law was upheld by the supreme court last month. It compels the offices in Memphis, Nashville and St. Louis to quit bidding on and doing state printing, either directly or through a sub-agency. The passage of the bill was brought about by organized labor, through the solicitation of votes by individual members of the printers' and pressmen's unions of this city, Meridian and Vicksburg, but J. W. Tucker was the real power behind the bill.

I reckon one-half the printers throughout the land do not know that there is a lockout in both offices of this city. Nineteen weeks have elapsed since that time, and the boys are still hopeful that they will win out. All but three of the locked out printers are working. Six or seven have departed for other jobs. Those having gone and their present locations are as follows: Frank M. Murray is in Pine Bluff, Ark., I think; Elmer H. Trussell is in Jackson, Tenn.; Jack B. Donahue, jr., from New Orleans, is in Baton Rouge, La.; Guy J. Moore is in Chillicothe, Ohio, his home; Oscar F. Brown, old secretary, is in Opelika, Ala.

Every member of this union was very sorry indeed to learn of the death of Charley Dement, which occurred in Macon, Ga., a few weeks ago. He was the quietest, most polite and unostentatious person I ever knew, and always solicitous of every one's happiness and welfare. He is the second of seven brothers to die inside of a few months, the other, Billy, having been found dead in the railroad yards at Tupelo, Miss., and it is supposed he fell off of a passenger train. Charley was one of the locked out men here.

Our ex-president, J. H. Walker, is in Memphis. Mr. Rigg has taken the position of foreman at the Issue office vacated by Mr. Walker. Mr. Rigg was also locked out.

Meade Campbell, former correspondent, is now in Sparta, Ill. (could not find it on the map), where he has taken charge of the mechanical end of the Plaindealer.

On account of the lockout there was no assessment made to send a delegate this year, but an election was held just the same. W. E. Liles was chosen delegate and Ruby A. Taylor, alternate. It will be considerable expense to make the trip, but either one or the other will probably be there. For ten years this small union has sent a delegate every year—ever since the Hot Springs convention.

J. E. Walker was the only arrival here the past month, and he has departed.

Alfred H. Lampe, of Denver years ago, was elected secretary-treasurer to succeed Oscar F. Brown. Mr. Lampe was also locked out.

FRANKLIN HEIMBACH.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Quite a feat was pulled off by the Star in publishing the names, number and addresses of those subject to the draft from both Kansas Cities and Jackson and Wyandotte counties. There were more than 50,000 names. The force, after working a double-header, came down Sunday morning and put in another eight hours. Some of the subs worked eight days that week.

A committee has been appointed to negotiate a new job scale, the present scale expiring in January, 1918.

Newspaper printers who are in the army will have secure their situations on their return.

A typographical picnic is scheduled for Labor day.

Arrangements have been made to entertain the convention special which passes through Friday, August 10, at 6 o'clock. Quite a bunch of Kansas City printers expect to attend the convention.

E. W. McGinnis, formerly of Indianapolis, has his slug on the Star slipboard.

State of trade, dull.

MISSOULA, MONT.

Missoula was given a realistic touch of the "wild and woolly" July 3, 4 and 5, when several hundred Indians from the Flathead reservation, cowboys and others "cut 'er loose" at the annual stampede with all the pomp of frontier days.

Unionists of Missoula opened their new $50,000 labor temple on June 6 with an elaborate dance.

President Zeh was a delegate to the state convention of Eagles at Havre July 6 to 9 from the local aerie. R. R. Marsh, foreman of the Great Falls Leader, and James Perkins, of the Tribune of that city, were stampede visitors here. Charles T. Hickey, who has completed his second year in the law department of the state university, is attending the summer session of that institution. James A. Power, poet, philosopher, traveler, celebrated the Fourth in Missoula. George A. Snook, of the Anaconda Standard, spent a fortnight the first of July on his ranch near Missoula. Charles M. Conley has fallen heir to a "sit" on the Missoulian. Fred W. Miller, C. A. Colby and George Withee, ardent disciples of Izaak Walton, are whipping the various mountain streams hereabouts for the speckled beauties. And they get 'em, too. T. E. Weaver, foreman of the Missoulian, and Floyd Bushnell, Sentinel operator, have recently bought homes. Harold E. High and family motored to Butte recently for a few days' visit. A. C. Shoemaker is a recent arrival and is taking care of the extra machine work about town.

The Northern Pacific railway is employing girls as engine wipers, shop helpers and freight truckers. Inability to secure men is given as the reason.

After being out five days eighteen telephone operators won union recognition and increased wages.

DENVER, COLO.

Arthur Floyd, traveling machinist-operator, stopped off in Denver a few days last month to visit his old-time friend, C. E. Barngrover, of the Smith-Brooks chapel. Mr. Floyd is an interesting character, having traveled extensively through Germany, Great Britain, France and Belgium on a motorcycle. His narrative of many trips across the ocean is interesting and unique. Mr. Floyd worked two years on the Paris News and spent one year in Honolulu. At present he is employed on the Laramie Boomerang. He thinks the Wyoming climate superior to any in the world as a tonic and nerve restorer.

Lionel Knill, 10-year-old son of A. P. ("Tony") Knill, of the News chapel, was accidentally shot and killed by his 12-year-old brother, Frederick, during the past month. The two boys were spending a few days with their grandmother, Mrs. Louise Bock, in this city. She wanted the two boys to go to town with her and told them to go upstairs to the bathroom and wash themselves. After finishing washing, Fred went into the front room to find a towel, and while searching through the dresser drawers ran across a .38-caliber revolver. Tiptoeing into the bathroom, he playfully told Lionel to throw up his hands and pulled the trigger. Lionel ran to the back stairs and fell down to the kitchen, where he died instantly. Mr. and Mrs. Knill and son Fred have the sympathy of the entire membership of No. 49.

Frank J. Pulver edited the Labor Bulletin for a couple of weeks the past month in the absence of Clint Houston, who was a member of the governor's party who went to Washington to try to secure one of the army cantonments for this city.

George A. Hoffman, president of El Paso Union No. 370, was a visitor in Denver the past month, renewing old acquaintances and enjoying Colorado ozone and sunshine. He says El Paso is a good town to work and live in, but after all, there is no place like Denver. Hoffman was at one time employed on the Denver Times.

The fifth annual "mountainick" of the employes and their families of the Carson-Harper Printing Company was held last month, the party going by special train to Pine Crest. It was a perfect day for an outing and the most enjoyable one yet held. One of the main events on the program was a ball game between the printers and pressmen. The score was 8 to 5 in favor of the typos, who were awarded a championship cup. Various other sports were pulled off, of which the composing room won its share. An orchestra and plenty of good eats were taken along, which added considerably to the pleasure of the day.

The case of Rufus P. Means versus Typographical Union No. 49 was heard before Judge Ira Rothgerber in the county court during the past month. Means is seeking to recover $259 and costs for wages lost during a period between his discharge and reinstatement while employed on the Denver Post several years ago. The judge instructed attorneys for Means and the union to submit briefs covering points of law in the case, withholding a decision in the meantime. It is not expected that an opinion will be rendered before the middle of September.

A committee of the employing book and job printers has submitted a counter-proposition to the one adopted by Typographical Union No. 49, providing for a new wage agreement beginning September 1. The employers have offered to raise the scale $2 per week, making it $28 instead of $26. The scale as adopted by the union calls for $30 per week. The employers also object to some of the other provisions of the proposed new contract. The book and job scale committee held a meeting and decided to stand pat on the wage increase as adopted by the union. A joint conference was held, but it was impossible to get past the clause relating to the scale of wages, as both sides refused to give in. The members of the scale committee from No. 49 contend they are justified in asking for the $30, inasmuch as it is only a 15 per cent increase, while living conditions have advanced 75 per cent or more during the past few years. The matter will come up before the next regular meeting of the union and it will be decided at that time what course to pursue.

The members of No. 49 who have enlisted for service up to date are as follows: T. A. Weed, marine corps; Fred D. Moore, apprentice, Colorado national guard; George Allen, motor car division, regular army; Homer B. Morrison, signal corps, Colorado national guard; Frank McCormack, artillery, regular army; Roy Bridgewater, infantry, Colorado national guard; Charles E. Schuyler, hospital corps, regular army; Charles F. Stewart, second regimental band, Colorado national guard, and B. A. Howard, cavalry, Colorado national guard.

FRED L. ZIMMERMAN.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

The Columbus Daily Monitor suspended publication with the July 5 issue, after an existence of about one year. The cause of suspension remains a mystery and was entirely unlooked for. About thirty members of our organization were thus thrown on the streets, and with the dull season now on printers from other cities would do well to give Columbus a wide berth. The following members of the Monitor chapel have left the city: O. C. Loughner, foreman of composing room, has returned to Cleveland; Charles J. Babb has gone to Chicago, Harry Woolpert to Cleveland, George Baxter and Ray Murphy to Cambridge, and A. N. Rice to Shelby, Ohio.

The job strike is still on and the struck shops are losing good contracts every day through the efforts of Secretary Bird and our strike and label committees. At present eight of our members are reporting on the strike roll. In their frantic efforts to secure linotype operators, the unfair shops of Columbus have instituted the "Columbus Linotype School" and are spending good money advertising in the city daily papers for "students." Upon investigation it is found they are willing to teach the prospective victims the intricacies of the machine and turn them out competent operators for a small sum per week. Upon receiving their "diplomas" at the end of six weeks the finished artist may remain in the employment of the "school" and thus receive back their tuition fee. Just as easy!

The Columbus Federation of Labor has declared in favor of a Labor day parade and demonstration this year. This is one day of the year that is Labor's own, and what better way of showing the dignity and strength of organized labor than by a good turnout in a parade? But let's make sure that it is to be a "labor" parade and not a "wet" demonstration, as has happened in former years. The Columbus Federation of Labor has recently been taking a referendum vote among the various affiliated crafts upon the proposition of building a labor temple. Organized labor should have its own home in every city, but it is hardly possible that the proposition will pass in Columbus at this time.

The recent revelations of the excessive exploitation of women in the bureau of engraving and printing at Washington, D. C., show clearly that organized labor should stand guard today as never before in order to retain the hard-fought-for benefits which have been won in the last fifty years. Already we hear of the "necessity of importing 500,000 Chinese coolies." There is a sufficient supply of all labor of all classes in this country to take care of the problem.

The label committee is urging greater activity among the members. Bring in the non-labeled matter—the committee will do the rest. Get busy!

George White, formerly of this city, but who is now foreman of the Miller & Broughton Printing Company, of Raleigh, N. C., was here renewing old acquaintances the early part of July. Blair Fricke returned to Raleigh with him.

Jesse Van Atta, of the Dispatch chapel, who is an ardent motorcycle fan, recently took a trip to Fort Benjamin Harrison, at Indianapolis, and return, a distance of about 360 miles. L. A. Henn also took a tour of about 800 miles in a "Henry," stopping at Chicago and other points.

Non-attendance is not one of the troubles of No. 5. The meetings are generally well attended every month, never less than 50 per cent of the membership being present.

The following members of No. 5 enlisted for service: Henry Miller, of the Pfeifer company; Walter Rosshirt, of the Dispatch; Arthur Schubert, of the Citizen; Clemens Framling, of the Federal Printing Company, and C. R. Lantz. Herman W. Maass, F. E. Gorselene and Charles Stout have filed their applications for the officers' reserve corps.

Cards received: Hugh McKee, Eston Plum. Cards issued: A. J. Horn, Alison Kettle, Thomas A. Kellison, Frank L. Still, Hugh McKee, Ralph Richardson, J. E. Goodwyn, John G. Knight, Harry Woolpert, E. W. Lepper ("Pi"), Charles J. Babb, Glenn Patterson, Ed A. Brown, Blair Fricke, George S. Baxter, Leo H. Gunther, O. C. Loughner, George McQuirk, Charles E. Walker, James Cummins, Eston Plum, Ray P. Murphy, A. N. Rice, Roy E. Campbell. CARLETON BERRY.

BOSTON, MASS.

At the June meeting, after the routine business had been concluded, E. J. Fernands, chairman of the election judges, made a full report, which showed also that President E. M. Martin, Vice-President Maurice A. Adler, Treasurer Malcolm A. Knock, Secretary John O. Battis and Assistant Secretary Thomas C. Stephenson had been reelected without opposition to fill those positions for the ensuing year. The remainder of the time was occupied for the most part in the reading of the officers' annual reports. Treasurer Malcolm A. Knock's report of the finances of the union, written in story form, was noted for its clearness of statement, impressive tone and accuracy. Secretary John O. Battis made his customary statement of the doings in the secretary's office, which was complete in every detail, and George J. Gray, chairman of the board of trustees, made a detailed and very interesting report covering every phase of the duties of the trustees. President Martin appointed Malcolm A. Knock, ex-President John J. O'Leary and Assistant Secretary Thomas C. Stephenson a committee to draw up resolutions on the death of ex-President Percy B. S. Thayer, which were read and by a rising vote endorsed by the union. President Frank T. Flynn and Secretary-Treasurer Oscar Miles, of Hartford Union, also G. A. Clintsman, delegate to Manchester, were in attendance at the meeting. Four members were initiated, the application of Samuel Sherman for admission to the Home was approved, and the pension application of Thomas Haslam was referred to a committee for final action.

It is said by the delegates and visitors I have met who attended the New England Typographical Union convention at Manchester that it was one of the most successful events of that organization. Fred T. Irwin and his committee, especially the woman members, I am told, deserve much credit for its social success. President Marsden G. Scott, International Representative Bert G. Brady, President Edward M. Martin and New England Representative Joseph J. Dallas, who attended the convention, all spoke in praise of the good work the New England Typographical Union is accomplishing. The masterly appeal before the convention of ex-President Edward A. Ryan in proposing North Adams for the next convention city was clever and logical and merited the success it received. William C. Trump, president of the New England Typographical Union 1913-1916, was by vote of the convention presented with a silver desk set suitably inscribed.

Wednesday, August 15, has been designated by the committee to arrange entertainments for the convention as Union Printers Home day. I wish I could be present to give voice to my opinions about the worth of this grand institution and the good it is doing, but I am pleased to know that a far abler person than myself will be present to do the subject justice—Malcolm A. Knock, treasurer of Boston Union and a member of the Home board of trustees, who has so ably filled that position for the last nine months, and is daily working conscientiously to further the good work.

I notice in the July number of THE JOURNAL that the Concord (N. H.) correspondent, E. B. McCauley, stated: "The employes of the Monitor have been given one day off each week to work in their gardens." I wish to commend the owners of the Concord Monitor for their kind act to their employes, and fondly hope that among the thousands of employers all over the country some of the Good Samaritans among them might do likewise.

The Boston printers' baseball team and their friends journeyed up to Manchester, N. H., the middle of July just to show them the kind of baseball that is played at the Union Printers' Baseball tournament every year. After twelve innings of the fastest kind of baseball, there was a mighty shout from the assembled throng, and Andy Rogers and his crew from Boston were beaten, by the score of 2 to 1. There wasn't an alibi to offer, as the umpire called each and every play right, and there were some mighty close ones, too. Just to show the boys that baseball was not their only pastime, the visitors were whisked over to the famous Beech House, at Lake Massabesic, and a genuine old-fashioned fish dinner, with all the trimmings, was enjoyed by everybody. After dinner the party retired to the dance hall, where they gamboled till midnight, when cars were taken back to the Queen City. A dutch supper was then served at the union rooms, where two soloists and a quartet kept the visitors in a happy frame of mind till the wee small hours of the morning. The following day the boys took the noon train home, and ever since have been voicing the praises of the hospitality of the members of No. 152, who sure were headliners as entertainers. In the near future we are going to try and return the compliment.

William Terrell, an apprentice employed on the Journal, joined the naval reserve the first part of June. George Mugford, of the Globe, enlisted as a yeoman in the naval reserve May 31 and is stationed at the Charlestown navy yard. Reuben H. Burrow, formerly of Fort Smith, Ark., joined the light artillery June 20. George W. Ryan, formerly chairman at George H. Ellis', has joined the Fifth regiment infantry. John J. McSweeney, of the state office, joined the United States navy June 1 as a first-class printer. James McDonald, of the state office, joined the Fourth regiment naval reserve engineers June 25. Edward F. Canavan, formerly of Lynn, enlisted as yeoman in the naval reserve June 20. Fred McNally, of the E. L. Grimes Company, enlisted as a yeoman in the naval reserve June 10 and is now awaiting orders. Harry Wheelock, monotype operator, Boston Post, enlisted the latter part of June in the regular army, heavy artillery. Elmer H. Trump, apprentice member on the American, enlisted in the naval reserve in April, and Arthur W. Trump enlisted in Company M, Eighth regiment, Massachusetts national guard, in May. Both are sons of William C. Trump, of the Globe.

Henry Abrahams, secretary of the cigar makers' union of Boston and a member of the Boston school committee, before the committee on liquor laws of the constitutional convention denied that drinking is a cause of industrial inefficiency. He said that his experience had shown him that the non-drinkers in the labor movement, the workmen who never touch liquor in any form, draw more sick benefits than do the drinkers—some of whom use alcohol to excess—and he wanted to go on record as saying that his study of sick and death benefits as shown in the organization of which he is a member had convinced him also that the drinkers as a class live longer than the non-drinkers; all of which has convinced him that there is a food value in alcohol. I think this is going strong.

William N. Osgood, who has transacted considerable legal business for No. 13, sent an open letter to the members of the Massachusetts constitutional convention upon the subject of "Direct Legislation, or the Initiative and Referendum," and espoused the cause of direct legislation, stating that: "Direct legislation does not subvert, supplant or destroy a representative form of government. It merely supplements it, extends its action, and tends to perfect it, realizing that no form of government is perfect."

Louis A. Wyman, president of the Wright & Potter Printing Company, who was connected with that concern for thirty years, died July 6, age 68 years. He was born in Lowell and was a graduate of Harvard, class of 1872; was a member of several benevolent and historical societies, including the Massachusetts Sons of the American Revolution. He was by instinct a gentleman and always made people feel at home in his presence, and was highly respected by all the employes of the Wright & Potter printing establishment, about sixty of whom attended his funeral. Mr. Wyman is survived by a widow, three sons—Louis E., a lawyer in Manchester, N. H.; Arthur F., of the firm of Wright & Potter; Harmon M.—and one daughter, Mrs. Charles E. Rolfe, of Lynn.

Warren A. Gregory, employed for many years at the University Press, and a member of Cambridge Union previous to its consolidation with Boston Union, died of kidney disease July 9. He was a highly-respected member of the chapel where he worked, and has been suffering for a long time.

The Wright & Potter Printing Company has again been awarded the contract for state printing for a term of years.

George Washington said: "I have always labored to keep alive within me that little spark of celestial fire called conscience." I think this is a good time to repeat that beautiful sentence, especially now that our country needs all the help that it is in our power to give. If we all obeyed the dictates of our conscience I know we would be giving to our country the best there is in us for the advancement of true democracy.

THOMAS C. STEPHENSON.

CLARKSBURG, W. VA.

With the able assistance of Max S. Hayes, No. 372 has succeeded in signing a three-year scale, which will ultimately prove to be the best in the state. The new agreement calls for a $2 increase all around for the first year and an additional dollar the second year, and another dollar for the day side beginning July 1, 1919. J. J. Jackson, chairman of the scale committee, along with the other members of the committee, did excellent work in getting the new scale signed.

The Telegram has installed a new model 8 linotype and expects to have a model 14 in operation by August 1.

Attendance at union meetings is not what it should be, and a movement is on foot to increase the local dues, with a rebate for attendance, thereby hoping to induce a few "strangers" to attend the meetings.

Walter Riddell is the new president of No. 372, and J. W. Walden the new secretary-treasurer.

James Barnes is working at the Exponent and Harry Fulton has deposited a Wheeling card and is working at the Telegram. SHERMAN T. JACOX.

FALL RIVER, MASS.

Representative Joseph J. Dallas was in town recently straightening out a grievance on L'Independent, the French daily.

Thomas Coyle, of Providence, has deposited a Woonsocket traveling card and is subbing on the Herald.

William M. McGrath, formerly of C. J. Leary & Sons, job printers, has taken out a traveling card.

Assistant Secretary Thomas C. Stephenson, of Boston, who has been trolleying through this section with Mrs. Stephenson, visited the local offices in town, where he was employed in the days of long ago.

At the July meeting Delegate Crowley made a lengthy report of the deliberations of the New England convention at Manchester, N. H., and from all accounts Fall River was well represented at the sessions.

Tommy Manning, linotype operator on the Globe, has taken unto himself a wife, and at the present time is wondering whether his good luck will stand by him in the draft and land him in the trenches somewhere in France.

A number of our job printers (both male and female) who were very steady in attending the meetings of the union a short time ago, when the job scale was under consideration, have either enlisted as Red Cross nurses or aviators, as they have not been seen at union headquarters since they received their increase.

Digitized by Google

Carl W. Spence, linotype operator on the Herald and well known as a member of the Azab Grotto band, with which he has made several tours throughout the country, is under the physician's care at his home in Manchester, N. H., suffering from an old complaint.

John F. Perkins, of this city, but recently employed on the Plymouth Journal, has cast his lot with Uncle Sam and joined the navy as a first-class printer and has been assigned to active duty. Other newspaper men who have joined the colors are Gilchrist and Reagan, of the News; Hart, of the Herald, and Louis Manning, of the Globe.

Work on the newspapers is very dull, which, combined with the high cost of paper, is cause for the three English-speaking dailies issuing the smallest edition in a number of years. Two of our best advertisers, Cherry & Webb and the Steiger company, which were completely burned out during our great fire a few years ago, have about completed their handsome buildings, and when they move into them we are looking for a goodly increase in our advertising. JOHN F. REAGAN.

OMAHA, NEB.

The New York Query club and the Chicago delegation, which will pass through Omaha on August 11, en route to the convention, will be entertained by No. 190 during a six-hour stopover here. The committee of arrangements and entertainment will be composed of all ex-delegates who are now members of this union. A perusal of the names of the committee, added to the fact that No. 190 has given them a free hand, is sufficient evidence that the entertainment will be a royal one.

"Johnny" Monroe, Leonard Lightell, Andrew Scott, all of the News; George Hirst, William Laughlin, George Shaw, from the Bee; and Ralph Yingling, Paul Hebert, Frank Laughlin, "Sed" Small, of the World-Herald, are among the members of No. 190 who have enlisted in the service of our Uncle Sam.

B. R. Utter, whom this union sent out to the Home and who died there recently, was buried in Oregon.

I am sorry to report that there is no improvement in the condition of U. G. Graham and W. L. Rice, who have been ill for several months.

W. H. Ingalls, an old-time member of No. 190, died July 1. Mr. Ingalls was in the sixties and had been in failing health for many months. The remains were interred in the printers' plot at Forest Lawn.

George Willard, foreman of the Daily News, spent a week in an auto trip to Kansas City, St. Joe and other points. Leonard Litell, who joined the navy, has been ordered to report for duty and left July 11 for Chicago. J. H. Martin, president of No. 190, left July 18 for a two weeks' auto trip to Lake Okoboji and Minnesota lakes. Bert Cox, of the News, returned July 9 from a fortnight's vacation, spent on his farm in South Dakota. Fred Lindell, of the Bee, is spending his vacation with his kin at Fairbury, Neb. John Munro, member of the "Dandy" Sixth Nebraska regiment, reported for duty on July 18. Night Foreman William Ellsworth, of the World-Herald, motored to Kansas City, St. Joe and other points south during his vacation. James Stewart, machinist on the Herald, returned from his vacation, spent in the Minnesota lake region, looking bronzed and hearty.

Vacations seem to be the order of the day among members of our craft here, and there are undoubtedly many off for a few weeks of whom we have not been apprised.

Cards deposited: E. D. Smith, James Davis, R. J. Milligan, M. A. Wells, L. E. Franz, Frank Smith, R. T. Brown, W. R. Murray. Cards withdrawn: W. M. Taylor, Carl Volke, Reese J. Thomas. D. L. STANTON.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Representative Bert Brady was with us on July 19 and 20. He gave our apprentice committee some good advice on how to facilitate the work, and was the speaker of the evening at our monthly get-together at the Hotel Volk. Mr. Brady made a fine impression upon the members of No. 47, and we sincerely trust he will pay us another visit in the near future.

The New Haven Trades Council has leased new quarters on Meadow street, where all future meetings of No. 47 will be held. The building is known as the Sagel building, and the hall is one of the finest in the city for meeting purposes.

Organized labor was represented at the state legislature this year by a member of No. 47 in the person of Frederick L. Neebe. He sure put over some good stuff for organized labor.

New Haven lost the New England Typographical Union convention by one vote, North Adams, Mass., being the choice.

At this writing three more members of No. 47 have enlisted in the service.

WILLIAM F. DALQUIST.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.

At the last regular meeting of Asheville Union No. 263 severeal matters of importance were discussed and acted upon. Among the other things to come up for action was an assessment of 5 cents per member for one month for the benefit of the North Carolina Children's Bureau. This motion was put to the house and carried by an almost unanimous majority.

Also at the last meeting the question of electing delegates to the North Carolina State Federation of Labor came up for action. W. B. Hudson, our secretary and foreman of the Asheville Times, and G. L. Hermann were elected. Mr. Hermann is a linotype operator for the Inland Press. The state federation of labor meets in August at Salisbury and there is always a large attendance.

The union also decided to keep all cards for members who are drafted under the conscription act, and this also speaks well for our union, as it has not as many members as some of the other locals.

H. W. Hogoboom is having the laugh on some of the anti-gardeners now, as he is getting from his own garden all the vegetables that he can comfortably eat.

W. L. Van Wagenen, our delegate to the convention, will leave for Colorado Springs about August 5. Mr. Van Wagenen will be accompanied by Rex U. Miller, elected as alternate.

William S. Thompson, of Miami, Fla., spent a few days here, but was called back to his home on account of sickness in his family.

Louis C. McKee, who learned his trade on the Citizen and received his card at the last meeting, has hit the trail for Los Angeles.

J. B. Habersham, of Atlanta, Ga., who spent a few days here recently, has returned to his home.

O. B. Sterrett, who recently drew his card and left for the wilds of eastern North Carolina, is back again and is at present machinist-operator on the Times.

E. W. Thoren, of Chicago, who spent several weeks here for the benefit of his health, was called back to his home on account of the death of his father.

The Asheville Labor Advocate is very much alive and growing. James F. Barrett, the editor, is a typo and has the best and most hearty wishes of not only the union men of the city, but the entire community.

Jake Stellings, who had been recently appointed to the second lieutenancy in Company B, cavalry, has received a new commission as first lieutenant.

BALTIMORE, MD.

Contracts for stationery, desks, etc., have been awarded by the city of Baltimore for use in the public schools to the Dulany-Vernay Company, Meyer & Thalheimer, Kohn & Pollock, all of whom conduct printing establishments in this city, and to the Natural Slate Blackboard Company. The contracts were very good financially.

An election for chairman and vice-chairman was held last month by the Sun chapel, and resulted in the election of Fred Thomas by a majority of fifty-three votes. W. J. Culver, who had no opposition, was elected vice-chairman by seventy-three votes. Auditors were appointed by Chairman Thomas to serve until November, consisting of Arthur Pembley, P. Warren Rinker and G. T. Millard.

Charles P. Volker and Parker Wampler were elected chairman and vice-chairman of the American-Star chapel in July.

On July 9 the printing concern of the Thomsen-Ellis Company was incorporated with a capital of $100,000. The company will take over the old firm of Thomsen-Bryan-Ellis Company. For some time this company has been operating large printing establishments in Baltimore and Washington. The incorporators and directors are to be: William E. Thomsen, president; Frank T. Ellis, vice-president and general manager, and James C. Woodward, treasurer. The Baltimore plant will be the headquarters of the new firm.

Sol H. Emanuel & Co. is the name of a new printing concern that has opened in Baltimore for the purpose of conducting a printing business. Mr. Emanuel is a practical man. One more union office for President Jackson.

The Allied Printing Trades Council of Baltimore has adopted a resolution asking the executive officers of the various organizations to appoint a committee of three members of each organization to attend a conference of employers in order that a tentative plan may be formulated to relieve the conditions that will develop as a result of the selective draft.

The Maryland state librarian has asked for bids for supplies, stationery, blank books and other materials of like character which may be needed for the court of appeals, state library, the executive department, and for the Maryland general assembly for the session of 1918. All bids must contain a clause stipulating that any stationery, blank books and other materials mentioned upon which the bid is based which shall be required over and above the quantity specifically designated in the contract shall be furnished by the contractor at the same rate charged for articles specifically mentioned, and if any supplies are required which are not mentioned in the contract, such supplies shall be furnished by the contractor at the lowest market rates.

Wesley E. Conklin, superintendent of the Sun-Evening Sun composing room, has made a very popular appointment of William E. Greenfield as chief reader in the proofroom of the Morning Sun. Mr. Greenfield has been reading proof in Baltimore for some years, and is considered by some as one of the best in Baltimore. He read proof in the government printing office before he came to Baltimore. Mr. Greenfield is vice-president of No. 12.

President Arthur L. Jackson has had a relapse of the typhoid fever, but the doctor has assured Mr. Jackson's friends that he will pull him through all right.

Printing affairs are very quiet in Baltimore at this writing, and will remain so until about September 20, when the fall rush will begin.

In the absence of President Jackson, Vice-President Greenfield is taking up all matters and correspondence connected with the union, and will remain in charge of the office until the return of Mr. Jackson. Those who desire to communicate with Mr. Jackson can do so by addressing him at 1940 West Lexington street, Baltimore, Md.

WALTER H. MULES.

AUGUSTA, ME.

All hands are employed, with trade conditions normal. Alton Ware has deposited his card from Waterville Union and accepted a situation on the Journal. The Journal was recently awarded the contract for state job work and ballots. Four new intertypes have been installed in town, one at W. H. Gannett's, Inc., and three at the Journal. Three of the Journal night operators are eligible for the draft.

The members of our local union note with pleasure the increased interest and membership of the Bangor and Lewiston locals—thanks to the efforts of J. J. Dallas.

NEW ENGLAND TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.

With five officers and forty-four of the forty-seven delegates elected in attendance, the Manchester convention proved that, no matter what city the convention is held in, the delegates and visitors are sure to be in attendance. The attendance of ex-delegates and visitors exceeded that of any other gathering. The convention was opened on Monday morning, June 25, by President Gilmore, of Manchester Union, who welcomed the delegates and visitors in behalf of the local union. Father Buckley, of the cathedral parish, offered prayer, after which Mayor Spaulding welcomed the convention in behalf of the city.

President Cahill, in declaring the convention open for business, referred to the report of the executive board for the fiscal year, which shows much progress to have been made. The unionizing of the Phelps Publishing Company, of Springfield; the signing of closed shop contracts with the Eagle and News publishing companies, of Pittsfield; the unionizing of the Westfield (Mass.) Daily Journal; the wonderful organization work accomplished in Lewiston, which takes in Lisbon Falls, Brunswick, Bath and Auburn; the work of Lynn Union in organizing Salem and Peabody; the signing up of the last non-union office in Marlboro; the successful organization work among the jobbers in Providence; the obligating of the last non-union printer in Danbury; the signing up of the New England Supply Company, of Bath, for the use of the union label; the Dennison Manufacturing Company, of Framingham, granting the eight-hour day; the organization work being done in Middletown, Hartford and Bristol; the placing of a charter in Keene, N. H.; the addition of Middletown, Keene, Greenfield and Northampton to the list of affiliated unions; the reduction of the hours of labor for both union and non-union printers in Concord; and the general improvement throughout the district are among the many matters touched upon in the report.

In compiling the summary for the year we find that twenty-six unions have gained 180 new members; fourteen remained stationary; and eleven report a decrease of thirty-four, making a net gain for the year of 146. Our membership at the close of the fiscal year 1916 was 4,513, and at the close of the present fiscal year it is 4,659. We have made a net gain in six years of 1,166; twenty-four unions increased their scales; seven received increases through the provision of scales previously negotiated, and four more received voluntary increases. We have had one newspaper suspension and four new papers started. One new union chartered, and four more affiliations, making fifty of the fifty-two unions now enrolled. The employment bureau had forty-three registrations during the year, eighty-nine direct calls, and filled sixty-seven situations. There were shipped from the secretary's office 1,987 pieces of regular correspondence, 912 monthly bulletin report blanks, 2,694 single wrappers of monthly bulletins, 3,244 pieces of advertising literature, 435 wrappers containing annual reports, fifty-two packages of label list booklets, 3,401 notices to applicants in the employment bureau, and 246 miscellaneous pieces, making a grand total of 12,971 pieces for the fiscal year.

Our total receipts for the year from per capita tax was $707.18, a gain over the last fiscal year of $60.70, while our expenditures amounted to $927.43, a decrease of $264.61 over those of a year ago. The balance at the end of the fiscal year was $62.47.

Monday morning's session was devoted to the appointment of committees, addresses by Representatives Brady and Dallas, President Martin, of Boston Union and the first president of the New England Typographical Union, Nate Newman, of New York, William C. Trump, and the general discussion among the delegates of matters that helped the various committees in formulating reports.

Secretary Murphy, in behalf of the organization, upon order of the Worcester convention, presented former President Trump with a handsome smoking set, suitably engraved.

The Tuesday morning session was devoted to listening to the reading of reports from local unions, the election of officers and the choosing of the next convention city.

International President Scott gave the members an interesting talk at the morning session, which was received with enthusiasm and was fully appreciated, as this was President Scott's first appearance at one of our conventions.

The contest for the next convention city proved to be a very close one, with North Adams winning over New Haven by a vote of 22 to 21.

The old board of officers was re-elected with the exception of a vice-president from Vermont. James G. H. Jary, of Barre, was elected to fill the office of fourth vice-president.

The Tuesday afternoon session was a real business session, as practically all committee reports were read and acted upon at this session.

The convention arose and was in silence for one minute out of respect for the late A. W. ("Booth") Thomson, who was in attendance at the Worcester convention last year. A special committee was appointed by President Cahill to draw up suitable resolutions on the death of Mr. Thomson, which were adopted.

Resolutions were also adopted urging President Wilson to insist upon legislation for slackers among our alien citizens; urging united efforts to be made to stamp out the mat evil; endorsing the adoption of clauses in scales calling for the Saturday half-holiday with pay during the summer months; urging local unions when adopting new scales to send copies immediately to the district secretary in order that they can be compiled and distributed if necessary to officials of locals in need of the information; urging publicity committees in each locality; also in favor of permanent scale committees.

To record the many suggestions adopted in the various committee reports it would be necessary to take up several pages in THE JOURNAL, so we will ask that our members in the district secure copies of the annual proceedings which have been distributed and read the various recommendations made by the several committees in their reports.

Just previous to the close of the convention Tuesday afternoon President Scott, in behalf of the delegates, presented Chairman Irwin, of the local entertainment committee, a $50 gold piece in appreciation of his services in making the entertainment part of the program one long to be remembered.

That a convention can be successfully carried out by any city has been demonstrated in Manchester. When the annual souvenir was dispensed with at the Worcester convention many regular convention attendants felt that the next convention city would have a hard time to finance the entertainment features which are expected of the convention city. Manchester felt it was handicapped, but set out to overcome this apparent obstacle. Each and every delegate and visitor to Manchester was highly elated at the fine line of entertainment provided, and the following note from Secretary Senter shows that the convention committee of Manchester Union was right on the job:

MANCHESTER, N. H., July 7, 1917.

DEAR MR. MURPHY—Convention bills are all settled and we have a substantial balance left in our treasury. We paid the bill for Odd Fellows' hall—$20—relieving the New England Typographical Union to that extent.

Everybody is smiling, happy and busy.

Fraternally, SENTER.

Representative Dallas has been doing organization work in the jurisdiction of Bangor, and as a result of his efforts the non-union printers on the Bangor Commercial were given two voluntary (?) increases of 50 cents each inside of four weeks. If these voluntary increases continue the publisher of the Commercial may feel it much easier to deal with a union than to continue his granting of continuous "hold-ups."

In another month the summer season will be over, and it is expected that the organization work contemplated by many of our locals will start the first week in September, so let every member who can possibly do so take an interest in the work of building up the organization. Ask the organization committee for the name and address of some nonmember and endeavor to bring his application into the union, and in this way we can reach that 5,000 mark in membership.

Wilfred ("Rube") Waddell, one of the best-known printers in the southwest, died July 4 at St. Joseph's hospital in Albuquerque, of meningitis and complications. Waddell had enlisted in Company I of the New Mexico national guard, and up to the time of entering the hospital was with the regiment at the mobilization camp east of town. He was given a military burial by his comrades of I company, many members of No. 304 attending.

Charley Shade has left again, this time for Flagstaff, Ariz., where he is performing on an intertype.

Work in this locality has been unusually good the past month, with subs correspondingly scarce.

Among the recent arrivals were Sam Greaves, J. Leroy Parker, Vernon Mayhall, J. W. Stivers and F. G. Geddes. Departures: W. R. Craft, W. R. Bergeman, Albert H. Moore, C. R. Shade, Sam Greaves, J. Leroy Parker, Elmer G. Ede, Vernon Mayhall, J. W. Stivers, F. G. Geddes.

FRANK H. LOWE.

TORONTO, ONT.

At a special meeting of No. 91 held June 29 the newspaper scale committee presented its final report, which was adopted in its entirety. The new scale provides an immediate increase of $4.50 per week, to run for two years, then an additional dollar, to run for three years longer, making in all a $5.50 increase for a five-year agreement. The elimination of the phalanx clause, a guarantee of $2 for being called back to perform work after the regular day's or night's work, and a scale for apprentices were some commendable features of the work of the committee, who, by unanimous consent, were tendered a hearty vote of thanks by the members. The job printers at this meeting were very conspicuous by their absence, owing probably to the fact that their scale has been settled for two years, and they didn't feel inclined to interest themselves in the newspaper printers' scale.

The July meeting was very poorly attended, about forty of the faithful showing up to transact the business of the organization. A visitor at the meeting was W. Shanley, of New York Union No. 6, who has enlisted with an American flying corps. Mr. Shanley addressed the members and commented upon the slim gathering, but said he was impressed by the businesslike way in which our meeting was conducted, and while we were small in numbers we made up in enthusiasm. As announced in the official monthly circular, that the question of an arbitration contract with the newspaper publishers would be disposed of at this session, a spirited debate followed the introduction of the motion, and after discussing it pro and con, the membership understanding that the contract would terminate previous to the next new wage scale, it was almost unanimously decided to sign the document which guarantees five years' industrial peace.

One noticeable feature of the newspaper scale, which is $26.50 for day work and $28.50 for night work, is the influx of printers to Toronto. The writer is in receipt of communications from printers across the line asking the state of trade and what the prospects are for locating here, and I might say for the benefit of these inquirers that at present there are more than sufficient printers to handle the work, and besides, the seasonable dulness is with us.

The substantial increase in wages augurs well for the financial prosperity of No. 91. The membership will receive yearly approximately $200,000 more in wages, and as one-half of 1 per cent of the earnings goes for local dues, the treasury will be burdened, or I should say inflated, with an extra thousand dollars a year.

The writer has more than once been impressed lately by the apparently unbusinesslike way, and, I think, illogical way of reasoning when new wage scales are being prepared and data collected to make out a reasonable and presentable case to the employer for an increased wage. We tell him how hard it is to make ends meet, and make comparisons with cities of corresponding size, the high and ever-increasing cost of living, etc., but never think of taking the initiative and setting the example by increasing to the proposed scale the wages of the only permanent servant of the organization—the secretary. I wish the readers to bear in mind that this is not an appeal to increase the secretary's salary, as I think the remuneration at present is sufficient, but the unreasonableness of the method is neither businesslike nor consistent. Example is better than precept.

Dan McDougall, in his report of the Ontario Provincial Conference of Typographical Unions, mentioned the fact that the delegates were honored with a trip through Carling's brewery in London, but Dan's characteristically conservative nature did not divulge the fact that there was any breach of the Ontario temperance act. One of the delegates, whose name it is not fair to mention, said: "If that is 2½ per cent, it is pretty good stuff." Another said: "Beer, beer, everywhere, but not a drop to drink." As we are not prepared to dispute this last statement, we'll let it go at that.

Clifford W. Adams, for four months resident at the Union Printers Home, died at that institution July 11. The body was brought to Toronto for burial.

In the past month Toronto has experienced a real strike, namely the Toronto street railway motormen and conductors, which at present is partially settled, after a complete tie-up of two and a half days, by agreeing to 6 cents an hour increase and accepting conciliation under the industrial disputes and investigation act. The sympathy of the public as well as of four Toronto papers was with the men, which no doubt hastened the termination of hostilities. "Wages Come First and Dividends Afterward," was the caption of one article in the Daily Star, which gave unstinted support to the side of the strikers. A great deal of credit is due Joe Gibbons, business agent of the union, and Secretary Robbins for the able manner and tactful resourcefulness in the conduct of the strike, as there were no street-corner gatherings nor a man to be seen in the railway uniform anywhere. In commenting on the conduct of the strike the Daily Star says that there is an erroneous notion that labor leaders generally spend their time in working up trouble, when exactly the contrary is the case. The "walking delegate," as he is called, is described as an agitator and a demagogue. He is anything but that. He is a diplomat. He acts as a wise foreign secretary or ambassador would do. He mediates between the two parties. He presents the case of the men as strongly as possible to the employer. He urges moderation on the men. Often he is in the unpopular position—often disagreeing with those whom he addresses, not seeking to please or flatter them. He is the very opposite of a demagogue. The press, at all events, is aware of the fact that labor leaders are a necessary evil, but some of the oldtimers could tell you of times when they assumed an entirely different attitude. But we are living in progressive times.

Robert Elliott, president, has been appointed a member of the laws committee, which convenes in Colorado Springs one week before the convention assembles.

By the time THE JOURNAL reaches its readers the Toronto delegation will be on its way to the convention, and the writer takes this opportunity to thank the members of No. 91 for selecting him as their representative. JACK WELSH.

WHEELING, W. VA.

After the usual routine of business had been transacted at last month's meeting of No. 79 President Sims continued his reading of the union's history, which he is compiling on an elaborate scale. In this reading he dealt exhaustively with the eight-hour strike, describing graphically, with data and figures, what had to be contended with during the vicissitudes of that period. Murmurs of applause greeted the reader when he made allusion to the loyalty displayed by the members in their financial contributions, lack of which would have spelled defeat for so worthy an object. Self-denial was evident everywhere among the members, and they bore their burden without the slightest murmur or grievance. The members of No. 79 are looking eagerly forward to the next meeting, when President Sims will resume his entertaining reading.

The following notice has been posted in the different chapels of No. 79:

Notice—All members of Typographical Union No. 79 are earnestly requested to see that their beneficiary for the mortuary fund of the International Typographical Union is named, and those wishing to change beneficiary will kindly see the secretary at once.

R. B. McLeish, linotype operator on the Register, accompanied by Mrs. McLeish, have just returned from an auto trip through New York state.

Albert F. Hermann, of the Register force, has left for a few weeks' vacation.

John Bierkortte, who for the past two years has been working in New York, has returned and is subbing on the News.

Elmer Butler, one of our young members, has just returned after a few months on the road. He states that he has gained eight pounds in weight, and he certainly had some experience working in the different printing plants.

William Lyle and Earl Emerick, two linotype operators on the Intelligencer, have resigned. Lyle is subbing on the Telegraph and Emerick is working on the Register.

Mr. Barr, linotype operator on the Akron Times, has been visiting friends in Wheeling.

Arrivals: Alison Kettle, John D. Doyle, Hugh McKee, M. M. Martin, A. J. Horn, Armour Johnston, Delbert O. Penn and G. M. Freeman. Departures: William Lyle, Hugh McKee, Harry J. Fulton, G. M. Freeman, E. M. Brast and A. J. Horn. E. D. CONNER.

NEW WESTMINSTER, B. C.

Rufus Sangster and his partner, Bill McDonald, job printers, have purchased the plant of the Pacific Canadian, which ceased publication some time ago.

The old Coquitlam Star, which went out of business at the beginning of the war, has been taken over by B. Stone Kennedy, a member of No. 632, and is now being published as the Coquitlam Times.

A resolution endorsing the action of the government regarding conscription was passed unanimously at the May meeting. The resolution was also laid before the trades and labor council by our delegates, but was turned down by that august body.

Bill Maiden, who was shot through the right side at Vimy Ridge, in a letter to Secretary Stoney says that he expects to be back in the trenches shortly, having recovered sufficiently from his wound to be sent to the training camp.

Fred Jackson, another old member of this union, and proprietor of the Jackson Printing Company, has also been heard from. He writes from "Within Sound of the Guns," where, owing to his "extreme youth," he has been sent to do his bit.

Jack Linn, who before enlisting was employed as an apprentice on the British Columbian staff, was killed in action on March 16 last.

Despite the wads of homely advice being handed out these times regarding the total abstinence from all luxuries, etc., and the stacks of literature spread around on "The Cost of High Living," one of our operators, in the person of Vice-President Wilson Burnett, has deliberately negotiated two new responsibilities, viz., a nice new automobile and a nice new baby girl simultaneously.

Roy McDonald, of the Columbian chapel, is now enjoying life at his summer home at Crescent Beach. H. S. WALSH.

MANCHESTER, N. H.

The New England district convention of 1917 is now a thing of the past, and it seems to be the unanimous opinion of those who attended that it was one of the most successful ever held in the district. The details of the business of the session will be found in Secretary Murphy's report. For the entertainment features it is sufficient to say that the program of the committee, which has already been outlined in this correspondence, was carried out without a hitch of any kind, and, judging from the many expressions of pleasure by the visitors, seems to have met with general approval. At the get-together "the night before" an entertainment was given which consisted of motion pictures showing process of the manufacture of cotton—which, by the way, is this city's largest industry—from the planting of the seed on the plantations of the south through the various processes of cultivation, marketing, shipping, manufacturing and even to the making into garments. This was followed by another film which showed various sidelights of the immense Amoskeag Corporation, consisting of views of the falls, children's playgrounds, athletic field, workmen's tenements, boarding houses, machine shop, foundries, power houses, etc. Then the woolen section of the company's plant was shown, starting with the great flocks of sheep on the ranches in the west and following the wool through its various stages of manufacture. Between the several sections of the picture Rainey's band rendered several fine selections, and a much-appreciated buffet lunch was served in an adjoining room. This latter feature was the work of the ladies' committee and deserved the unstinted praise which it received. Monday afternoon came the outing at the recreation grounds and the Uncanoonuc mountains. The feature most looked forward to at this part of the program was the ball game between "Joe" Dallas' colts and a team made up from players in the local union. After a few innings had been played—the score being suppressed out of friendship for "Joe"—the cars were taken for the trip to the mountain. To make amends for the disappointment at the result of the ball game, Andy Rogers and Charlie Lee promised to send up the "regular" team and show the local boys how the great national game should be played. They did so—but that is another story.

The outstanding feature of Tuesday's session was the arrival of President Scott, whose coming had been eagerly looked forward to by the delegates and visitors alike, and keen disappointment had been felt at his absence at the banquet Monday night, but he was delayed in Philadelphia and was unable to reach this city until Tuesday. He was warmly greeted on his arrival, however, and this city appreciates the honor of entertaining the International Typographical Union president on the occasion of his first visit to a New England convention. At 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon a reception was tendered to President Scott at the convention hall, and nearly the entire membership of the local union, as well as of the convention, availed themselves of the opportunity to meet the distinguished visitor.

Now just a word regarding that ball game between the Boston Printers' League team and the team representing the local union. The Boston team, twenty strong, arrived in the city just before noon, Wednesday the 18th, and a fine, husky-looking bunch they were, too. They were met by a representative of the local committee and taken to their hotel, and after dinner both teams repaired to Textile Field, where the slaughter of the local nine was expected to take place. In justice to the Boston players it must be said that the breaks were all in Manchester's favor.

After the game the visitors were the guests of the local union at Stowe's Beach House, where they were dined to their heart's content. The dinner was enlivened by music by a quartet composed of Charles Dority, Frank Synott, John Harvey and Nixon Carney, of the visiting team. Charles Dority also appeared as a soloist. G. Horace Ellison spoke in appreciation of the entertainment which the hosts had provided for them. Dancing at the lake resorts completed the entertainment of the evening.

It was a happy day for all, for the visitors because they were so well entertained; and for the locals, perhaps because they won the game, but certainly because they enjoyed the friendship as well as the rivalry of their Boston brothers.

The visiting aggregation was composed of G. Horace Ellison, Charles Dority, Frank Synott, John Harvey, Nixon Carney, Frank McGlew, Andrew Rogers, Frank Murphy, James H. McCarthy, Charles Lee, Arthur W. Cook, William Glass, Joseph O'Shaughnessy, Frank Kelly, David Block, Casper Lavine, Gustave Olianno, William Cunningham and Fred Langill.

After an unusually good spring and early summer business is letting up a little, although on the newspaper end everybody is at work and subs are at a premium. The calling out of the national guard will take several of the newspaper workers from this city.

Percy Labonte, who has been on the night side of the Union for some time, has severed his connection with that paper and is understood to have left the city.

FRED T. IRWIN.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The strike of the employes of the Washington and Suburban Electric Company began last March, and while a failure in one sense—that of recognition of the union—it has been the means of causing the company to increase the pay of its employes to nearly what was demanded by the organization, and, through an investigation by the senate, of exposing some very unsavory methods of the company which will evidently be used to their disadvantage ere long. President King, of the company, was shown up as an arch hypocrite who wept crocodile tears over the severance of pleasant relations between him and his employes, but whose conscience would not permit him to recognize such an organization as the Amalgamated Association of Street Railway Employes, which he thought he was big enough to disrupt.

Charles Garrels, expert on specification editing, who underwent a surgical operation in a local hospital recently, has resumed his official duties.

C. C. Curtis, who successfully operated a linotype machine plant here for some years, died recently at Richmond, where he had gone with his family for a vacation.

One of the neatest printing plants we have seen is that of Lewis Miller Thayer, housed in his own building, and with every equipment for doing good printing and for the convenience and comfort of his employes. Mr. Thayer continues on the active roll of Columbia Union, and his business of "small work exclusively" is done under strictly union conditions.

From his store of relics Charley Leeds has unearthed a picture of the three apprentices of the Carlisle (Pa.) Democrat in 1861, the trio being Billy Spottswood, Jimmy Sullivan and Charley Leeds.

The recent death of Charles A. Stillings, which occurred in New York, the remains being taken to Boston for interment, recalls his reign as public printer, which, though brief, was a lively one, as he certainly did stir things up in that time. Selected by President Roosevelt, it is supposed because of a desire to curb the activities of the trade unions, he started in by antagonizing them in every way, and when he found he had made a mistake backed down completely. He was a man of good abilities, as those who knew him well testify, and introduced some real reforms into the printing office, but he had had very little experience with human nature, and Roosevelt soon found that out and made a change in the public printership in short order.

Charles E. Holmes, Will A. Burchfield and Isaac Walter Sharpe have recently resigned from the printing office to accept more lucrative positions in other departments in a clerical capacity.

bership committee of Columbia Union, the position so long and acceptably filled by the late Bill Brockwell, and John B. Dickman is the chairman of the delegation to the central labor union.

William G. Spottswood, whose death occurred here on the 5th instant, served the last of his apprenticeship in the government printing office and was connected with the office for some years before being transferred to the war department, in which he made quite a reputation as an expert, being the author of the cipher code now used by the army. He was one of the most delightful of men, witty, amiable, courteous, and it was always a pleasure to meet him, for he retained his youth and good spirits and dispensed sunshine on all occasions. He was a native of Carlisle, Pa., and 70 years of age. He was a brother of J. M. A. Spottswood, for half a century a composing-room official in the government printing office, and his widow is a daughter of Thomas F. Maher, a pressroom foreman here for many years.

Charles ("Texas") O'Connell has been promoted from assistant foreman of the library branch to the estimating section, with an increase in compensation to $6.40 per day, and B. F. Harrison, of the proofroom, goes to the library job.

The "Lady from Montana," Miss Jeanette Rankin, started something in regard to the bureau of engraving and printing which convinced the treasury officials that the policy of Director Ralph of working his men and women all kinds of hours was not at all necessary, and that gentleman has somehow found that he can grant the employes of the bureau the Saturday half-holiday, leave of absence and other things they are entitled to. Considerable parade was made of an alleged protest made by some employes of the bureau against cutting out the overtime at a meeting held in the bureau. All the opposition to the short-hour day did not come from without the ranks of the labor organizations by any means, and a curb has to be put on the selfishness of a certain percentage at all times. Miss Rankin evidently is going to be of much practical force in the house, and will be heard from in many useful measures.

Charles A. Morgan, who suffered amputation of one of his legs after an illness of nearly two years, is able to be out with the aid of crutches.

Charles E. Young, with a record of over thirty years in the government printing office, has resigned to engage in the automobile business, with the sincere hope of everybody for his success. From compositor to night superintendent, in which position he served many years, he was the man for the job at all times, and there was never a fairer, juster or more efficient official.

Bert V. Wolfe, who gave up a position on the Post about four years ago to enter the insurance field, calls on Secretary Seibold regularly to meet his union obligations, and says his only regret is that he did not get away from the machine several years earlier.

Frank Munsey has sold the Washington Times to Arthur Brisbane, the change taking place about the middle of June. Under the new conditions the Times is a regular Hearst newspaper in appearance, with the black-type editorials, poster-type display, comic cartoons, etc., but it is issuing many more pages daily than under the former management, has added a noon edition, is claiming greatly increased circulation, and no doubt will prove of much benefit to labor conditions here, as the allied trades label appears at the head of the editorial page and it is devoting much space to labor matters.

Captain Eddie Nevils having joined the service, "Billy" Schinnerer has been promoted to the foremanship of the Congressional Record, just recognition of a very competent and popular employe, by the way, and reward of a good union man.

"I have heard of all kinds of luck," said the Oldtimer, "but this one rather takes the biscuit. You all know Blank, a charter member of the Thrift club. Well, Blank's wife presented him with twins, and of course in due time a perambulator was necessary for the proper exercising of this addition to Blank's family; so he inserts an ad in the paper and shortly was the proud possessor of a perfectly good second-hand twin baby carriage at a cost of little less than half what a new one would have set him back. And after those twins were large enough so that the vehicle was no longer necessary, one of his printer neighbors was in need of the same (twins also being added to his family), and Blank sold the baby carriage to his friend for an amount slightly in excess of what it cost him originally. Can you beat it—what?"

Tom Moore, who started in as a galley boy on the Washington Post, when that paper was issued from the building at the corner of Tenth and D streets, where Tom has now been doing business as an employing printer for a number of years, has two sons in the service, one a private and the other with a lieutenant's commission. Tom says he needed them both in his business badly, but is proud of their decision to serve their country.

Arthur L. Jackson, president of Baltimore Union, informs me that there are only two offices of any size in that city operating under non-union conditions, and one of those is on an eight-hour basis—truly a wonderful change from what Baltimore was a few years ago, and an example that should make Columbia Union take notice.

GEORGE M. RAMSEY.

PORTLAND, ME.

Congratulations to you, North Adams, and here's hoping that many throughout the district will begin right now to save the shekels that will make attendance at your 1918 convention possible. Let us all boost for North Adams, Mass., 1918.

A fire on the top floors of the Press building annex gave the plant a complete melting down on the evening of June 29. Through the courtesy of the Express-Advertiser, whose plant was placed at their disposal, the Daily Press was published from its workrooms for one week and its presses used for an additional week, while the Sunday Press was gotten out from the plant of the Argus, which office extended a like privilege for several weeks to the Express-Advertiser crew at the time of a disastrous fire in its plant fifteen years ago.

Richard Haskell, employed on the Argus for upward of twenty years, has joined the Press crew as head machinist. O. A. Tubbs, floorman on the Press, has accepted a position on the Argus. L. A. Colby has taken a job at the Lefavor-Lower Printing Company. Leo Boyle has enlisted in the new Milliken regiment, heavy artillery. "Hal" Little and Charlie Stewart, of the Express-Advertiser, left their jobs when the Second regiment mobilized on July 25.

The Express-Advertiser reduced its force two members on July 18, Philip G. Owen and Mrs Dorothea Gray being affected. It is hoped that the cut-down may be only temporary and that in the meantime they get a fair share from the older regulars according to union principles.

Miss Mary Louise Adams, substitute linotype operator on the Express-Advertiser, was married to William Albert Lord July 3 by Rev. John H. McLean.

Otto Grenquist, linotype operator on the Boston Journal, formerly of the Portland Press, is at Peaches Island convalescing from a recent operation for appendicitis.

Allen Cobb, with his family, enjoyed a delightful auto trip last month through the White Mountains, including the Crawford, Dixville and Franconia notches and to the summit of Mount Washington.

Did you read the Worcester correspondence in the July JOURNAL? If not, do so now. While we must all be sorry to lose the gifted writer from these columns, he surely has given us something to ponder over. It is almost unbelievable that there can be such utter lack of interest in matters so vital to our well being, individually and collectively. My brethren, think on these things.

APPLETON, WIS.

Erwin Hymen and Burt Martin have left for Indiana points and Henry Schimberg has located in the west.

This local has been carrying on a campaign for the use of the label on all work.

President C. B. Spicher recently underwent a successful operation for appendicitis.

Two new members were admitted at the last meeting and another had his rating changed from apprentice to journeyman.

The Post Publishing Company has granted the eight-hour day to its employes with the same pay as for nine hours.

Plans have been made to hold a dance soon at one of the resort spots on Lake Winnebago, the proceeds to be used to pay membership dues of those called to the colors. The union will remit all local dues to those called out. J. B. KENDALL.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

As reported at the last meeting, the appeal of Hugh I. McSkimming against Typographical Union No. 8 was sustained and the action of this union reversed. The International executive council ruled Mr. Sexton, the chairman, exceeded his authority and also ruled the power to increase or decrease the force is vested in the foreman and not the chairman.

A decision was reached by the arbitration board in the case of Hugh I. McSkimming, foreman of the Post-Dispatch, and Albert Sexton, discharged employe and former chairman. According to the decision the "preponderance of evidence was strongly in favor of McSkimming," and his action in discharging Sexton was approved. The board voted unanimously. The arbitration board consisted of Messrs. E. B. Lilly and Con P. Curran, for the publishers, and John P. Hannegan and T. Ed Albright for the union. From this decision an appeal was taken to the International board.

Members of the Globe-Democrat chapel have inaugurated a Red Cross contribution plan worthy of emulation. Besides other money donated, they obligate themselves to give 25 cents a week during the length of the war.

Work has been very brisk at the Wilson Linotype Company on account of the directory. In this connection we are glad to note that Miss Mollie Sullivan is at present proofreading under George Ortleb, foreman, after a long period of idleness, due to a reduction in the force at Woodward & Tiernan's.

This union has invested $5,000 in liberty loan bonds.

Dick Knight is now chairman at Woodward & Tiernan's and "Rube" Kendall chairman at the Star, succeeding Roy Gween.

Members at present on sick list: H. C. Haysler, J. M. Young, Joseph Schery, E. J. Kreppett, Adolph Peterson, Gerard Kimbrell, Miss Sadie Meekam, J. T. Leonard, Frank Freese, Omar Tweddle, J. E. Sallee and F. B. Belcher.

The following members are in the federal service who have notified Secretary Woods: Harry MacMellon, Charles Bahlinger, J. V. Silverberg, A. E. Melville, F. P. Short, Harry Falk, Ferd Busik, George E. Nordhaus, jr., Vincent De Warf, F. I. Mayes, E. J. Auber, Max Ungar, jr., A. N. Parker, John H. Biddle, James P. Curran, Richard T. Shotwell and Theodore Tonnellie.

Members drawing traveling cards from June 1 to July 19, 33; depositing cards, 34.

The Globe-Democrat will soon install a non-distribution system, starting with three casters, etc. Other late improvements will undoubtedly follow.

"Lefty" McAuliffe, a good friend of the printers, is recuperating at Joe Mount's on Black river in the Ozarks. His friends wish him well.

Johnny Geldbach, machinist on the Post-Dispatch, and sergeant-at-arms of No. 8, is certainly busy these days, and, like all machinists, needs a shower bath occasionally, but in taking one at the new building did so before finding out the pipes had not been cleaned before using. He was a sight.

One honorable withdrawal card was issued in June and one in July.

The following applications for admission to the Union Printers Home have been approved, and now only await a vacancy: John T. Leonard, F. B. Belcher and Herman Mulack.

Members of the Globe-Democrat (T. A. L.) baseball club some weeks ago staged a "mob the umpire and all-around fight" frame-up on their official umpire, George ("Honest") Nordhaus. To say he was thoroughly frightened puts it mildly. However, it culminated in the president, Wallace Cato, a delegate from St. Louis this year, presenting "Honest" George with a silver medal in appreciation of his services.

Tom Costello was a visitor on the Globe-Democrat a few weeks ago. He certainly looks well. The same Tom. WILLIAM BRADBURN.

EL CENTRO, CAL.

Edward L. De Jarnatt, foreman of the Calexico Chronicle, and well known in Cleveland, Ohio, and throughout the west, was drowned in the Alamo river, about a mile and a half north of the international line, on Sunday, July 1. Mr. De Jarnatt and his wife and 19-year-old daughter were wading in the stream near the bank, and it is thought that what they apparently mistook for solid bottom was in reality a shelving bank which had been undermined by a whirlpool. All three were suddenly precipitated into the water. The daughter succeeded in swimming to shore and rescued her mother, who had a narrow escape from drowning, but Mr. De Jarnatt was never seen alive again. The body was recovered two days later and interment took place in Evergreen cemetery, east of El Centro. Mr. De Jarnatt was an exceptionally skilful workman and was esteemed by all who knew him. He came of a well-known family of printers and was known all over the country, it being said that he had, at some time or other, worked in every city in the United States having a population of 55,000 or over. An especially sad feature of Mr. De Jarnatt's death was the fact that his brother Frank was en route to Chicago at the time of the accident, with his wife, who was in a precarious condition, and he could not be communicated with.

Another fatality in our ranks was that of F. N. Adams, of Los Angeles, who had been in the valley only a few days. While employed in the office of the Holtville Tribune, Mr. Adams was overcome by heat on the afternoon of July 11. He was rushed to a hospital and everything possible done for him, but he died a few hours later. His family resides in Los Angeles, and the body was shipped there for interment.

Recent arrivals are Harley ("Pica") Shafer, from Bisbee, and Theodore De Nyse, from Tucson. Recent departures are C. B. Endsley and Lou Atwater. G. A. McDonald.

LAKE CHARLES, LA.

During the last month C. A. Julian arrived here, and after putting in about two weeks joined the army. Jack Crawford left for Beaumont, while Hugh Williams, from Shreveport, was an arrival.

Though business has kept up here pretty well the past season, the supply has kept up with the demand.

The local Red Cross netted a neat little sum by a tag day about two weeks before the liberty loan. The apportionment for the liberty loan for this section was $400,000, but the sum raised was a round $1,000,000. The Red Cross apportionment was $10,000, while the amount subscribed was in the neighborhood of $12,000. Verily, Lake Charles should be on the way.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

The cry of distress sent out by me last month, like the first shot at Lexington, seems to have been "heard round the world," for letters in reply came from north, south, east and west; some readers did not even wait for the mail, but came in person, and the situation has been relieved for the time being. Thanks are due to those readers who thus came to our assistance.

A joy ride attendant on a fishing trip by the Anglers' club of the Springfield Union almost developed into a tragedy in early July, and were it not for the humorous side gloom would have accompanied the riders home. 'Twas thus: Seventeen of the members of the olub started out with three flivvers and a cycle car for a run to a near-by lake at 3 A. M. Fish was the primary object of the trip, of course, and as there was no liquid bait, sobriety perforce prevailed. Comment on the way culminated in a little side bet as to who would get the first fish. With the latter idea in mind "Cy" Dole, of said cycle car, in his anxiety to score early, endeavored to step from one boat to another. He failed, and one of his brother fishers insists that he caught sight of a fish and went in after it. As "Cy" can't swim and the water is several feet deep, the reflection was manifestly unjust. However, down went Dole headfirst and Walter Hanson did the hero act in quick time, grabbing the foot of the submarine fisherman and hauling him out. "Cy" swallowed more water than he thought there was in the world, and in the absence of the aforesaid liquid bait, rode home wet and uncomfortable.

And talking of sports, let it be said that the Republican baseball team having won the championship of the newspaper league—there are two teams in said league, by the way—journeyed to Holyoke early in July and tried conclusions with the Transcript team of that city. The visitors escaped with their lives after trimming their rivals 11 to 10 in a fifteen- or twenty-inning game, they were not sure which. Some of the "enemy" insisted on getting four strikes and then winked at the umpire, who it was claimed was subsidized. The spectators were hostile and a number of new balls are missing as the result of the game. The Republican team has an eye on a team said to represent the Worcester Telegram, and if that chapel cares to see its team eat crow and will get in touch with Manager George McAnanama the banquet can be arranged. This challenge goes out, incidentally, to any Boston newspaper team, and the Union Printers' League team would doubtless find an interesting game awaiting them any time they can stop off.

An interesting visitor to his old haunts during the past month was Charlie Specht, who, with a forty-eight-hour furlough from his ship down Boston way, dropped into the Republican office to see the boys. Charles was looking remarkably well, the sailor drill he had been undergoing having put him into condition. "That tired feeling" was conspicuous by its absence and the yarns he spun were typical of the salt sea. Our sailor had nothing but praise for the service; good food and plenty of it, but he seemed disappointed at the general confusion that seemed to prevail; he evidently expected to find every recruit a full-fledged tar from the start. Time will doubtless remedy these little defects. Since the last letter Homer Miller has joined his regiment, the engineers' reserve, and at the moment is at Salem, N. H.; Lincoln L. McAuley has taken the oath and is now in training for the navy at New York city. Mac joins as an apprentice to the medical branch. These and others that have preceded them constitute the honor roll of our local.

There is another roll, not of honor, in the archives of this local. It records the names of persons who have severed their connection with us by methods peculiar to their spineless jellyfish characters. They use the typographical union while they may and when they get into an "open" shop —that bane of our existence—decide that they have no further use for a card. The time will come however, when such harbors of refuge will not be open to them and their cases will be handled without gloves. Such a character is one H. E. Tillson, whom we roped in from a small shop in the vicinity where, as a journeyman, he was earning $12 a week. We granted him a card and found him a job at $20 a week; he could not stand so much money and drifted back into an open shop at less than the scale without permission. According to his own story, he is under contract to his present employer at less than $17 a week and "expects" great things in the near future. Remember the name, Tillson. You will in all probability find his name in the "applications for membership" columns of The Journal when his present employer gets tired of him.

Congratulations to North Adams on securing the next New England convention. Springfield has a paternal interest in No. 316, for it was really organized from here, a former secretary-treasurer of this local, Harvey A. Friese, being the organizer.

A. F. HARDWICK.

OTTAWA, ONT.

The July session of No. 102 was a semi-special, called for the ratification of the new job scale agreement, which President P. M. Draper and the executive committee have completed with the employing printers of Ottawa. The members expressed the thanks of the union to those responsible for the work involved. The agreement provides for a flat scale of $24 per week, with an overtime rate of time and one-half, and extends over the period from July 1, 1917, to July 1, 1919.

The local voted the sum of $10 toward the relief fund for William Radcliffe, of the Pittsburgh Printing Pressmen's Union No. 64, who has become afflicted with blindness.

The members of No. 102 are much pleased that their confrère, James B. Steacy, has been placed on the pension roll.

A recent letter from Frank J. Hartney, at the Home, gives good promise for an early return to the capital. He has nothing but praise for Superintendent Daley and the Home.

Charles St. Jacques, local delegate to the International convention, made the trip as a member of the club from "Big Six," New York.

Good reports were presented at the last meeting by President Draper from the Ontario Labor Educational Association; and by Messrs. Powell and Preece, from the Provisional Conference of Typographical Unions.

No meetings will be held until September except at the call of the president.

William O'Rourke, of the printing bureau, attended the provincial conference of the deafmutes at Belleville, Ont., and the international assembly at Hartford, Conn.

A. E. SHEPPARD.

DANBURY, CONN.

Conditions in the printing business, as well as in every other business in Danbury, are poor at present. The town depends on the hatting industry and the majority of the factories have been closed for several months because of a disagreement over the hatters' wage scale.

At the July meeting President George W. Andrews, delegate, gave an interesting report of the New England Typographical Union convention in Manchester. Mr. Andrews has been the Danbury delegate to the last five conventions of the New England Typographical Union and enthusiastically declared the Manchester convention was the best of all.

Charles F. Bushnell and William J. Curran have been appointed a committee to arrange a fitting celebration in November for the twentieth anniversary of No. 143. A banquet is planned, and it is hoped that Representative J. J. Dallas, Secretary J. F. Murphy, of the New England Typographical Union, and possibly other prominent typographical union officials may be able to be "among those present."

Members of the Danbury News chapel have subscribed for a number of liberty loan bonds, the office securing the bonds, the purchasers to pay for them in weekly instalments.

George W. Andrews has been elected delegate from No. 143 to the convention of the Connecticut Federation of Labor to be held in Danbury in September. A committee, consisting of President Andrews, E. B. Bushnell and William Granat, has been appointed to make arrangements for this union to be represented in the parade that will be held on Labor day in connection with the convention.

E. Blake Bushnell deposited a Berlin (N. H.) card and is subbing on the News. John Laird took a traveler and has been heard from in Bridgeport.

A number of Danbury printers have seriously taken up gardening this year. William L. Suydam, machinist-operator on the News, has one of the best-kept vegetable gardens in town, and is especially proud of his tomatoes. George W. Andrews has nearly two acres planted in potatoes and expects a large crop. A neighbor's cow got into his vegetable garden recently and cleaned up the beets, sweet corn, etc., before she was discovered, doing considerable damage.

Theodore Francis, employed on the Ridgefield Press, has enlisted in the regulars, and is now at Fort Slocum, N. Y.

YORK, PA.

A new weekly labor paper will be launched in York on Labor day. It will be published by J. E. Barker, of Birmingham, Ala., and will be printed at the Kyle Printing Company. It has received the endorsement of the York Federation of Trades Unions, and the first issue will be twenty-four pages, regular newspaper size. The associate editors are H. B. Gilbert, Jacob L. Senft and Philip P. Mann. As labor has been misrepresented in the past, no effort will be left undone with the launching of this new labor advocate to create and foster better and more friendly relations between all concerned. The policy of this publication will be a square deal to all. No misrepresenting of facts, but will at all times conscientiously print the news without fear or favor.

At our last meeting the matter of taking care of our members who are called to the front was considered, and action taken that we pay the dues of our members when enlisted in the federal service. The roll of honor at this time is Charles R. Husson, E. Ernest Bischoff, in the army, and Charles J. Borgel in the navy. Eight applications were also received for full membership and three for apprentice membership, besides four were obligated and seven elected. Our organization is in fine form, the largest in membership it ever was.

The supporters of the late defunct "Ripper" held their picnic on July 7 and 8 at Henry Lentz's cottage, along the Little Conewago, in the vicinity of Cold Springs park. It is needless to say all had a good time.

At this writing, July 18, plans have practically been completed for our open meeting to printers of York, Hanover and vicinity on Saturday, July 21, when York Union will make its big drive for a 100 per cent membership. John H. Ferguson, of Baltimore, president of the Baltimore and Maryland Federation of Labor, will be the principal speaker. Refreshments will be served and music rendered.

Among other improvements at the Gazette office is the addition of a monotype caster, to be used on that paper and job department. Other changes will be an eight-column paper 12½ ems wide, instead of 13, as heretofore. Harry Morris will quit operating and devote his entire time to caring for the new caster and battery of four Mergs.

Recent changes in this jurisdiction are as follows: Henry F. Stair, of Hanover, is manipulating the ivories on the Gazette; J. Earnest Paxton, of Lancaster, on the York Daily; Jacob Wagner on the caster at the Dispatch; Harry Wecker, of Kyle's, playing an engagement in Atlantic City for the summer, and Marcellus Becker, of the York Daily, has gone to the Maple Press.

MOOSE JAW, SASK.

To get the habit is the thing. It is to be hoped the boys will keep up the good record set at the July monthly meeting, when fifteen attended. The piece de resistance was the amendment to the by-laws raising the monthly dues $1.50 in addition to the International per capita tax and assessments, a rebate of $1 to be allowed each member attending the regular meetings. The proposition was finally left with a special committee to deal with.

Don B. Seibert, now of the Times staff, has handed me the following, which he wishes published in THE JOURNAL: Just a few words to give you a line on one of the busiest little burgs in the great northwest. I arrived here from Indianapolis, Ind., about three months ago and have been working at the Evening Times since. There has been a great deal of work and it has kept the four shops here going steadily. The news (the opposition paper) and the Times have been having some hot baseball games lately and up to the present Dame Fortune has been smiling with favor upon our aspiring ball tossers. So don't forget, if you are looking for action and a fine town to live in, Moose Jaw, Sask., is the place for you.

"Son" Austin is now officiating as foreman at the print emporium on First avenue, N. W. E. J. Young, of Brandon, is a new arrival in this "buckle of the wheat belt" and is tapping the keys at the Times.

HERBERT GRAY.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

If it were not possible for you to attend the International convention at Colorado Springs, either as delegate or visitor, why not visit Oklahoma City next January? And, even if you did attend the Colorado Springs convention, we implore that you share our hospitality, too. (We feel a little timid in offering the latter invitation because a second bone-dry trip within a year must be maddening.) If you haven't the money, or you are not chosen as delegate, sell your wife's piano—and come anyhow.

Without the verdure and serenity of the tropics, the summer temperatures of Oklahoma at times possess an equatorial intensity. The inspiration for the regular meetings of No. 283—for the heated season, at least—seems to have perspired—and expired. Affairs have been referred to the executive committee; so no meetings until October. That some diabolical miscreant sneaked the electric fans from the assembly rooms added much fuel to the fire.

That the federal government has been urging the farmers of America to increase production of foodstuffs, brings to mind an instance of some interest to the printing craft. Not long ago the Oklahoman announced that copy had been prepared by the government for reproduction in the Cherokee language to be presented later in pamphlet form to the farm membership of the Cherokee tribe of Indians. These were printed in a Cherokee printing office at Park Hill, Okla., which has the only Cherokee type in the country, and the only Cherokee printers who are able to produce such a publication.

The first ad-setting contest of the apprentice association was given during the month, the copy, for which was displayed in five inches, single-column. First prize was awarded Ernest Watkins, and second to Paul Reichert, both of whom are members of the Oklahoman-Times chapel.

Among many other little innovations introduced into the chapel of the Oklahoma News, since moving to the new building, include neat and practicable little tables for each operator, movable metal cart for each machine, and pieces of cleating nailed to the floor entirely around the base of each machine. The last-named contrivance prevents metal, mats, screws, beer checks and pennies from scurrying under the machine.

According to a revision in the by-laws of No. 283, the apprentice committee now consists of five members, made up as follows: One foreman, one proofreader, one operator, one adman and one job compositor, whose duty it is to attend to all matters affecting the apprentices. Another feature is added which will afford instruction in the technical phase of the craft. The apprentice association has chosen Delvin V. Markey to expound the curricula of typographic art.

It is with pleasure the writer acknowledges an introduction to the Misses Jo Coffin and Ann Hogan, of New York. These two most estimable women, we surmise, spend all their waking hours with propaganda for the trades union movement. Miss Jo is a former member of No. 283, but at present is a member of "Big Six" and represented that great organization at the annual convention of the Women's Trade Union League at Kansas City. Miss Hogan represented the Bookkeepers and Stenographers' Union of New York at the same convention. Miss Jo could not resist the temptation—after coming as far west as Kansas City—to skip over here and see her old friends, and we were mighty glad to see her. Both of you—come again, soon.

Gus Lundberg, affectionately known as "the big Swede," foreman of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, visited his friend, R. E. L. Brown, of the Oklahoman-Times, during the month, and gave the mechanical equipment of Oklahoma City offices the "once-over" while in the city.

Mont R. Powell, of No. 283, and State Labor Commissioner W. G. Ashton have been chosen to represent labor in the Oklahoma Council of Defense. Mont represents No. 283 at Colorado Springs, and will represent the Oklahoma City Trades and Labor Council at the McAlester convention of the state federation of labor. If a few of us common plugs could be elected a representative as successfully as Mont, we would run for the United States senate.

The Oklahoman-Times is busy with its campaign of raising $1,000 for an ice and milk fund for the impoverished babies of Oklahoma City. This is an annual event with the Oklahoma Publishing Company at this time of the year, and has met with much success.

Miss Helen Jules Wood, of San Antonio, Texas, the charming daughter of H. E. Wood, known to many printers of Oklahoma and Texas, was married July 10 to Hiram C. Powers, of Kansas City, Mo. This splendid young couple was married by Chief Justice Sharp, of the Oklahoma Supreme Court, in Oklahoma's magnificent new state capitol, one of the first marriages to be solemnized in the new state house.

Our plutocratic vacationists include W. J. Phillips, Oklahoman foreman, who reveled in the diversions of farm life; M. W. Tinney, who went fishing in Texas, and Don Hicks, who also went Texasward.

Some casualties: Early in July, Oliver Hendricks suffered a severe stroke of paralysis, and things looked about 50-50 for a time, but as a good man can't be kept down, Oliver is back in the adroom again, frisky as ever. Starr Brimm, of the Times proofroom, submitted to an operation for appendicitis at University hospital, and while hobbling a little with a cane, is safely ahead of the ordeal.

Charley Heacock and wife, of Austin, Texas, accompanied by Mrs. Heacock's sister, Miss Hillyer, came roaring into Oklahoma City in their six-cylinder touring car, en route to Chicago, where they will visit for a time. Charley is a former member here, but is now in the florist business in the Texas capital, and doing well.

Representative W. H. Gadd, of this city, was successful in the organization of a new local at Miami, Okla., in July, which gives Oklahoma the distinction of having the greatest number of subordinate unions of any state in the Missouri valley jurisdiction—twenty-two. Iowa is second with nineteen. Mr. Gadd has been very successful in the organization of new unions and in various trade adjustments.

Enlistments into the regular army of the United States include F. M. Kurk, whose home is in Anadarko, Okla. Kurk is well acquainted with printers over the state. He left July 19 for Fort Logan (Denver). C. C. Clayton, another member, offered his services as post or army printer, was accepted at the Oklahoma City station and sent to Fort Logan, but was later rejected at that post on account of heart trouble.

Carl Musgrove, of the Francis chapel, has departed for the east, later to join the Al G. Fields minstrels. This reminds the writer to state that the Fields attraction and the Neil O'Brien minstrels, both having played several engagements in this city last winter, staged their productions in the old auditorium rather than in any of the non-union theaters of the city.

Col. J. Fred Peske, one of the finest union veterans that ever lived, is back in this city after an absence of some three years in Dallas. He is again at his old post in the Francis chapel; and right glad we are to have him, too.

At this writing—July 16—the state of trade in Oklahoma City is not very brisk, neither hand or machine. Sort of hit us all at once.

Cards received: Len R. Crosley, O. B. Powell, H. S. Austin, R. D. Ford, Wendell Phillips, Stuart Curran, Harry Noble, F. L. Boyce, P. H. Morgan, A. B. Caldwell, J. Fred Peske, A. A. Meacham, C. P. Paullin, W. H. Cook, Ella I. Metcalf. Cards issued: J. Leroy Parker, Ed Sharpe, W. H. Brown, H. C. Lege, H. F. Skillen, H. S. Austin, A. A. Meacham, R. E. Wade, A. E. Blackwell, Marion Tyler, Wendell Phillips, Len R. Crosley.

THE BRANCH HOME.

Among the letters received by Tampa Union on its advocacy of the branch home proposition, the following should prove of interest to the membership:

Bradentown, Fla., June 24, 1917.

Charles Bardin, Tampa, Fla.:

Dear Sir,—I have been reading your articles in The Journal in regard to a branch home with much interest because I heartily approve of the idea.

I can speak from personal experience, having been a resident of the Home at Colorado Springs for over two years—and no one better knows the need of a branch than those like myself, who have been at the Home and had opportunity to see and know. I do not aim to reflect upon the management or policy of the Home, but upon the conditions which point to the necessity of the very thing you have been advocating. I know that the altitude and cold season is a great handicap to the Home in being an institution for the benefit of any member, because I have seen men come there who had been members a great many years and who had contributed their portion to the upkeep of the Home (so that if anything did "happen" they could derive the benefit) and then after being there a few days they find the altitude too high, consequently they have got to go back to their homes and either get well or die—without the assistance or medical attention and other treatment they were justly entitled to. Had there been a branch in a milder climate these worthy brothers could have been simply transferred to it and got their just dues, and there would have been no bitter disappointment or deep despair in the fact that circumstances for which they were in no way responsible denied them the precious chance—as well as throwing a large and useless expense upon their organization for the transportation to and from the Home. Just imagine how you would feel after having the fellow members "back home" dig up to give you the chance and then see it all a useless expenditure and your "chance" snatched from you because your misfortune had reduced you below the stage of climatic endurance? The affliction and the degree of it, or of your weakness, not being of your choice or making, why should you be penalized? Think that over!

I have seen the old residents of the Home in the main building hibernate and burrow themselves in September (like the prairie dogs that live near the Home) and never come out again until the following May, owing to the cold—unless occasionally they might have an unusually warm day. How nice it would be if these same men could enjoy themselves outdoors the year round! Don't you think it would add years to their lives?

I have experienced a great improvement since coming south to the influences of the sunshine and year-round outdoor life, and, God knows, I want to see my brother unionists get the very best chance they can.

As you pointed out in one of your articles, there is every favorable condition for a branch home in Florida to be very near self-sustaining, as something can be grown here every month in the year, and the fuel and clothing items are as small as one could expect this side the garden of Eden.

The Tampa boys are certainly pushing a good cause, and it is of greater importance to the general membership than many of you might realize. I wish you success in getting favorable action at the coming convention. Yours fraternally,

Harry P. Davies.

The reader will please remember that the Tampa local is simply asking for the appointment of a committee to look into this matter both from the standpoint of necessity and cost of same, and to investigate the offers and conditions and report for final disposition to the 1918 convention. Isn't that fair enough?

Charles Bardin.

MAILERS' DEPARTMENT

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

The Cleveland scale has been settled by the members of No. 12 receiving an increase of $3 a week, with an increase of $7 a week for foremen, with a guarantee of $2.50 for extra men, where heretofore they only received $2. A section added to the scale for apprentices gives them $12 for the third year, $14 for the fourth and $16 for the fifth year of their apprenticeship, and a reduction of the number of apprentices in each office, with back pay for everybody for about nine weeks, and a reduction of from ten to nine hours on Saturday nights. They have also added in their contract addressing, tying, operation of automatic mailing and inserting machines, and are given the preference in hand inserting, opening of pads and folding of wrappers, and also the directing of papers. This is one of the best contracts signed by any mailers' organization for many years, and the local committee of No. 12 is justly entitled to all the commendation that possibly could be given, as it certainly worked hard and faithfully for the organization, and it required very little assistance on my part to secure this adjustment. The scale of that organization is now $22.50 per week of six days or nights.

Toronto is sending a proposition to the National Board of Arbitration covering back pay for short-term men, as there has been a difference of opinion as to what their back pay amounted to under the new contract.

You were promised some cheerful news from Kansas City in one of my previous letters, and I take this occasion to say that all the members now employed on the Star and Times have been granted an increase of $4.17 a week, a six-day week, against eight shifts that they previously had. In fact, the Star and Times management is now meeting all the requirements of the new agreement, with the exception of a signed contract. The office, I understand, is about 95 per cent organized, and an effort will be made in a very short time to sign up the shop. The officers of No. 7 surely showed wisdom in their handling of this matter, and I know their efforts are appreciated by all of our members. There is no case that I can think of that caused more trouble and worry for the mailers than has the Kansas City situation, and now that somebody has found a way to adjust the matter it is my opinion they are entitled to considerable credit.

The war is affecting our organization considerably. We have just lost our Sacramento organization, which consisted of seven members, five having enlisted, thereby making the withdrawal of the charter necessary. The postal authorities have denied the privilege of the mails to the Appeal to Reason, and as all our members employed in Girard, Kan., work on that publication, at this writing it does not look any too bright for a continuation of that organization. Several newspapers have been denied the privilege of the mails in Chicago, Cleveland and New York, and many of our members have been thrown out of steady employment. The Day Book, of Chicago, going out of existence on account of the high cost of materials, hasn't helped matters any.

The proposed increase in rates of the second-class mail matter will be reported by the committee on finance recommending an increase of one-fourth of a cent per pound, which is about as good an adjustment as could be expected under the circumstances, and there is every reason to believe that both houses will pass the measure as recommended by the committee.

The members of the local bookbinders' organization in Indianapolis have taken it upon themselves to mail their international journal, doing stamping and everything else in connection with same. Our organization has protested the use of the label by the firm that is printing the official journal of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, and no doubt the label will be taken up unless conditions are changed and the work restored to our members.

CHARLES N. SMITH.

ATLANTA, GA.

We have no improvement to write about this month, but we will have something shortly.

Our funds would not permit of buying any liberty bonds, but several of our members came forward, so at least we are represented.

Cary Weaver, of the Constitution chapel, and R. P. Jones, apprentice at the Georgian chapel, have joined the navy. W. W. BARR.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

We had President Charles N. Smith with us for two or three weeks, assisting in getting a new contract signed with the Post. The contract calls for an increase of $1 per week for the first two years, making $19 per week; 20 cents additional the third year, making $19.20, and doing away with the six-hour day, making all jobs eight hours. Overtime will be time and a half, making it about 60 cents an hour, formerly 37½ cents. The apprentice was given a six-day week where before he had been working seven. The agreement carries back pay for six weeks, but there is a little trouble about the back pay for six-hour men.

The management of the Star-Times met a committee of mailers employed there and agreed to pay $19 per week, six days a week, giving the boys a day off each week, something they never had before; also an eight-hour day. So we think when President Smith returns to Kansas City he will have no trouble signing a contract with them.

E. Patrick, W. Morrison and Roy Sanders deposited travelers with the secretary.

CLYDE ADDISON.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

At our second meeting in June James J. Freel, president of the International Stereotypers and Electrotypers' Union, delivered a lecture on efficiency. This was the tenth lecture in connection with the efficiency course and concludes the series. Five were given by publishers and five by men prominent in the labor movement.

Negotiations with the Williams Printing Company have been brought to a successful conclusion. Six girls have been taken in and it is now a thoroughly organized shop. This is one of the largest printing establishments in the city, and the fact that they have recognized us will probably bring several others into the fold in the very near future.

The New York Herald has a new magazine feature depicting war scenes. As this will be inserted, it will give about ten men three days' work each week.

to Springfield, Ohio, as three of our members were employed there.

The recent mobilization order to the national guard called ten of our members to the colors.

The fourth annual outing and games of the insert department of the New York World was held on July 1. The winners of the athletic events received handsome prizes. The day was ideal and everybody had a good time.

CHARLES A. GALLAGHER.

TORONTO, ONT.

Toronto local sent two delegates to the Ontario Conference of Typographical Unions as usual. Printer delegates commended the spirit of this local in the interest taken by No. 5 in the work since the inception of the conference. London Typographical Union did everything that could be desired in the way of taking care of the delegates, and the committee in charge was composed of "live wires." The resolution introduced by the mailer delegates to request the executive council to take care of certain matters in connection with machinery now being introduced into the trade, and along the lines of a circular issued by President Smith, was carried unanimously. The executive officers, President Doughty, Vice-President Archer and Secretary-Treasurer Myland, were again elected by acclamation.

Our newspaper scale has been settled, but sometimes delays work out advantageously. It would have done so in our case.

Copies of New York Union's new constitution and by-laws, lately received, certainly cover everything in that jurisdiction and contain many valuable laws that could be used by other unions.

J. G. GALLAGHER.

THE SECRETARY'S LETTER.

Conditions in Chicago as regards work at the mailing business is practically at a standstill, and a number of our members are out of work as a consequence. Several of the large publications have suspended their issues, others have merged with rival publications, and some have been suppressed by the government. Taking all in all, our members suffer thereby. It would be well for members with traveling cards to leave Chicago out of their visiting places at the present time.

The following is the financial statement for June, 1917:

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES P. MCNICHOLS.

PORTLAND, ORE.

Work continues brisk, with subs all getting full time. Several additions to the forces on the afternoon papers have resulted in L. F. McNeelon securing an all-day instead of a half-day position on the Telegram, and A. C. Lundberg now covers a new half-day shift on the Journal.

George Henderson found life pretty monotonous in Salem and on changing his place of abode to this city had the good fortune to immediately find a situation open to him on a small daily here.

To the apprentice of the Journal belongs the credit of being the first to join the colors. Clyde Raymond is now a member of an ambulance corps

OFFICIAL MATTERS

THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL

ISSUED ON THE FIFTH OF EACH MONTH
AT ROOMS 640–650 NEWTON CLAYPOOL BUILDING
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

J. W. HAYS, Editor and Publisher.

Entered at the postoffice, Indianapolis, Ind., as second-class matter.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES—One dollar per annum to any part of the United States or Canada; foreign, $1.50 per annum; single copies, 10 cents each.

To insure prompt insertion, all official matter and communications should reach this office BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF THE MONTH PRECEDING PUBLICATION.

All letters and remittances should be addressed to the editor and publisher.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES AND CORRESPONDENTS.

Items for the official columns of THE JOURNAL should be prepared on a separate sheet, and the style of the paper followed as closely as possible. Such items should not be made a part of a letter dealing with other subjects, for if this is done the items are likely to be overlooked, even though the greatest care be exercised. Write as plainly as possible—especially proper names—using one side of the sheet only. All official matter must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. The observance of the foregoing will tend to insure what is desired by all—promptness and accuracy in the publication of official matter.

Communications for the correspondence department of THE JOURNAL must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. No communication will be published that does not bear the full name of the writer.

THE JOURNAL MAILING LIST.

When a member requests a change in his JOURNAL address, he should give the name and number of the union with which he is affiliated, together with his present and former address.

Additions, corrections or alterations reported by local secretaries should be kept separate from other correspondence. When a member deposits his card, and his name is reported for the subscription list, the secretary should state where the member previously received THE JOURNAL, and give the name and number of the union with which he was affiliated. When a member draws his card, is suspended or expelled, or in any manner ceases to be an active member of the local, the secretary should request that his name be dropped from the mailing list.

A large number of those who take cards and remove to unorganized towns fail to renew their cards. To prevent loss in such instances, it has been decided that members holding cards, and located outside of the jurisdiction of a local union, must either deposit their cards with the nearest union and pay dues each month, or pay International dues in advance, in order to get THE JOURNAL. Where a cardholder pays his dues to the local in advance, a specific report should be made by the secretary upon the case, in order that the name can be placed on the list and the magazine sent to the member for the time for which dues have been paid.

The 20th of each month is the latest date upon which changes for the succeeding issue can be made on our mailing list.

Upon request, secretaries will be furnished with a copy of a list of their members to whom THE JOURNAL is being sent.

All correspondence regarding THE JOURNAL should be addressed to J. W. Hays, Newton Claypool building, Indianapolis, Ind.

DELINQUENT UNIONS.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., July 26, 1917.

Section 1, article ix, of the constitution, requires that "International dues for each month shall be collected by subordinate unions and transferred to the secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union before the twentieth of the succeeding month." Under this law June per capita and June old age pension and mortuary assessments of all unions were due at headquarters not later than July 20. The following unions were delinquent for per capita, or the old age pension or mortuary assessments July 26, having failed to make their returns.

In this connection attention is directed to section 16, article v, of the by-laws, as follows:

"Section 16. No mortuary benefit claim shall be allowed unless the deceased was possessed of a current working card at the time of his death, nor shall a mortuary benefit claim be allowed if, at the time of death, the union of which deceased was a member was in arrears for per capita tax to the International Union."

MY DAD.

(Dedicated to fathers in general and my father in particular.)

My dad is one of the old-time men,
Reckon you've met 'em now and again.
Tall, straight as a hickory, slender as a reed,
And a man, by cricky, in word and deed.
Dad never was much for fortune and fame,
But he's a winner, by heck, in Life's old game;
Always hustling for seven or eight,
Yet never a murmur or a word at the fate
That made him the head of a family of ten;
For dad is one of the old-time men.

Yes, dad is one of the old-time men;
A fighter, too, but that was when
The Yankees got gay and the south said "come,"
And he marched to the music of fife and drum.
But when I was a lad in the dear old days,
The memory of which seems but a haze,
He was one of the mild and humble kind,
With a tender heart and an open mind;
Always a listener to the tales of woe
Of the men who lived in the long ago.

Always one of the old-time men,
And not a hero of tongue or pen,
Dad, when he reaches the realms above,
Will leave behind a story of love
For his old-time friends, and enemies, too,
That will tell of a man who was all true blue.
With a heart full of courage and a hope that is strong
Dad will have no fear when he joins the great throng
To stand before God in his judgment of them,
For dad is one of the old-time men.

The Linotype Knife Block

To obtain maximum efficiency from Multiple Magazine Linotypes the Knife Block must be extremely FLEXIBLE, ADJUSTABLE and ACCURATE.

The Linotype Universal Knife Block possesses all these essentials, and more.

One movement of the handle sets the Knives for any body within the range of the machine.

An independent adjustment for each body size—for example, the slug may be trimmed close for 6-point and full for 8-point—without using the micrometer.

The knives cannot slip—they are firmly locked in any position—insuring extreme accuracy.

After the knives are set, handle is swung out of the way, as shown.

The Universal Knife Block may be applied to any outstanding Linotype.

THE COLORADO SPRINGS CONVENTION

On Monday morning, August 13, the sixty-third convention of the International Typographical Union was called to order in the Temple theater, Colorado Springs, Colo., by Chairman William I. Reilly, of the local convention committee. After an invocation by the Rev. Frank Staff, addresses were delivered by President J. E. Cheely, of Typographical Union No. 82; Mayor Charles E. Thomas, Judge Samuel J. Kinsley, D. S. Gilmore and President Scott. During the intermission between the speeches an orchestra rendered selections of popular airs. One of the features of the musical program was the singing of George Hemus, a member of No. 82, with Mrs. Hemus the accompanist on the piano. A song written by D. S. Gilmore, of No. 82, entitled "The Union Printers Home," was sung by the entire audience.

When the various addresses of welcome and the replies thereto were finished, Secretary-Treasurer Hays read the list of delegates, which, together with the late arrivals who deposited credentials after the opening session, numbered 224 in all. A reading clerk, assistant secretary, messenger and sergeant-at-arms were appointed to serve during the sessions.

President Scott announced the personnel of the various committees, and objection was made to the appointment of a committee on appeals. After an extended discussion, the chair was authorized to appoint the committee on a viva voce vote.

MONDAY AFTERNOON.

Contrary to the usual custom, a session was held on Monday afternoon, when a partial report of the committee on credentials was received. The report of the committee on laws was taken up, after messages had been read from various persons and organizations and a communication delivered by Vice-President Brophy, of the pressmen's union, written by President George L. Labor and Pro-Germanism.

Pro-Germanism in its most subtle form is to be combated through an organization formed last month in New York, to be known as the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy. The following is its declaration of principles:

> It is the sense of this conference that it is the duty of all the people of the United States, without regard to class, nationality, politics or religion, faithfully and loyally to support the government of the United States in carrying the present war for justice, freedom and democracy to a triumphant conclusion, and we pledge ourselves to every honorable effort for the accomplishment of that purpose.

One does not need to have a particularly keen perception to recognize the fact that forces of disloyalty are actively at work in practically every community. THE JOURNAL is in daily receipt of literature sponsored by organizations that have high-sounding titles and by lying and trickery seek to divide the allegiance of the people, and especially those affiliated with union labor. These bodies almost invariably "play up" the word "peace" in their treasonable propaganda, but when the grain is sifted from the chaff it is readily seen that it is simply anti-Americanism in its most cunning form.

The American Alliance for Labor and Democracy was organized by the chief officials of the American Federation of Labor and others prominent in the labor movement of the United States, and it is its purpose to voice the doctrines of the labor conference held in Washington on March 12, 1917. This conference was made up of national and international union officers, and the purposes and position of the labor movement in the war and making clear the demands of democracy were forcibly set forth at that time. The avowed purpose of the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy is to "more completely Americanize the labor movement," although there has been plenty of evidence that members of organized labor in the main are loyal to the core. But so-called "councils" of various kinds are striving vigorously to undermine America and America's cause, and it is to offset these treasonable movements that the new organization was launched.

The Convention's War Resolutions.

The following resolutions, pledging support to the president of the United States in the present world war, and urging on local unions the necessity of sustaining any of their members called to the service, that they may retain their good standing in the organization, were adopted at the Colorado Springs convention:

Whereas, The United States and Canada have entered the world war on the side of democracy as against autocracy and militarism, and have pledged all their resources of manhood and wealth to the prosecution of the conflict to the end that ultimate victory shall bring to the world and all its people the full and free enjoyment and advantages of man's true birthright, that of self-government, and the undisputed exercise of the right to associate himself freely with his fellows in the achievement of all good purposes under that birthright, denying to none the privileges and immunities he claims for himself; and,

Whereas, If organized labor pretends to claim a seat at the council table when negotiations for readjustment of political and economic relations are considered, and agreements between nations are again established, it must be ready to assume its full share of responsibility for proceedings that will lead to and make possible the assembling of that council; and,

Whereas, Many members of the International Typographical Union already have joined the colors, volunteering for service under the flags of their countries, and many more will be called upon to serve under the selective draft; and,

Whereas, This condition must have a disturbing effect on the orderly progress of the affairs of the printing and publishing industry, and throw an unusual burden on the membership of the International Typographical Union, in the maintenance of its relation with the employing printers and publishers, and in the management of its own affairs; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the International Typographical Union pledges its unswerving support to the president of the United States in his efforts to maintain the dignity and preserve the honor of the United States in all its relations with the world, and to secure the safety of all its citizens at home and abroad in the peaceful pursuit of their lawful business, and to insist upon the careful observance of all obligations and requirements of treaties and agreements solemnly entered into covering the rights of American citizens wherever they may be found; and, be it further

Resolved, That this convention urgently directs attention of local unions to the necessity of sustaining such of their members as may be called upon to take up arms in defense of their country and its flag in good standing throughout the period for which they may be required to serve, that they may lose none of their rights and benefits as members of the International Typographical Union while they are discharging their high duty to their country and to mankind; and, be it further

Resolved, That we commend the action of the executive council in taking steps to enter into arrangements with the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and the Closed Shop Division of the United Typothetæ and Franklin Clubs of America to protect the rights of such members as are called out in their employment, to the end that when they are discharged from serving with the colors they may return to their situations in full enjoyment of all their rights.

Employing Printers' Convention.

The thirty-first annual convention of the United Typothetæ and Franklin Clubs of America, which will be held in Chicago, September 17, 18 and 19, is to be a strictly business convention, it is announced by the officers in charge. The program and publicity committee has announced that it will maintain a bureau of information and entertainment "that will serve the membership in the way of furnishing desired information on any subject in relation to convention matters or a visit to the convention." A well-balanced, comprehensive program has been arranged for the three days' session. A reading of it will convince any one that entertainment features have been largely eliminated. Serious business will be considered instead.

AMENDMENTS TO THE LAWS.

Herewith appear the proposed amendments to the constitution, favorably acted upon by the convention, which will be submitted to the referendum on Wednesday, October 17, 1917. They are followed by changes in the by-laws and general laws. Words in small caps indicate substitution or addition, and those in brackets, elimination.

Constitution.

FIRST PROPOSITION—Amend section 1, article ix, constitution, to read:

ARTICLE IX—REVENUE AND FUNDS.

Section 1. The revenue of the International Typographical Union shall be derived as follows: From dues, which shall be 45 cents per month per member; an additional one-half of 1 per cent assessment on earnings of members for old age pension fund, and an additional one-half of 1 per cent assessment on earnings of members for the mortuary benefit fund; PROVIDED, THAT NOT LESS THAN 30 CENTS EACH PER MONTH SHALL BE COLLECTED FOR THE OLD AGE PENSION AND MORTUARY FUNDS; from charters for subordinate unions; from necessary supplies at prices to be fixed by law. International dues AND ASSESSMENTS for each month shall be collected by subordinate unions, and shall be transmitted to the secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union before the twentieth of the succeeding month. Unions failing to comply with this provision shall be considered delinquent and debarred from benefits: Provided, That unions located so far from headquarters as to make it impossible for their dues to reach there within the prescribed time shall not be considered delinquent if their remittances bear postmark date prior to the fifteenth of the succeeding month.

SECOND PROPOSITION—Amend section 1, article viii, constitution, to read:

Section 1. The salary of the president, vice-presidents and secretary-treasurer, in full for the services rendered by each of said officers during the term of office, shall be the sums following: For the president, for services rendered as president of the International Typographical Union and as president of the board of trustees of the Union Printers Home, $4,000 PER ANNUM FROM JANUARY 1, 1918, TO DECEMBER 31, 1918; $4,500 PER ANNUM FROM JANUARY 1, 1919, TO DECEMBER 31, 1919; $5,000 PER ANNUM THEREAFTER. First vice-president, $150 and traveling expenses to and from the conventions of the International Typographical Union; second vice-president, $500 per annum; mailer vice-president, $300 per annum; and secretary-treasurer, for services rendered as secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union and as secretary-treasurer of the board of trustees of the Union Printers Home, $4,000 PER ANNUM FROM JANUARY 1, 1918, TO DECEMBER 31, 1918; $4,500 PER ANNUM FROM JANUARY 1, 1919, TO DECEMBER 31, 1919; $5,000 PER ANNUM THEREAFTER.

THIRD PROPOSITION—Amend section 3, article xvii, constitution, to read:

Section 3. Whenever ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY subordinate unions shall petition the executive council for the submission of any proposition or amendment, the endorsements of such petition having been secured within three months, the proposition or amendment shall be submitted to the membership within three months of the receipt of the required number of petitions, and the vote taken and canvassed in the same manner as amendments and propositions referred to the membership by the convention of the International Typographical Union. PROPOSITIONS SUBMITTED TO SUBORDINATE UNIONS FOR ENDORSEMENT OR TO THE MEMBERSHIP FOR ADOPTION AS HEREIN PROVIDED, MUST BE DRAFTED IN PROPER FORM AND SHALL INCLUDE ALL SECTIONS OR ARTICLES AMENDED OR REPEALED BY SUCH PROPOSITION. LAWS OR PARTS OF LAWS TO BE REPEALED SHALL BE PLACED IN BRACKETS, AND AMENDMENTS TO EXISTING LAWS AND NEW LAWS SHALL BE PRINTED IN BOLD-FACE TYPE: Provided, The executive council may submit to referendum vote propositions which require immediate action without petition of [one hundred] local unions. All such propositions and amendments shall be published to the craft a reasonable time before the vote thereon.

FOURTH PROPOSITION—To protect the membership of members in war service.

PLAN A.—Shall the question of paying the International per capita tax of 50 cents per month and the old age pension and mortuary assessments of 30 cents each per month for members in war service be referred to subordinate unions with power to act?

PLAN B.—Shall an assessment of 10 cents per member per month be levied to provide a fund from which subordinate unions shall be reimbursed for international per capita tax and old age pension and mortuary assessments paid by subordinate unions for members in war service? This assessment to be effective January 1, 1918, and to continue in effect during the war and until peace is declared by the governments under which this union has jurisdiction. Any surplus remaining undisbursed in such fund to be deposited to the credit of the old age pension fund.

By-Laws.

Amend section 6, article v, by-laws, to read:

Section 6. Any member of the International Typographical Union who has reached the age of 60 years, and who has been in good standing for a period of twenty years [including and antedating the enactment of the pension law, or any member who has reached the age of 70 years, and who has been in continuous good standing for a period of ten years], and who finds it impossible to secure sustaining employment, or any member having a continuous membership of twenty years who, by reason of his affliction, is totally incapacitated for work, and whose application for admission to the Union Printers Home has been rejected by the trustees thereof, may receive the sum of $5 per week, subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth.

Strike out section 14, article v, by-laws, which reads:

Section 14. Any member of the International Typographical Union in good standing at time of enlisting in the regular or volunteer army or navy of the United States during the Spanish-American war shall be considered as having been a continuous contributing member during such enlistment, providing he re-established membership as soon as possible after his discharge from said war.

Amend section 1, article vii, by-laws, to read:

Section 1. THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL shall be published once a month and shall contain, in addition to the reports and other matter required by law to be published, the reports of the International and Home audits; official orders, charters granted, charters suspended, and the causes; a list of names and addresses of corresponding or financial secretaries of subordinate unions; A LIST OF DECEASED MEMBERS WITH REGISTER NUMBERS; state of trade; advertisements meeting the approval of the executive council; all reports (including detailed statement of expenditures) and proceedings of the officers and members of the corporation of the Union Printers Home; and such other matters as may be of interest and importance to the craft generally.

General Laws.

Amend section 52, general laws, to read:

Section 52. Subordinate unions shall collect, in addition to the local initiation fee, a registration fee from each initiate, as follows: LESS THAN 25 YEARS AT NEXT BIRTHDAY, $3; MORE THAN 25 YEARS AND LESS THAN 35 YEARS AT NEXT BIRTHDAY, $5; MORE THAN 35 YEARS AND LESS THAN 45 YEARS AT NEXT BIRTHDAY, $10; 45 YEARS AND OVER, $20; which shall be transmitted to the International Union with the name of the initiate. The secretary-treasurer shall apportion the receipts from registration fees as follows: One-third to the old age pension fund, one-third to the mortuary fund, and one-third to the general fund.

Amend section 66, general laws, to read:

Section 66. Members of subordinate unions shall stand suspended when four months in arrears for local or International dues or assessments. Suspended members shall have no standing in the organization and shall be entitled to no benefits. For reinstating suspended members the local union shall collect such local and International Typographical Union dues and assessments as were due at the time of suspension, together with such International per capita tax and assessments as would have accrued to the time of reinstatement. In addition to this there shall be collected a reinstatement fee of not less than $5. Two dollars of each reinstatement fee, together with all other dues and assessments due the International collected by subordinate unions, shall be transferred to the secretary-treasurer of the International Union and accrue to the International funds: PROVIDED, THAT WHERE A SUSPENDED MEMBER WORKS AT THE PRINTING BUSINESS OR IS GUILTY OF CONDUCT UNBECOMING A UNION MAN DURING THE PERIOD OF HIS SUSPENSION, HE MUST MAKE APPLICATION FOR NEW MEMBERSHIP. It shall be the duty of subordinate unions, on request of a member who is sick or disabled, and who shows that he is in destitute circumstances, to protect his membership in the organization during such sickness or disability, the local union to be reimbursed for this expenditure by the member benefited after recovery.

Amend section 127, general laws, after the words "national guard," by adding the words "Canadian militia," the section to read:

Section 127. In cases where members are admitted as residents of the Union Printers Home, or who enlist for active service in the regular army or navy in time of war, or members of the national guard OR CANADIAN MILITIA who may be ordered to war, their situations may be filled by the foreman: Provided, That upon again reporting for duty the situations formerly held by these members shall be restored to them.

Amend section 128, general laws, to read:

Section 128. Any member of the International Typographical Union employed in an official capacity BY HIS LOCAL UNION OR BY THE INTERNATIONAL TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION, OR ANY MEMBER INCAPACITATED BY ILLNESS, shall not lose his priority in the office in which he is employed: PROVIDED, THAT AT THE END OF THREE MONTHS THE SITUATION MAY BE FILLED BY THE FOREMAN, BUT UPON AGAIN REPORTING FOR DUTY THE SITUATIONS FORMERLY HELD BY THESE MEN SHALL BE RESTORED TO THEM.

Amend section 139, general laws, to read:

Section 139. Upon first trial, should the accused be convicted, the MAXIMUM fine, if one be imposed, shall not exceed $25, AND THIS PENALTY SHALL NOT BE INCREASED BY ADDING THERETO ANY PART OF THE EXPENSE INCURRED BY THE UNION IN THE TRIAL OF THE ACCUSED.

Add new section to general laws under heading of "Powers of Subordinate Unions," to read:

Section —. On and after August 1, 1918, individuals or subordinate unions are forbidden to use the name of the International Typographical Union in any manner in soliciting advertising for convention souvenirs.

Add new section to general laws, to read:

Section —. All classes of mailing, regardless of whether done by hand or power, is part of the mailing trade, and is under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union.

Strike out resolution 17, page 109 of the book of laws, which reads:

17. That all classes of mailing, regardless of whether done by hand or power, is part of the mailing trade, and is under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union.

Add the following under the heading, "Resolutions:"

Resolved, That every effort should be made by line-casting machine manufacturers to make the face of matrices readable to the operator without requiring undue effort to read same.

A GOVERNMENT OLD AGE PENSION.

The following resolutions, endorsing the establishing of an old age pension system by the national government, were adopted at the convention last month at Colorado Springs:

Whereas, The United States of America is the only great nation in the world (excepting Russia) that does not provide old age pensions for its worn-out and worthy workers; and,

Whereas, The consequent necessity of American workers to provide their own benefits is a gross injustice, and frequently ends in failure through no fault of the workers; and,

Whereas, The government of the United States of America has demanded that its citizens protect the honor of the nation with their lives in a great war, while this government has not in the past been responsive to the demands of its workers to protect their honor; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the International Typographical Union, in convention assembled, endorse and urge the passage of the old age pension bill introduced in congress by Gen. I. R. Sherwood, for the benefit of all American workers; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to General Sherwood and to the editor of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL for publication.

WHAT WAS DOING BETWEEN SESSIONS

In the shadow of towering peaks, the International Typographical Union, for the third time, held its annual convention. And while it was one of the most fruitful sessions held in recent years from the standpoint of business transacted, so also it reached a climax in the way of entertainment. The attractions of the Pikes Peak region of Colorado are so varied and full of interest, especially to that great percentage of delegates and visitors who make up convention crowds, and who reside in the eastern section of the country, that the local committee was confronted with the difficult task of selecting the most attractive features with which to entertain the delegates and visitors at moments when the cares of business were thrown aside, and the time given over to carefree revelry. That the convention committee of No. 82 performed its work with a thoroughness that reached perfection, every one in attendance during the week will surely avow.

Saturday night preceding the opening of the convention is always the occasion of the "get-together," and this year was no exception. The affair was held in the Temple theater, where a high-class musical and vaudeville entertainment made the occasion very enjoyable, and between "stunts" a large supply of material that goes to make up a buffet luncheon disappeared as magically as the snow on a lofty Colorado peak under the rays of a summer's sun. Parenthetically, it may be said that the "get-together" was a howling success, notwithstanding the fact that Colorado is now a "bone-dry" state, and Manitou water was the only beverage furnished to quench the thirst of the merry typos.

Sunday afternoon, in connection with the local newspapers, the committee had set apart for an automobile ride through the world-famous Garden of the Gods and on to Manitou. The Garden of the Gods is one of the geological wonders of the world, and the little community of Manitou, filled to overflowing during the tourist season, lies at the foot of Pikes Peak, which stands majestically isolated, and rises to an altitude of more than fourteen thousand feet above sea level. The drive continued on to Broadmoor, past Prospect lake, and to the Union Printers Home, giving many their first view of the magnificent institution which the members of our craft are so proud to call their own.

Contrary to the usual custom prevailing for some years past, an all-day session of the convention was held on Monday. After adjournment visitors and delegates attended the Princess theater at the invitation of the local convention committee, and later in the evening they whiled away several hours in dancing at Stratton park pavilion.

A trip that will be remembered when all others are forgotten, and echoes of which are still reverberating wherever the convention goers congregate, was the outing at Green Mountain falls on Tuesday afternoon. Several delightful summer resorts are all but hidden in the mountain fastnesses of Ute pass, and those who were so fortunate as to be aboard the special trains on that day reveled for several hours in the gorgeous scenery of that section of the mountain country. At one point on the trip an outfit of cattlemen staged a real "wild-west" show for the edification of the crowd. An elaborate luncheon was also a part of the program for the afternoon.

During the week numerous small parties made "sunrise" trips to the summit of Pikes Peak, either by auto or cog road. Cripple Creek, Crystal park and other points were found especially attractive. A panoramic view of the world's greatest gold camp will remain with many of the convention visitors as one of the outstanding pleasures of the 1917 convention.

Sunday at Denver.

Between five and six hundred of the delegates and visitors were guests of the Denver ex-Delegates' Association on Sunday following adjournment of the convention. The Denver printers furnished more than a hundred automobiles to take the crowd over the park system and boulevards, a distance of seventy miles or more. A journey through Bear Creek canyon to Bergen park brought the crowd to a point where the "inner man" was regaled and renewed with an abundance of picnic edibles, and the meanderings then continued onward past waterfalls and trout streams, and the bewildering scenic grandeur, until the summit of Genesee mountain was reached, 9,400 feet above sea level. Then on to Lookout mountain, where the remains of Col. William F. Cody ("Buffalo Bill"), famous Indian scout and wild-west showman, are buried. The committee having charge of the arrangements in Denver was composed of August Koester, A. P. Knill, John E. Collett, Thomas J. Duffy, Clint C. Houston, Robert F. Jones and Frank J. Pulver. There was not the slightest confusion at any time during the day, and the way in which the affair was handled stamps the committee as "efficiency experts" in the line of entertainment.

Home Anniversary Day.

The event of most interest was the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Union Printers Home, which took place on Wednesday afternoon of convention week. The board of trustees of the institution had mapped out an elaborate program for the occasion, and notwithstanding a drizzling rain started during the ceremonies (an uncommon occurrence, we are told, in the City of Sunshine), the more than two thousand printers and their friends and families were in accord in acclaiming it an event to be prominently recorded in the annals of the International Typographical Union. The grounds of the institution were never more beautiful, and Superintendent Daley had arranged a decorative effect that was incomparable for its artistic beauty. The speakers' platform had been improvised under the west veranda of the main building, and the rostrum was decorated with the intertwined flags of the United States and Canada. The audience occupied chairs on the lawn under the trees in front.

Secretary-Treasurer Hays was master of ceremonies, and the gathering was honored and enlightened with addresses by Governor Gunter, Mayor Thomas, Horace G. Lunt, representing the chamber of commerce; President Scott and T. W. McCullough, associate editor of the Omaha Bee and a well-known member of the typographical union. These addresses will be found in the proceedings of the convention, printed as a supplement to this issue of THE JOURNAL.

When darkness came myriads of electric lights illuminated the building and grounds in brilliant fashion. Most of the visitors and delegates had friends or acquaintances among the Home residents, and several hours were spent in meeting former associates and in recalling past events and reminiscences of other days.

The addition recently completed adds largely to the comforts of the residents, and also provides accommodations for a score or more. It is constructed of the same Colorado cut stone and in every way conforms to the appearance of the original building.

A concert band engaged for the afternoon proved a drawing card after the set program was finished. When the speaking was over the crowd moved to two large circus tents, placed just outside the grounds to the south of the main building, where a barbecue was served cafeteria style, with the following menu: Potato salad, radishes, celery, pickles, baked beans, cold roast pork, barbecued beef, bread, cheese, coffee, lemonade, Manitou water, ginger champagne and watermelon. It was a great feast, and enjoyed as only such a collation could be by a gathering of hungry printers.

A luncheon was given Wednesday noon at the Acacia hotel by the board of trustees of the Union Printers Home, the guests being Governor Gunter, Mayor Thomas, Horace G. Lunt and T. W. McCullough. Vice-President Barrett was present in place of President Scott, whose duties in connection with business of the convention prevented his attendance.

[The following editorials appeared in the Colorado Springs Gazette during convention week.]

PRINTERS HOME SILVER JUBILEE.

It never has been the policy of the International Typographical Union to follow, but the progressiveness of the organization was never more clearly demonstrated than in the establishment of the Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs. When the institution was opened in 1892, the more conservative trade unionists viewed the practicability of the project with doubt. At the end of twenty-five years, the Home stands today as one of the best of its kind in the world, its mission established and its work constantly broadening.

The delegates to the sixty-third convention of the printers' craft have been invited to the silver jubilee which is being celebrated next Wednesday at the Home. Invitations also have been sent to a large number of Colorado Springs residents, so that both visitors and our own people may see what progress the trustees of the institution have made in taking care of the invalid printers.

The recent completion of a $75,000 addition to the Home makes it one of the largest of its kind in the world. As it stands today, it is a far cry from the original building, erected and furnished in 1892, at a cost of $70,000, every cent of which was paid on completion—an almost unprecedented occurrence in the history of benevolent institutions. Not only was the Home free from debt, but a surplus of more than $13,000 was in a bank to the credit of the building fund.

With the exception of an unsolicited gift of $10,000 from the late George W. Childs and Anthony J. Drexel, as an appreciation of the printers, the original building was paid for with money furnished by members of the organization. A hospital annex, costing $40,000, was erected at a later date; then a library addition, laundry and boiler plant; superintendent's cottage, barns and so forth; and in 1912 a tuberculosis pavilion, costing $10,000, was added to the plant.

The Home is situated on eighty acres of land donated by citizens of this city, and the property has been appraised by conservative real estate men at more than a million dollars. The institution has spent approximately $1,750,000 in Colorado Springs during the twenty-five years of its existence, and business relations with merchants of the city always have been most cordial.

The Gazette wishes to heartily congratulate the members of the International Typographical Union, and the trustees, upon the completion of twenty-five years of successful management of the Union Printers Home. And we wish, also, to take advantage of this opportunity to express our appreciation of the fine relationship which has always existed here with this splendid organization.

A SUCCESSFUL CONVENTION.

The outstanding feature of the sixty-third annual convention of the International Typographical Union, which closed last night, was the dispatch and lack of friction with which the hundreds of delegates conducted the tremendous amount of business brought before the sessions. The various committees were confronted with a larger number of resolutions to pass upon than ever before in the history of the organization. Yet while many of the proposals were acted upon unfavorably, there was never a murmur from the delegate or group of delegates who introduced the measure before the convention.

Originally planned for a six-day conference, the convention adjourned last night, with all business finished, one day ahead of the scheduled time. During the week many measures of importance to the printer's craft were favorably passed upon.

Digitized by Google

The national organization unanimously voted in favor of a resolution commending President Wilson for the course he has pursued in the war; voted down a proposal to adopt a uniform wage scale throughout the country, which the organization decided would be impracticable; agreed to furnish support to all members of the union who enlist for service in the war; rejected the proposal to hold the annual convention each year in Indianapolis, the national headquarters, with a meeting every tenth year in Colorado Springs; and also turned down the plan to establish a branch of the Union Printers Home in a southern state.

The closing session of the convention was featured by the presentations of gifts and votes of thanks to the local committee of arrangements, headed by William I. Reilly. The faithful and efficient efforts of this committee made possible one of the most satisfactory meetings the union has ever held. Their elaborate plans, while somewhat interfered with by the unusual amount of rain this week, were carried through without other difficulty, and the delegates are loud in their praise of the hospitality extended by the Pikes Peak region.

The city was glad to have them here, and the Gazette extends to the International Typographical Union a cordial invitation to visit Colorado Springs as soon again, and as often, as possible.

THE TYPO OF A BYGONE DAY.

One who knew the printers of a decade or so ago, but who has not watched the evolution of these craftsmen in the intervening period, will search in vain on the streets of Colorado Springs this week for a representative of the tribe that was familiar to him a little while ago. The veteran of rheumy eye, blowsy hair and blooming nose who, less than a generation past, peopled the printshops of the country, is not an attendant at the International Typographical Union convention this summer. Seek where you will in the places where the visitors foregather, and you will find no trace of him. Moreover, you may question his successors in the art preservative, who are here for the convention, and you will learn that he was not even left at home. His kind has disappeared from the earth altogether.

Who among newspaper folk does not remember the tramp genius of the late nineties and two score years before? Fettered by no home ties, brilliant in native genius and scholarly accomplishments, but too restless and too thirsty to make practical use of his attainments, he drifted from shop to shop until the end of his tragic day. Now his day has permanently ended, for his place has been filled by the clear-eyed young artisan with keen business instinct and trained brain and hand.

This newer printer not only has learned the value of trade organization and the strength of cooperation, but he has gone a step beyond his fellows in unionism by eliminating the wasteful, dangerous and valueless strike. He has learned that his interests and those of his employer are not at variance, but are identical, and that by friendly arbitration he can gain the ends he would lose by resort to force. No craft in all the labor movement has progressed so far as typography and none may claim a rosier prospect for the future.

But would it not have been a happy thought for some local to have brought just one of the "old boys" here, to revive reminiscences of the hand days when four galleys of brevier was a man's day's work, when Washington hand presses had not entered museums, and setting a job was largely a matter of curving brass rule? Those lovable old characters, luminous of nose and odorous of breath, are part of the history of newspaper making, and no epic of their time will be complete without a composite portrait of the peripatetic printer.

"INTERTYPE NEWS."

The first issue of a new house organ called "Intertype News" was mailed recently by the Intertype Corporation to its thousands of machine and supplies customers. It is a neat little booklet, consisting of eight pages and cover, the latter having a specially designed mailing flap which folds for mailing in such a way that no envelop is required. The cover layout is a combination of hand designing and Intertype faces, and the composition throughout, including large headlines, was handled on a multiple-magazine Intertype. The leading article in the first issue brings out the advantages of the new Intertype side magazine unit, which is standardized and therefore applicable to all models of standardized Intertypes. A double-page spread in the center of the booklet shows at a glance just what is meant when the Intertype is referred to as a standardized machine. The fact that all models are interchangeable, that a model A can readily be changed into a model C or a model B into a model C, is very clearly presented.

Perhaps the most striking article in the first issue is a statement by H. R. Swartz, the new president of the Intertype Corporation. Mr. Swartz, in his opening paragraph, says:

"I would like to emphasize the fact that our Intertype slogan—'the better machine'—is not merely an advertising phrase. I wish that all publishers and printers could realize how much that phrase means to every member of the Intertype organization. We have all worked hard to produce a machine worthy of such a slogan; and we all believe and know that we have succeeded."

Mr. Swartz then explains how all just criticisms of the Intertype have been considered by a committee of experts, and faults, however insignificant, corrected. He states that during the past year more than $100,000 was invested in new equipment for the manufacture of Intertypes of a quality higher than ever before.

Copies of Intertype News can be secured from any Intertype agency or from the corporation's general offices in the Terminal building, Brooklyn, N. Y.—Advt.

INCREASES IN SCALES

THE scale of Green Bay, Wis., was increased $1 per week for journeymen and $2 for foremen, under an agreement signed with No. 344 to run two years from May 1, 1917.

* * *

HAND compositors in the book and job offices under the jurisdiction of Annapolis (Md.) Union No. 114 received an increase of $3 per week on July 2, the contract to be in force for one year.

* * *

BEGINNING June 15, last, the printers in both the newspaper and book and job branches at Elmira, N. Y., secured an increase in wages of $2 per week all around the first year and $1 the second.

* * *

BEGINNING July 1, 1917, the newspaper scale of Toronto, Ont., was fixed at $26.50 for day work and $28.50 nights. A year hence another dollar will be added. The old scale was $21 and $23, which makes a total advance in wages of $6.50 per week.

* * *

UNDER a contract which does not expire until six months after a formal declaration of peace in the present war, No. 449, Calgary, Alberta, Can., through a supplemental agreement, has succeeded in increasing the newspaper scale for handmen from $22 (day) and $24 (night) to $25 and $27.

* * *

GREAT FALLS., MONT., now has a flat wage scale of $36 for night work and $33 day. Foremen employed at night receive $45 per week and $39 on day work. The scale applies to both newspaper and book and job work. The increase amounts to $3 per week for book and job printers and $1.50 per week for newspaper printers.

* * *

THE publishers of the newspapers of Peoria, Ill., H. M. Pindell and H. M. Powell, the former of the Journal and the Transcript and the latter of the Star, have voluntarily increased the wages of their employes in the composing rooms $1 per week during the period of the war and until peace is declared. The increase is independent of the contract in force between the newspapers and Typographical Union No. 29.

REPRESENTATIVE PENDERGAST assisted in negotiating a new book and job scale at Fort Wayne, Ind., last month, with a total increase of $4 per week for hand compositors and $2 for machine operators. The pay for night work was based on increases of $5 per week for handmen and $3 for operators. Half of the advance granted the hand compositors will be paid the first year, and the remainder divided, the next increase being paid July 10, 1919, and the final increase on July 10, 1921. The agreement covers a period of four years and five months.

THE book and job scale of No. 102, Ottawa, Can., is now on a flat basis of $24 per week, hand and machine, with an agreement running from July 1, 1917, to June 30, 1919. The old rate was $20 for hand compositors and $21 for machine operators.

INCREASES in wages running from 50 cents per week to $3 have been arranged in a contract signed between the employers and No. 487, Middletown, Ohio. The agreement is for a year, beginning August 1, 1917.

* * *

WAGES on the newspapers at Everett, Wash., under a contract running for one year and eight months, are advanced $1.50 per week all around. This makes the scale $30 for day work and $33 for nights.

* * *

THE newspapers of Havre, Mont., have signed an agreement with No. 764, for a period of one year, and the wages were increased $4.50 per week—foremen, $28.50 and handmen and operators, $25.50.

* * *

THE new scale of Battle Creek, Mich., covering both branches of the trade, provides for an increase of $2 for foremen and handmen and $1 for machine operators, both day and night work.

* * *

THE Polish printers of Buffalo, N. Y., have signed an agreement for a year with the newspaper published in that language, the increase in wages amounting to $3 and $4 per week.

COURTESY—AND JOKE ON THE I. T. U.

The undersigned desires to acknowledge the courtesy of the following named gentlemen, visitors and delegates to the International Typographical Union convention who presented him with their visiting cards:

Clarence M. Dunkle, No. 12; W. S. Farmer, No. 92; Eugene J. Flynn, No. 7; R. A. B. Edie, No. 177; W. D. Spyres, No. 464; F. M. Baldauf, No. 174; P. S. Soneson, No. 82; Horace P. Newton, No. 20; John A. Karns, No. 180; Will H. Winn, No. 104; Edward E. Padgett, President No. 7; W. J. Corrigan, No. 8; Lytton Alley, No. 20; Richard J. Faulkner, No. 103.

A joke on the International Typographical Union, which appeared in the Colorado Springs Gazette, was printed at my request, and is here reproduced:

THE I. T. U.

To the Editor of the Gazette:

Here is a joke on the International Typographical Union, and it actually occurred. Two pretty girls were going into a swell restaurant on Pikes Peak avenue, near Tejon street. One said to the other: "What is the I. T. U.? Everybody is wearing it on their hats?" The I. T. U. delegates please sit up and take notice. It is said that advertising pays. ONE OF THEM.

MARTIN R. H. WITTER

The news of the death of Martin R. H. Witter, on Thursday, August 2, was sorrowful intelligence to his many friends in St. Louis, none of whom were aware of his critical illness until they read the account of his death in the morning papers. Mr. Witter, at the time of his death, lacked but two days of being 71 years of age, and curiously enough, his funeral took place on the day which would have been celebrated as his birthday had not death intervened at this peculiar time. The funeral of the deceased was largely attended, not only by members of the typographical union but by many of the most prominent citizens of St. Louis, including the mayor of the city, civic officials, and members of the Grand Army post of which he was a past commander. President Marsden G. Scott, First Vice-President Walter Barrett, Second Vice-President Hugo Miller and Secretary Hays, of the International Typographical Union, and delegates to the International convention at Colorado Springs, representing nine states and the Dominion of Canada, paid their respects to the late ex-president of the International Typographical Union and were present at the obsequies. The funeral was held under the joint auspices of Ransom Post of the G. A. R. and Typographical Union No. 8. Charles Hertenstein, president of the local union, paid an earnest tribute to the character and services of the honored dead. Mr. Witter was a native of Missouri, and, although but fifteen years of age at the beginning of the civil war, saw considerable service in southern Missouri and Arkansas before its close. About the year 1867 he removed to St. Louis, joining the typographical union, and had been a continuous member of No. 8 since the date of his initiation, fifty years ago. In 1884, at New Orleans, Mr. Witter was elected president of the International Typographical Union, which office he held two years, or until the Pittsburgh convention in 1886. This convention is a memorable one in the annals of our organization, for it was at the Pittsburgh convention of 1886 that a check for $10,000 was received from George W. Childs and Anthony Drexel, the culmination of previous negotiations with International Typographical Union President Witter toward the establishment of a fund for a home for aged printers, from which generous gift as a nucleus has grown our present magnificent institution at Colorado Springs and our system of benefits which has won for us the respect and admiration of the world. From Mr. Witter's active business administration, crowned by this act of generosity and confidence on the part of our benefactors, emerged our conscious life as an International organization, and our ideas, previously vague and nebulous, from that time began to assume sculptured form and substance. With the Home as a tangible asset and an objective we have steadily progressed to our present assured position in the industrial life of the nation. During twenty-seven of the most active years of his life Mr. Witter occupied the position of foreman of the composing room of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. In this capacity he enjoyed the utmost confidence of his employers and the respect of those whom he employed. His upright character and courteous treatment of every one with whom he came in contact earned for him well-deserved popularity and influence, which was always exerted toward the elevation of his fellow craftsmen to the higher planes of usefulness and the respect which he himself commanded. There was nothing of vanity or conceit in his character, and although he performed yeoman service in the cause of humanity, no one ever heard him boast of his accomplishments or achievements. He was remarkably modest and unassuming regarding his own personal merits. While an acknowledged leader in affairs pertaining to our local and International organization, and possessed of a dominant influence, he never made use of it for his personal advancement, preferring to remain modestly in the background. Nine years ago the republican party of St. Louis desired to put upon their ticket at the forthcoming election a representative workingman, a man of undoubted integrity, for the office of city register. The choice of the leaders of the party fell at once upon Mr. Witter. He was elected by a majority of over 20,000, running several thousand votes ahead of his ticket. Four years later he was re-elected by a substantial majority. At the conclusion of his second term, the office in the meantime having become appointive instead of elective, Mr. Witter's economic and efficient management of the affairs entrusted to his department induced his appointment to a third term. He was serving the first year of this term at the time of his death. Martin Witter was a useful man; kindly, generous, lovable. He deserved well of his generation. He departs from us not with empty hands, not as one without hope. The passing from our lives of a good man, one whom we have known and honored for so many years, is a renewal of our trust in the belief that there is no death. That what we call death is but an incident in life, a rolling away of the mists that obscure the hights toward which we are all blindly striving; and that our departed friend has entered into a wider and brighter sphere of usefulness, of which his earthly life was a natural and necessary antecedent, serene in the consciousness of duty faithfully performed.

HOMER A. DANFORD.

The following memorial was adopted by the St. Louis Globe-Democrat chapel:

The mournful intelligence of the death of Martin R. H. Witter, Thursday, August 2, 1917, was received by the members of the Globe-Democrat chapel with sentiments of profound regret.

We desire to extend our sympathies to the bereaved family and friends of our valued former member and loyal associate, whose broad sympathies and beneficent influence were for more than a quarter of a century a potent factor in our daily life.

Mr. Witter occupied the responsible position of foreman of the Globe-Democrat composing room twenty-seven years, with credit to himself and to the principles of unionism, which always found in him an ardent though conservative exponent.

In April, 1909, Mr. Witter severed his connection with the newspaper business to assume the duties of a municipal office, to which he had been called in recognition of his ability and well-known integrity of character.

Upon his retirement from the foremanship of the Globe-Democrat composing room the following tribute to his character was unanimously endorsed by the members of the chapel:

The graces of the gentleman have been ever present in his dealings with all men in the composing room, and in forming his judgments he eliminated from his mind all thought of personality or self-interest. Courtesy, kindness and consideration, together with self-reliance, dignity and forbearance, have always characterized his demeanor toward others, and no man was ever held in higher esteem by his associates or enjoyed a greater degree of confidence from all who knew him and properly understood his character and motives.

Mr. Witter was a continuous member of Typographical Union No. 8 fifty years, having been initiated July 7, 1867. He was elected delegate to the New Orleans convention in 1884 and to the Boston convention in 1891. At the New Orleans convention in 1884 Mr. Witter was elected president of the International Typographical Union and retained that office until the Pittsburgh convention of 1886.

The character of Martin Witter was representative to an eminent degree of that sterling element in our International membership to which must be attributed the high esteem in which our organization is held today by the business world. It was during his administration as president of the International Union that the movement toward the creation of a fund for the establishment of a home for aged union printers received its strongest initial impulse, developing into well-defined form and substance at the convention at Pittsburgh in 1886 and ultimate organization and establishment at Colorado Springs. From this time we date our real birth as a business factor in the industrial life of the nation. The Home was a tangible asset, the cornerstone of our International edifice, upon which has been erected the splendid superstructure which stands today as a model of beneficent organization.

Among the names of those whom we revere as the architects and designers of the organization of which we are justly proud, none holds more honorable place in our esteem than that of Martin R. H. Witter.

THE WASHINGTON STAR'S LIBERALITY.

On Monday, July 30, 1917, every employe of the Evening Star Newspaper Company received the following notice in their pay envelops:

THE EVENING STAR, July 30, 1917.

To the Members of the Star Family:

While, because of the abnormal cost of paper and the heavy taxation due to the war, the Star will not enjoy its usual prosperity this year, still the company can not be unmindful of the heavy increases in living expenses of those engaged in the work of producing the paper, and the executive committee has therefore directed that an additional pay roll be disbursed on August 1.

FRANK B. NOYES, President.

The Evening Star company has always shown great consideration for the welfare and uplift of its employes, through a desire to build up a better understanding and closer feeling of relationship between employer and employe. That the Star is succeeding in the perpetuation of these relations goes without saying. The company gives its employes two-weeks' leave with pay, and on many occasions has paid them their wages when sick, continued their names on the pay roll for months after the last call of "time," and interested itself otherwise.

Last year a model lunchroom was established for the benefit of the employes, and in December the directors voted an extra pay roll to be distributed Christmas day.

When the nation was called to subscribe for the liberty bonds, the Star company made it possible for every employe to do his or her "bit," and threw in the interest.

In addition to its many acts of kindness, the Star company has ever been mindful of the sanitary and wholesome surroundings of its employes.

Washington, D. C. HARRY C. SIMPSON.

PEACE.

Peace, downcast, sat upon the earth to mourn.
The broken wires were dangling from her lyre;
Her olive branch lay in the trenches, torn,
And clipped her pinions were—by martial fire.
Discouraged by ferocious waste, and sad,
She wondered what would be her task to do,
If all the world were going fighting mad,
To keep her triumph tranquil and be true.
Hope heard the thought above the guns' offense,
And came through poisoned gas to Peace's aid.
"There is no loss where rules Omnipotence,"
She said. "Rise, sing and fly; be not afraid.
Thy harmony is of the spheres, not strings;
Thy twig, the tree of life; the truth, thy wings."

WILLIS HUDSPETH.

THE SILVER JUBILEE.

(Air—"Marching Through Georgia.")

Out west, in the Rockies region, the realm of the columbine,
Nearby the grand old mountains with scenery so fine,
Is a wondrous institution that printers' hearts entwine,
As they go marching through Colorado.

CHORUS.

Hurrah, hurrah, we shout with joy and glee!
Hurrah, hurrah! 'Tis the silver jubilee
Of the Union Printers Home, where brotherhood we see,
As we go marching through Colorado!

A quarter of a century has passed since it was born,
And from a small beginning has grown like waving corn,
To grandeur and to beauty, while hills and plains adorn,
As we go marching through Colorado!

CHORUS.

The I. T. U. convention came out the other day,
And feasted at a barbecue to music grand and gay,
With meetings and with greetings we passed the time away,
As we went marching through Colorado!

CHORUS.

The boys were glad to meet them and shake them by the hand
And listen to the speeches and music by the band.
We hope again to greet them in this God-favored land,
When they go marching through Colorado.

CHORUS.

Then again, again, we'll sing the jubilee!
Hurrah! hurrah! we'll shout our joy and glee!
At the Union Printers Home, whose welcome hand is free,
As we go marching through Colorado!

FROM LOCAL UNIONS

SCRANTON, PA.

By the action of the Colorado Springs convention in choosing Scranton as the 1918 convention city the above quotation has become a fact. For the past three years Scranton has put forward its claims before the International Typographical Union membership, and that its efforts were appreciated was shown when Scranton was the only city presented when nominations were made at the convention. Delegate M. W. Walton, of Scranton, placed his native city in nomination and was followed by Delegates James J. Hoban, of Cleveland; Thomas W. Johns, of New York; M. L. Higgins, of Syracuse; C. M. Leighley, of Pittsburgh; C. W. Casey, of Wilkes-Barre; D. I. Campbell, of Norfolk; C. S. Gookin, of Roanoke; J. P. Bowen, of Philadelphia; A. M. Rutherford, of Baltimore; W. A. Coyell, of Buffalo, and W. C. Trump, of Boston. The speakers all had a good word to say for the next convention city, which was a source of much gratification to the Scranton delegation present. The members of No. 112 will do their utmost between now and next August to make the 1918 convention a big success, and show the delegates to the sixty-third session and our friends throughout the country that their confidence in our ability to accomplish results were not misplaced. The Colorado Springs convention was one of the best ever, notwithstanding the weather being contrary to that "doped out" by the committee. The boys worked hard to please everybody, and were surely entitled to all the honors bestowed upon them. M. W. Walton, Frank McTague, delegates, and W. H. Hughes and A. J. Langan, boosters, comprised the Scranton delegation. In future letters the writer will have something to say of Scranton and the progress our convention committee is making to entertain our guests next August.

The Eureka Specialty Printing Company, of this city, recently secured the contract for printing all of the coupons to be used by the United Cigar Company for the next two years. It is the largest contract ever drawn up by a printing concern in this section. The same company only a short time ago was awarded the contract for printing millions of Christmas seals for the Red Cross. The office is specially equipped for printing coupons and is union throughout.

The offices of the Republican and Times, our morning and afternoon papers, respectively, presented lively scenes during the drawing of the great war draft. A large force was employed comparing the numbers as they were received with the names of the eligibles, so as to present as accurate a report as possible in their respective papers. Among the names published in the list were the following members of Scranton Typographical Union: Fred A. Ash, John Walton, Thomas Walton (sons of "Commodore" Walton), Clint M. Corless, James Rowe, Peter Richards, John Lally, Neill Lally, Fred Welker, Thomas Folan, James J. Gilmartin, Carl Lamping, Gerald McLane, Edward Kinney, Frank Kilcullen, John P. Kilcullen, Walter Kelley, Joseph Craig, Eugene Biglin, Fred Hanselman, Dennis Watson, Fred Schlager, Wallace Cutts, Anthony Henry, Edgar Wetzel, O. M. Hazelton, Robert Gemmel, B. A. Kraft, George Mapleson, Edgar Wetzel, Emelyn Evans, Richard Scott, George Bailey, Austin Frounfelker, Clarence Greenfield, Edward Greenfield, D. Harold Jones, Walter Morgan, Jay Osterhout and A. A. Grant.

Thomas F. McLaughlin, a prominent local attorney of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and one time member of Scranton Typographical Union, died at his home in Wilkes-Barre, July 19. Twenty-five years ago "Tommy" McLaughlin, as he was called in those days, held "cases" on the Scranton Times. He had ambition, studied when not working at his trade, and drifted into law. He had a lucrative practice, was an orator of note, and only five months ago delivered the principal oration at the Eagles' memorial exercises in this city.

Miss Mary E. Fay, a brilliant social writer of the Scranton Times, has harkened to the call of the political field, and her name will appear on the ballot at the coming primaries for the office of school controller. Miss Fay was named at a regular caucus of representative women of the city, who recognize in her ability a woman possessed of the highest ideals. Being in constant touch with the people through her newspaper work, she knows something of their needs. We look for Miss Fay to make the other candidates hustle on election day. She is a graduate of a prominent college, and is proficient as a linguist and musician. She is a member of the local Newswriters' Union No. 3.

P. G. Moran, who held many offices of trust while a member of No. 112, now the editor and proprietor of the Labor Union, an influential labor paper in Columbus, Ohio, was a visitor in Scranton during the month.

The biggest advertisement ever inserted in Scranton papers appeared July 6 in the Republican and Times. It consisted of eight pages in each paper and announced the opening of the new store of the Scranton Dry Goods Company. The store occupies the site of the old Wyoming House, which was a familiar hostelry to typos twenty-five or thirty years ago.

Steve McDonald, president of the central labor union, and a member of Newswriters' Union, No. 3, of this city, is a candidate for mayor at the coming primaries. His campaign has the endorsement of the central body. Labor has the necessary votes to elevate those seeking its suffrage to power. Mr. McDonald has been in the movement a good many years—has friends and foes—but we must all agree that he has the backbone and qualifications that are necessary to make a good mayor.

Joseph P. Gibbons, former member of No. 112, but now of "Big Six", New York, spent a week among his former co-workers in this city recently. "Joe" is a live-wire in union matters; never tires of "boosting" the International Typographical Union, with a good word occasionally for his old town—Scranton.

Charles H. Dennis, of the International Correspondence Schools proofroom, spent a week recently at his old home, Red Bank, N. J.

W. B. Twigg, of the Anthracite Press, this city, took in the sights of Detroit for a few weeks during the month of July.

Floyd Roof, of the International Correspondence Schools chapel, recently purchased ninety acres of land at Chinchilla, Pa., about six miles from Scranton. Mr. Roof is one of No. 112's most substantial members, who sees a bright future in this progressive little hamlet. He has not as yet made known what he intends to do with his newly-acquired possession.

James B. Skeoch, of the International Correspondence Schools chapel, was receiving the condolence of his co-workers recently over the loss of his mother. The deceased had reached the ripe age of 72 years, came from good old Scotch stock, and was a devout Christian woman during her life. A. J. LANGAN.

OHIO TYPOGRAPHICAL CONFERENCE.

The semi-annual session of the Ohio Typographical Conference will be held in Akron, Ohio, October 13 and 14. We are hoping to make this the most successful conference of any Ohio has yet enjoyed, both from the point of attendance and genuine enthusiasm. Headquarters will be at the Howe hotel, which is amply able to take care of all delegates and visitors.

We hope to have President Scott and Secretary-Treasurer Hays attend this conference, as they have not been present at any conference since the one at Columbus in 1914.

Besides the business sessions there will be several extraordinary social features. Ohio printers should not fail to attend this session, as we are contemplating entertaining the full quota of delegates of every local union in Ohio.

Akron, Ohio. F. W. DANNER.

CHICAGO, ILL.

At the last meeting of the union the newspaper scale committee reported that the International Board of Arbitration had ruled in support of the contention of No. 16's representatives, that the contract and scale of prices were separate documents, and that the existing contract, amendments thereof or any new contract proposals can become subjects for arbitration only by mutual agreement. The committee asked for an increase of power in conducting negotiations, which was granted, but at this writing no agreement has been reached. R. H. Marshall presented his resignation as a member of the scale committee. It was accepted, and President Foster announced the appointment of John A. English to fill the vacancy. A new job scale committee was also appointed, consisting of W. J. Hedger, Arthur W. Stutes and John A. Johnson.

The board of directors of the Mutual Aid Society has adopted resolutions which provide that all members of the society in any branch of military service in the present war shall be kept in good standing for the period of hostilities. Any claims resulting from disability received in such service will be referred to a regular meeting of the society for action.

Publication of the names of the men drawn for military service was the cause of a large amount of extra work in all the newspaper offices. The force of the American-Examiner did notable work on this job, according to Superintendent Lamphere. In the Examiner of Saturday appeared the list of names drawn in the Chicago district, classified alphabetically, giving number, residence and division. This necessitated the handling of 1,760,000 ems of agate. In nineteen hours the force got out the regular edition of the Examiner containing these names, forty-six pages of the Sunday edition and the eight regular editions of the American.

Delegates and visitors en route to the Colorado Springs convention thronged the Union Printers' club, Thursday, August 9, and many old friendships were renewed and new ones formed. The festivities lasted until the departure of the delegates' train at 10 P. M.

Cards of fifty-seven members of No. 16 who have joined the various branches of the military service have been deposited in the secretary-treasurer's office. This number will no doubt be largely increased, as many are known to have joined whose cards are not yet on deposit.

The Tucker-Kenworthy chapel held a picnic at Fox River Grove, Sunday, August 19. Baseball games and various athletic sports were indulged in. There was a large attendance, and all thoroughly enjoyed the outing.

New label offices as reported by Organizer Griffin are the Russian Publishing Company, 2407 West Division street, and the Carbery & Reed Company, 638 Federal street.

The St. Louis baseball club that was to represent that city in the Union Printers' National Baseball League tournament at St. Paul this year, had it been held, visited Chicago, August 7, 8 and 9, being scheduled to meet the local tournament team in three games. Tuesday's game had to be abandoned on account of rain. On Wednesday St. Louis won in eleven innings in one of the best games ever contested among printers. The two star pitchers—Du Caluwe and Schatzman—were opponents and as a result base hits were few and far between. The former struck out fourteen men and the latter twenty-two. Schatzman had been playing in the Western League and was in fine condition. Du Caluwe really deserved a draw, three poorly played bunts in the eleventh accounting for the winning runs.

Thursday's game was a one-sided affair. "Hank" Paynter, for the locals, was too much for the visitors, defeating them 9 to 0. He got excellent support, while Obermeyer was poorly supported and was hit hard in the first two innings. The visitors were well taken care of during their short stay. On Tuesday evening they were taken by automobile to the Chateau Des Plaines, fifteen miles west of the city, where a chicken supper was served. Wednesday morning they rode through the fashionable north side district to the North Shore inn in one of Chicago's fine double-deck auto busses, and after partaking of dinner were driven to the White Sox park. The distance covered was twenty-one miles. After the game the party had supper at King's, whence they went to Riverview Park, where the evening was passed. Thursday morning the ladies, chaperoned by Mrs. John McGowan, visited the big stores in the loop on a shopping tour, while the men "took in" the municipal pier. After Thursday's game the party was dined at King's and in the evening visited the Union Printers' club, where the Union Printers' band gave a concert. The proceeds of the games were donated to the fund for the purchase of baseball paraphernalia for our boys in France. The St. Louis Athletic club contributed $25. Two accidents occurred during the first game. Walter O'Malley, left fielder of the Chicago team, had his right foot broken in two places in a collision with the shortstop, and Catcher Meyer of the St. Louis club had a thumb broken by a foul tip. Both received prompt medical attention. O'Malley's foot is still in a cast and Meyer is out of the game for the rest of the season. Owner Comiskey, of the White Sox, gave the boys the use of the grounds for the games. Commissioner Springmeyer, of St. Louis, had charge of the visiting party, and on leaving thanked the Typo Athletic club, which provided the entertainment, saying the three days reminded him of a "regular tournament." Commissioner Joe Oschger is president of the club; Joe Larson, treasurer, and Charles Goodwin, secretary.

Fred Boughner, an oldtimer, and well known by the members of No. 16, stepped from a Soldiers' Home car in Milwaukee and was struck by a car approaching from the opposite direction. His left leg was cut off and his back broken. He died the following morning.

Mrs. Mabel Brine, proofreader at the Central Typesetting Company, died at her home, 4153 West Adams street, Wednesday, August 1. She was a sufferer from cancer of the kidneys, and had been ill for some time. Burial was at Forest Home.

Other deaths: John C. Hughes, July 28, Forest Home; William F. Walter, July 21, Mount Greenwood; J. A. French, July 20.

W. L. Bessette, formerly of the Peterson chapel, is now a first-class petty officer in the United States naval reserves, at the Great Lakes training station. He is a son of E. E. Bessette, city salesman of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company and well known in typographical circles all over the country.

William Coughlin, son of James Coughlin, of the American-Examiner chapel, and himself the holder of a card in No. 16, has joined the naval reserves and is stationed at the camp in Grant park.

Curtis T. Beecher, Seventy-fourth company, Sixth regiment, United States marine corps, stationed at Quantico, Va., spent a ten-day furlough at the home of his parents here. He left Monday, August 6, to rejoin his regiment.

Philip Pfalzgraf, foreman of the Cincinnati Times-Star, was a visitor at the Union Printers' club on his way back from the convention.

President Foster returned August 18 from a two weeks' vacation. Vice-President Cann occupied the executive chair during the president's absence.

For any shortcomings in this letter the writer craves the indulgence of his readers, as he was forced to be away for nearly two weeks on business connected with the occupation by the government of his farm near Battle Creek, Mich., as a military reservation. The United States authorities have about 6,000 acres under lease at that point for cantonment purposes, and are building barracks for the accommodation of some 35,000 Michigan and Wisconsin troops of the national army.

For the following I am under obligations to C. M. Burlingame, of the Sears-Roebuck chapel:

An event altogether fitting and appropriate at this time occurred in the composing room of the Sears, Roebuck & Co. printing plant Saturday noon, July 28, it being the raising of a beautiful twenty-foot flag, the property of the chapel. Time was called by the chairman half an hour before the regular closing time, and while the Sears quartet sang "The Star-Spangled Banner" the flag was raised on high by veterans of the Spanish war, all members of the chapel. Five-minute addresses were then made by Messrs. Bagnall, Aspergen, Vogan and Mitchell, the remarks being of an intensely patriotic nature. The speakers demanded undivided loyalty to our government from every person residing within our borders, and each should do his or her share in the work before us now. The hyphenated citizens who in times past have claimed class distinction must be done away with. Here we must henceforth be American or un-American; loyal or disloyal; patriots or traitors. The man who leaves the old country to escape from unbearable conditions and a suppressive form of government is an undesirable citizen who will accept and enjoy the benefits and advantages of our free land at the same time worshiping the country from which he fled; and that country our enemy. At no time in the history of the United States have our people taken up the sword except in the cause of humanity and freedom—freedom of body, soul, and religious and political opinions—the right of a people to have a voice in their own government. And in this war, as in all previous conflicts, our cause being just, we shall conquer and again demonstrate that Old Glory is the emblem of freedom. All present joined in singing "America" and then gave cheers and Godspeed for our boys of the chapel who are leaving for the service. A fund has been provided by the chapel for the purpose of from time to time sending to our boys on duty packages of delicacies not always to be obtained in camp, including, of course, tobacco and other comfort. BRYANT L. BEECHER.

It is safe to say that but few of the members of Chicago Typographical Union No. 16 saw that motley group march along our splendid lake front promenade toward the close of a hot July day. But it was an inspiring sight, and to us it held an interest, for one of our boys was marching back to the maelstrom of war. On the first day of the recent "drive" of the British recruiting mission in Chicago, when the battle-scarred veterans of the Forty-eighth Canadian Highlanders thrilled our citizens as they paraded the streets in fighting array, one of the assignments of the Kilties' band of pipers was to escort a group of recruits to the Central station, on their way to training camps in Canada. Marching side by side with the embryo soldiers and their friends, unsuspected by the onlookers, was one who already had been through the hell of the trenches in Flanders, wounded, honorably discharged after months of suffering, returning to where he saw his duty lay.

Since last December, William R. Kiloh had been working on a Chicago daily, having deposited a traveling card from Aberdeen, Scotland. Previously he had been with the Gordon Highlanders, whose headquarters are in his native town, during several months of fighting in Ypres salient, until he was wounded by shell fire at the battle of Hooge.

Kiloh comes of a fighting family. His father is in France with the British engineer corps. A brother, also of the Gordons, was wounded at Vimy Ridge recently. Another until lately had served with the British medical corps since the beginning of the war. The Canadian artillery prides itself on having a Kiloh at the front, and it was to join this brother that William R. re-enlisted for service with the dominion forces. When Uncle Sam declared war, still another brother enlisted in the Second Illinois infantry and is now in service. Truly a creditable answer to the call of democracy.

The following interview by S. J. Duncan-Clark, war expert of the Chicago Evening Post, is culled from that paper:

"But why are you going back?"

I put the question squarely to Private Kiloh, late of the Gordon Highlanders and Flanders. He had just come from re-enlisting, this time in the Canadian artillery.

The question had been in my mind all the time this slim, kindly faced Aberdeen boy had been talking to me. Why should this boy who had done his bit; who had been cruelly wounded; who had received his honorable discharge and was getting a pension, and who, recovered from his wound, was working at his trade and making excellent wages in a secure position—why should this boy go back?

Before I give you his answer, let him tell his story. Here it is put together in consecutive order. I dragged it from him bit by bit. These fellows who have been out yonder and come back do not talk easily.

"I went with the Gordon Highlanders, among the first of the territorials who were sent to fill the gaps in the 'contemptible little army.' We got orders to leave in February, 1915, and none of us knew where we were going until we landed in Havre. We were sent to the Ypres salient, and most of my fighting was done on the sector southeast of Ypres, in the region of Hooge and Hill 60.

"In those days it was a game of cat and mouse. We were the mouse and the Germans were the cat. They played with us. We never had any doubt as to the final outcome of the war, but we knew that for the time we were outnumbered, outgunned and outmunitioned.

"We were greatly troubled by spies in those days. The Germans seemed to have scattered them all through that country behind our lines. They wore every kind of disguise. Two of them turned up one day in Highland uniform, but one glance at them by a real Highlander ended their game—they had put their kilts on back to front.

"We had some regiments in which the men talked Gaelic. They came from the far north of Scotland, and their love for their own tongue got them into serious peril. A detachment was passing close to trenches in which there were English troops. The English overheard the strange language and took it for German, opening fire on the Scots. So orders were issued that there should be no more Gaelic talked on the firing line.

"I lived through many a close call without injury, and was beginning to believe in my luck, when one night along in July we were called from the support trenches to reinforce the first line after the Hooge chateau had been blown up by one of our mines. The Germans were preparing to counter-attack. I started forward with a batch of sixteen. We had to advance under the barrage of the enemy. I remember putting the thought of danger out of my mind with the reflection that so far I had escaped. The next moment I was down—a shattered ankle.

"That took me out of the fighting. The bones were badly broken; part of them had to be removed. But my ankle is as good as ever again. I have a barely perceptible limp, that's all.

"Before the war I was a socialist and a pacifist—an internationalist. I am still a socialist, but that pacifist stuff doesn't stand the test of real life. There are lots of us socialists in the trenches. We are going to see this war through, because it must be won for the safety of the world, and then we will go home to see that the democracy we have been fighting for is made worth while."

I put the question I had been wanting to ask.

"Why are you going back to the firing line?"

He seemed embarrassed for a moment, and when he answered he was not looking at me. His vision had penetrated the office walls and crossed the seas.

"Over there," he said, "my kindred are fighting. I know how the men feel. This is a job that must be done, and done for all time, now, and it needs every man who is physically fit to help do it. Knowing what I do about it, I couldn't look those boys in the face if I didn't go back.

"Perhaps if I had never been there it might be different. But now, when I sit at my linotype machine at night I can see it all, and I think—'this ought to be a machine gun.'

"My comrades are buried over there, and—well, you see how it is, don't you? I just got to go!"

Private Kiloh rose from his chair beside the office desk, shook hands and walked out with his face toward the front again. The limp, as he had said, was scarcely perceptible.

PEORIA, ILL.

William Ritter, a member of No. 29 and son of Fritz Ritter, also a member of No. 29, has enlisted in the cause of Uncle Sam. This makes two who have gone to the front, the other being Curtis Bennett.

George Paige, one of the oldtimers of No. 29, is now safely landed in the Home. D. B. Clark made application to enter the Home, and is now on the waiting list. Charles ("Stump") Embick has been getting along fine since he returned from the Home.

The judge says he never felt better in his life and is working right along.

The boys are all well pleased with the new job scale which goes into effect January 1.

Benjamin B. Kellerstrass, one of the old members of the union, has been laid up for several weeks.

The condition of Charles O. Kothe continues about the same, with no improvement.

WALTER S. BUSH.

WHEELING, W. VA.

As chronicled in last month's JOURNAL, the continuation of the reading by President Sims of his history of the local union since its organization, in 1880, was even better than his previous readings, and they were par excellence. At the present time there are only three members now belonging to No. 79 who were charter members at that time, namely, John H. Winder, foreman of the Register; George B. Barr and Wiley T. Crosse. Mr. Sims mentioned many instances which were remembered by the older members present, particularly the strike in 1886, which caught the union unprepared financially. A committee, composed of Frank T. Hummel, Harry L. Mills and President Sims, was appointed by the union to have the history of the local union, as compiled by Mr. Sims, printed for the benefit of the members.

Fred J. Mueller, of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, received an order from the Owl Print Shop for a model 17 machine. This machine will be on exhibition at the West Virginia state fair, the first week in September, and will be seen in the Owl Print Shop booth.

The Whitaker-Glessner Company, one of the largest steel corporations in the country, is installing an up-to-date printing plant in this city. L. W. Conger, formerly of Portsmouth, Ohio, has accepted the position as superintendent of this plant.

Norbert L. Baker, of the West Virginia Printing Company, was the first member of No. 79 to be drafted into service of the new national army.

B. J. Fisher, manager of the Fisher Typesetting

Company, has stated that his plant is for sale or for rent. The Fisher company has been doing a good business, and Mr. Fisher's reasons for going out of business has not been learned by the writer.

W. H. ("Colonel") Doughty, who holds a "sit" in Charleston, W. Va., is spending a few weeks' vacation visiting his old-time friends in Wheeling and vicinity. He also made a trip to Steubenville and Canton, Ohio.

Joseph J. Emerick, of Charleston, W. Va., one of the oldest printers in this state, paid a visit to our city this month, the guest of his son, Earl K. Emerick, of the Register force.

Robert D. Henthorn, who has been "tickling the keys" on the Martins Ferry Times, has resigned and is now on the Intelligencer.

Joseph Thalman, the "Shorty" Comfort of the Register force, is taking the rest cure. He thinks a month or so will do him a heap of good.

Charles W. Levy, of the Owl Print Shop, has returned after a two-weeks' vacation spent in the lake region.

Arrivals: J. C. Briley, Ed W. Lepper, C. D. Patheal, R. P. Carter, Henry A. Stevens, Elmer Butler, Harry J. Fulton, Clyde E. Blair, Elisha Lewis. Departures: M. M. Martin, C. D. Patheal, J. C. Briley, Armour Johnston.

OAKLAND, CAL.

Mention was made in the August issue of The Journal that Oakland was asking for an increase in scale. Since then much has been accomplished. The scale committee visited the newspapers and other offices concerned and with satisfactory results. San Francisco is at the present time negotiating a similar scale, which is being arbitrated at Indianapolis. It is identically the same as the proposed Oakland scale in wages and hours. Oakland Union and the newspaper publishers' association and the other offices have agreed to abide by the award of the arbitration board which is conducting the San Francisco scale matter. This will mean that when the award is made that Oakland and San Francisco will be on a par with each other. This is as it should be, as Oakland and San Francisco are practically one city, with Oakland being, in the writer's opinion, slightly more advanced in many ways than its sister city across the bay, though not in population. It is to be hoped that when this is published that the award will be rendered and both Oakland and San Francisco working seven hours a day and with a substantial increase in salary. It should be mentioned here that the proprietors of Oakland have agreed, in writing, to grant the increase from August 1.

The Berkeley Gazette has already granted the increase in pay and reduction of hours, the members of that chapel now getting $33 a week and a seven-hour day. Not only has the firm granted this increase, but it is stated that whatever the award may be the Berkeley Gazette will continue to pay the increase and work only seven hours.

The writer is indebted to the San Francisco Labor Clarion for this thought: The practice of permitting members, for sentimental reasons, to take up collections in union meeting assembled is hardly right. There may be many persons at the meeting who may not have the dime or quarter, or whatever it may be to donate, and it is rather embarrassing to have the hat passed around and one not be able to contribute his mite or "might" toward the undoubtedly worthy object. This is just a suggestion for the membership to dwell on. Perhaps if the matter were brought before the union in a different manner it may not be so bad, possibly by the president suggesting that all wishing to contribute for the relief of any one, to give to the chairman of chapel or secretary of union.

Some of our members have tendered their services to the country, among them E. S. Evans, who is now in active service; H. V. Sate, who enlisted in the hospital corps, as did E. J. McHenry. We have two officers in the army who were in the national guard, viz., Major Mallett and Lieut. G. R. Castle.

R. E. Morton, a member of Oakland Union and connected with the Mergenthaler company, has just returned from the wilds of the north, being up in Alaska in the interest of the firm. He was presented with a fine baby girl a week after his return.

M. P. Morgan, who has been in Honolulu for a few years, has returned to Oakland and is showing up around town.

William F. Hanley, who worked in Oakland ten years ago, is now subbing on the Enquirer after touring the country.

It is on the tapis that the Oakland Enquirer is changing hands, but the sale has not as yet been confirmed. The men who are behind the new concern are well-known newspaper men of vast experience and intend, it is said, to make it bigger and better than ever.

The many friends of George A. Tracy, president of San Francisco Typographical Union, will be pleased to hear of his appointment to the civil service commission of San Francisco. Mr. Tracy is widely known among printerdom, being at one time first vice-president of the International Typographical Union.

Seth Brown, president of Los Angeles Typographical Union, passed through Oakland on his way to Sacramento to attend sessions of the state council of defense, of which he is a member, being appointed by Governor Stephens.

Joe A. Mulhall.

BISMARCK, N. D.

C. B. Gorham left some time ago to take a position as superintendent in a large job office in Fort Wayne, Ind. He has worked in all capacities for the Tribune company, and was holding the position of superintendent when he resigned. Frank Moule, who has had the ad job and been in the Tribune company's employ off and on for a number of years, has accepted the position made vacant by Mr. Gorham. The undersigned has taken the "sit" left vacant by Mr. Moule.

Business is fair and machine subs scarce, but by helping hold down one another's positions, a number of the boys have been able to take their summer vacations. Among them are Frank Moule, Frank Hobza, Roy Corwin and Sherman Knauss, all of the Tribune.

James McCormick, one of the oldtimers, who has worked some years in this city, has purchased an office of his own in Shields, N. D., and will no doubt welcome any of his friends who strike that little city.

Charlie Jennings and Jack Tracy passed through here and visited between trains while en route to the coast.

A trades and labor assembly was organized here last spring which at the present time numbers from 400 to 500 members. A good share of the praise for organizing the assembly must go to Frank Milhollan, president of Typographical Union No. 140, and district organizer for the American Federation of Labor.

Chester B. Frost, who has been employed at the Dakota Printing Company, took out a traveler recently and left for Frankfort, Mich.

Mr. Milhollan is a sticker for the advancement of organized labor and has done a great deal to help the labor cause in this district. He was sent as a delegate to the state trades and labor assembly, held in Fargo in May, and while there made good use of his time. He also stated on his return that everything looked bright in labor circles, and that the allied trades delegates carried away the laurels, securing every office but one.

No. 140 meets the second Monday evening of each month in the Baker hall, located on Main street. The hall is rented by the month, and as there is a good player piano in the hall with plenty of music rolls, if the members should see fit to bring their wives and the single men their lady friends, we do not see why there could not be some pleasant evenings spent after the business meetings are over.

A. Darling, of Missoula, Mont., deposited a traveler last month and has been working every day since his arrival.

Mr. McDonald, of Grand Forks, formerly machinist-operator on the Herald, who was appointed by Governor Frazier to take charge of the state labor bureau, is in Bismarck busily engaged with his new duties.

Bismarck Typographical Union so far has been fortunate in the draft drawing, not having lost a member.

We see in the July number of THE JOURNAL, in the Grand Forks correspondence, that they are heartily against the Nonpartisan League, although nearly all the unions in the state are for it, and the state federation endorsed the league policy.

Those who did not read the article in the July issue of THE JOURNAL, "Benefit of Union Membership," page 78, should glance over the article; it is worth reading. RALPH H. SPINK.

PHOENIX, ARIZ.

At the regular meeting for August Clyde L. Timberlake was unanimously elected president to succeed Ben F. Wood, who tendered his resignation because of absence during the summer. J. W. Sims was elected recording secretary, H. D. Wilson having moved to Richmond, Va. C. S. Nesse was chosen to fill Mr. Wood's place in the allied council. C. C. Williams acted as financial secretary in the absence of C. E. Tracy, who was in attendance at the convention of the state federation of labor as delegate from the Typographical Union. The executive committee reported it was thought arrangements could be made by officers of the local and employers who are parties to signed contracts whereby any employe called to the colors by means of voluntary enlistment or the selective draft will be reinstated in his position if upon return he is physically fit to perform the duties. The call on Maricopa county has been greatly increased from the original number because of reapportionment, due to a number of the mining counties being composed largely of alien foreigners. Under this arrangement it seems about all of eligible age will be called, and as the younger printers especially are quite husky boys, there is little doubt many will see active service. The first to place himself in readiness is William P. Doheney, who resigned the editorship of the Arizona Labor Journal. Secretary C. E. Tracy was appointed by the board of control of the state federation to succeed Mr. Doheney. The membership voted to continue the fight against unfair theaters and the five-dollar fine for attending them, which has been in effect for some time, stands. Curt Miller, of Temple, and C. A. Reed, of Glendale, were obligated, and Mrs. Ruby R. Watson, of Mesa, was elected to membership. A letter from the secretary of the American Federation of Labor was read to the effect that the matter of deporting laborers from Bisbee, Ariz., would be taken up with the proper authorities at Washington.

A very good report was presented by J. W. Sims, secretary of the allied council. Ten dollars was voted in aid to the State Federation of Labor.

At a special meeting on August 15 the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, the Arizona State Federation of Labor, in recent convention, condemned the I. W. W. activities in this state, thereby adopting the same policies toward that organization as long ago adopted by the International Typographical Union; and,

Whereas, Bisbee Typographical Union No. 766 has wired President Scott as follows:

"BISBEE, ARIZ., August 10, 1917.

"Marsden G. Scott, Union Printers Home, Colorado Springs, Colo.:

"The Arizona State Federation of Labor has gone on record as favoring I. W. W. activities in this state. As our constitution does not recognize the I. W. W. as organized labor and as we do not uphold I. W. W. action here, we desire to withdraw from the state federation of labor.

"Kindly advise us in this matter by wire at once.

"BISBEE TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION No. 766.
"JOHN G. HOCK, President
"FRANK ARAIZA, Secretary."

Whereas, By such action Bisbee Typographical Union has placed the Arizona State Federation of Labor in an unfavorable light before the International Typographical Union and has placed odium upon typographical unions and the various craft unions composing the state federation of labor; therefore, be it

Resolved, That Phœnix Typographical Union No. 352 endorses and upholds the state federation of labor in its policy toward the I. W. W.; and, be it further

Resolved, That Bisbee Typographical Union be no longer recognized as a legitimate organization; that it be classed as the various mining company controlled organizations seeking to destroy organized labor in Arizona; and, be it further

Resolved, That the International Union be hereby petitioned to revoke the charter of Bisbee Local No. 766 on the ground of it having ceased to be in accord with labor union principles; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our delegate in the International convention, to the president of the International Typographical Union, to the secretary of the Arizona State Federation of Labor, to the editor of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, to the editor of the Arizona Labor Journal, and that a copy of this resolution be spread upon the minutes of this union.

Another member has been accepted on the matrimony call. William Sutterlin and Miss Anna M. Hadsell were married on August 6 at the bride's home, 923 East McKinley street. Dr.

George E. Varney, pastor of the First Baptist church, performed the double ring ceremony beneath a bower of roses and paper boughs in the presence of the relatives and friends. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Idora Hadsell, and the groom by Clyde L. Timberlake. Miss Christine Hadsell, niece of the bride, acted as flower girl. Mrs. Sutterlin is a daughter of B. A. Hadsell, a prominent pioneer, and is a highly esteemed young lady. She was educated in Arizona and taught in the public schools. The groom came to Phœnix seven years ago from Lancaster, Pa., and has been continuously employed as operator on the Republican. After a three-week's trip on the coast they will occupy their home at 9 South Thirteenth avenue. Previous to the wedding the bride's many friends gave a miscellaneous shower and the Republican chapel presented a beautiful set of table linen.

Printing has been quiet the past month and there have been few arrivals. W. S. SWENSON.

MINOT, N. D.

At an adjourned meeting of No. 376, held Sunday morning, August 12, the by-laws were placed on second reading and after some discussions were adopted and now only await the approval of President Scott before going into effect. The most radical change is the raising of the initiation fee from $7.50 to $15.

S. E. Hane, of the Messenger chapel, who enlisted in the army in April, has not been heard from since leaving Minot and is supposed to be "doing his bit" in France. Gus Anderson has returned to his old "sit" at the News chapel and G. E. Munger and Ben Schroeder turned in their slips and left the News chapel for new pastures.

State of trade at this writing is dull, and subs are not in demand.

Secretary S. E. George is planning a trip east in the near future and expects to eventually land in St. Paul. The boys are wondering how we will get along without our genial secretary, who has rendered faithful service for many moons.

GREAT FALLS, MONT.

The annual wayzgoose of this local for 1917 has passed and nothing remains but fond remembrances of the day. It is still a long time before the outing of 1918, but owing to the fact that the state goes dry on January 1, 1919, the boys are already planning a celebration that will eclipse all others.

Charles G. Crago, assistant foreman on the Tribune, while spending his vacation whipping Belt creek for the elusive trout, received a telegram from Wheeling, W. Va., calling him to the deathbed of his father, who was one of the leading professors of his state. This was Mr. Crago's first trip to his home in many years.

Richard Straub, machinist on the Tribune, and Harold Dibb, operator on the same sheet, have just returned from a ten-days' hike through Glacier National park. The two walked about 110 miles while on their trip through the park and were in a blizzard near Gunsight pass, which they claim was the worst they have ever observed. One of the chalets at which they were to have stopped over night was completely wrecked by an avalanche before they reached it.

S. W. ("Dad") Brackett, who has been a member of this local for the last thirty years, is now entitled to the old age pension and is wearing a broad smile these days. He has been "too stiff" to follow the trade to any extent for some time past and the pension will be a great help to him.

E. S. Epley, a member of the Tribune job force, is spending a few weeks at Stevensville, Mont.

L. W. WENDT.

COLUMBIA, S. C.

The most important matter in the labor movement in this section since my last letter was the annual convention of the South Carolina Federation of Labor, held in this city on August 13 and 14. At the opening session addresses were made by the following gentlemen: A. A. Gerald, for the city federation of trades of Columbia; L. A. Griffith, mayor of Columbia, for that city; Andrew J. Bathea, lieutenant-governor of South Carolina, in behalf of the state, and C. A. Thompson, of Charleston, for the state federation. Governor Richard I. Manning was prevented from attending because of the death of a grandchild. Mrs. Harriett Lynch, of Cheraw, state president of the equal suffrage league, made an instructive address in behalf of that movement.

In South Carolina there is an organization of farmers known as the Farmers' Secret Association. It sent six fraternal delegates, and a platform of principles, some of which were endorsed. The debate on the floor of the convention was spirited on these matters. The report concluded with the following significant paragraph, which was adopted:

> This federation does not approve of these recommendations being used to promote political success of any man or body. We stand for these principles and this endorsement does not include political support to any candidates or parties.

The following platform of principles was adopted:

> That a free schoolbook law be enacted, these books to be printed in South Carolina, if possible.
>
> That a provision be made for six factory inspectors, instead of two as at present, and that a sufficient amount be appropriated to make inspections twelve months, instead of ten as at present.
> That the minimum fine for violation of the child labor law be increased to $50.
>
> That the minimum fine for violation of law regulating hours of women in mercantile establishments be increased to $50.
> That the present law be amended so as to limit the hours of labor of women to ten hours a day.
>
> That a state labor bureau be established.
> That a law be enacted requiring that all schools shall be opened for at least seven months in each year.
>
> That the question of woman suffrage be submitted to the vote of the people.
> That the race segregation law be amended so as to affect all manufacturing industries.
>
> That a law be enacted providing for the examination and licensing of operators in moving picture houses having a seating capacity of over 200.
> That a law be enacted providing for medical inspection of schools.

The federation went on record as endorsing a bill that the wage scale of females in all branches of business be the equivalent of male.

A minimum wage for women clerks in South Carolina, and that all establishments shall have stools placed in them for clerks, and the establishments shall be kept in sanitary condition and shall be properly heated, was likewise endorsed.

The federation favored a workingman's compensation law, in case a person is hurt working for any corporation he be given or paid whatever rate he was receiving from the time the accident occurred until he is given a certificate from his doctor to return to work.

The following resolution, introduced by John L. Davis, representing Typographical Union No. 34, of Columbia, was adopted:

Whereas, It has been conclusively proven that long hours and the breakdown of legal standards for the protection of women and children means a breakdown in health and an increase in industrial accidents; and,

Whereas, There is danger that in the present excitement the public may lose sight of the importance of maintaining the educational and labor standards which have slowly grown up in this state and which are an essential bulwark of democracy; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the South Carolina Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, protest emphatically against any attempt to lower educational standards or to weaken the laws safeguarding the workers, especially the women and children, and that we do all in our power to maintain and establish the one day of rest in seven, the eight-hour law, factory, fire and sanitary laws, as well as guard all other laws enacted for the protection of women and children in industry.

The federation favored a South Carolina law making members of all legislative bodies amenable to the initiative, referendum and recall.

After adjournment on the last day of the convention the delegates enjoyed a barbecue at Irwin park.

On August 10 Mrs. A. C. Sowers died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. S. J. Grube. The deceased was 69 years of age and had been ill several months. She was a native of North Carolina, but had resided in Columbia for the past eighteen years. Her friends and acquaintances regret her demise. J. P. Sowers, president of Columbia Typographical Union No. 34, received expressions of sympathy from many members of the labor movement here. A delegation from our union acted as pallbearers at the funeral.

TOM F. MACNALLY.

DULUTH, MINN.

Members of No. 136 to the number of six were called in the first draft, and at this time it is not known just how many will finally be accepted for service.

S. M. Harrison decided there was not much choice between war and handling the bank on the night shift of the News-Tribune, so he joined the national guard, and will soon be on the way to Deming, N. M.

Officers and committees are busy on the label propaganda which is beginning to show some results here. The voluntary appearance of the label on the back page of the Duluth News-Tribune is a big encouragement to the members looking after this portion of the union's affairs.

Upon the recommendation of the relief committee, the laws committee was instructed to bring in for referendum an amendment providing for an increase of 50 cents in the local dues. For many years past No. 136 has maintained a sick fund by setting aside 20 per cent of the local receipts for relief purposes. During the past three years, however, the expenditures have exceeded the receipts by such an amount that the fund is nearly depleted. Being reluctant to discontinue this benefit, the membership may decide to increase the dues and place the added amount in the relief fund.

Gus Winberg, president of the Minnesota State Federation of Typographical Unions, was again a visitor at our last meeting, and presented a comprehensive outline of the work of that body during the past year and sketched the plans for its work during the coming one.

J. J. Anderson reported on the meeting of the state federation of labor. His report, well received by the union, told of the deflection of fifty delegates who were dissatisfied with the manner in which the so-called reactionaries managed the convention. His report further stated that the convention accomplished absolutely nothing in the way of constructive work for the benefit of the Minnesota unions.

One apprentice member and two new members were initiated at our last meeting. Arrivals and departures are few.

Work on the city directory will start the first of September, one month later than usual. The book and job end is quiet at the present writing, with work fair on the newspaper end.

WILLIAM E. TOWNE.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

The allied trades secretary, William Laun, reports the granting of the label to the Chicopee Journal Publishing Company, situated at Chicopee Falls. There is no such paper as the Chicopee Journal now, that paper going out of existence some years ago, but there is a flourishing job office in the Falls which bears that name, in charge of Mrs. Cassie Buyse, a former member of this local. Here is published the Hampden County Adviser, a paper devoted to the interests of farmers, and a weekly newspaper. The principal revenue to the plant is derived from job printing, however, of which there is a goodly quantity produced each month. The label negotiations have been going on for several months with the above happy result. A contract has been signed for a linotype machine and the composition for the papers will be done at home in the near future.

Lewis Maxwell Thompson, one of our sailor boys, reports that he has had a siege of hospital life, trouble having developed with his legs owing to the unaccustomed training. A minor operation was performed and Mr. Thompson hopes to be about before this letter is in print. Charlie Specht, the other sailor, paid a flying visit to the city the other day to attend his brother's wedding. It is understood that Charlie is now at sea and we are eagerly looking forward to some news from him from the other side soon.

Lincoln McAuley writes from a training school in New York city that he, with several hundred others, is undergoing a course of materia medica, anatomy and several "ologies," and that the course for the naval medical course is extremely stiff. He expected to be at school until the middle of September, after which his movements were uncertain.

Mention should be made of the change of ownership of the Daily News job print, a lease of which has been acquired for five years by James Lynch, owner of the Sprinifield Tribune, which he recently purchased from Tom English, and H. Hourihan, an advertising expert from Hartford. There is much mystery at the time of writing as to details, but it is understood that the shop will continue to be run on a union basis and that there will be no change in the personnel.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

The July meeting of No. 6, which was poorly attended, disposed of quite a lot of important business. Sixteen new members were obligated. A resolution presented by Peter J. Corcoran, to make a change in a section of the election law, was amended by John C. Maher to have a committee appointed to revise the whole law. President Rouse named Fred N. Cornell, John C. Maher and Peter J. Corcoran.

By a vote of the union, those joining No. 6 after September 1, 1917, will have to pay an increase in their initiation fee. New members over 22 years, $15; reinstatement fee will be $27. No change has been made for probation applicants, or those joining as full members at the age of 21.

The application for admission to the Union Printers Home of Michael Honan was endorsed.

The following applications for the old age pension were also endorsed: Henry Wier, Mortimer Milhollen, Henry Wooster and Hugh McKenna.

The convention of the New York State Federation of Labor will be represented by three delegates from No. 6—Clark Pierce of the New York Times, Fred McCann of the Morning Telegraph and Chester Fox of the Brooklyn Standard Union.

The intense heat during the latter part of July brought much suffering among some of our members, especially the night workers. Several of the book and job plants closed down and subs on the newspapers were as scarce as trenches on Park Row, much to the surprise of some of the regulars who pictured a night at the beach better than two payments to the Morris plan.

As a fitting tribute to the memory of the late Everett Glackin, president and secretary of No. 6 during the '80s, it was decided to hold a memorial banquet some Sunday afternoon in October and confine the attendance to those associates and admirers of Glackin who went through many union battles for that honest and conscientious leader. This notice is written with a view of reaching Glackin's old-time friends so that they may be able to communicate with any of the following men if they desire to participate: Robert Deery, S. Oppenheimer, John Crammond, James M. Donohue, Charles L. Kojan, John Tolan, Joe Hazzard, Owen Kindelon, H. L. Williams, B. J. Hawkes, Peter Flanagan, William Lenahan, William E. Boselly, and Nate Newman. The dinner will probably be held at the Broadway Central Hotel and the price of tickets not more than $2.50.

The Query club held its annual outing at Garfield, N. J., on July 29, introducing a new feature in selecting a mountain side for the event, which was largely attended. The scenery and general good time made many forget about the long trip they made to reach the grounds. John McParland, the chairman, aided by the rest of the committee, deserve great praise for their pains in making the affair a success.

Through the courtesy of H. Hipkins, the Rural New Yorker has been placed on the Union Printers Home list. Many of the numerous magazines published could reach the Home if the same interest was taken.

During one of the recent storms on Long Island the home of Secretary O'Connell was struck by lightning. Fortunately none of the members of his family was hurt.

The New York and Boston typo baseball teams, which played a game at Ebbets field for the benefit of the Sun tobacco fund on Tuesday, August 6, resulted in a defeat for the home team, the score being 9 to 1. John K. Tener, president of the National Baseball League, sent a telegram expressing his regret at not being able to attend. Ervin Wardman, vice-president of the Sun Publishing Company, volunteered to pitch the first ball, much to the delight of those present. Many other athletic feats were on the program, and with the musical selections rendered by Shannon's band, kept the crowd well entertained. Three hundred and sixty-eight dollars was generously contributed, which will be turned over to the Sun tobacco fund to buy smokes for our soldiers in France.

The committee appointed to revise the newspaper scale is meeting once a week and requests cooperation from any one with suggestions that will aid the members in their work. The committee is composed of the following: S. Oppenheimer, chairman; Chester Fox, secretary; Dan A. Dooley, E. H. Edwards, L. M. Grummond, George W. Morris and Louis S. Seijas.

The following deaths occurred since the last report: George Adrat, H. P. Brainard, Julia Fox, John E. Wesley, Charles A. Bowley and Adolph Reimers.

HORACE W. MASON.

MANCHESTER, N. H.

The printing business in this section just at present is rather quiet. There have been numerous changes in personnel of the several composing rooms recently. R. C. Bonier, who has been with the Rapid Mailing Bureau for some little time, left that office to accept a situation in the job department of the John B. Clarke Company, and Arthur Howard left the Mirror and is subbing in the ad alley of the Union-Leader. Charles Wilson, who has recently come to this city from Concord, is now employed in the printing department of the Rapid Mailing Bureau, while Nat J. Spead, also from Concord, is working on the night side of the Union-Leader. John Broderick, of the Mirror office, has a ten weeks' leave of absence, during which he is assisting Leslie Ellis in getting out the vacation paper known as "Among the Clouds" and published at Mount Washington. William Arnold, assistant day foreman of the Leader, is spending a part of the vacation season on his farm in Goffstown.

Isaac R. Brown, machinist-operator on the night side of the Union-Leader, who has been ill, is somewhat improved, and Oscar Mannke, who has been out since early in the summer on account of illness, expects to report for duty within a few days. Harold Thompson has finished his five years' apprenticeship, being the first one in this city to go the long route, and is now a full-fledged journeyman. Mrs. A. T. Wallace, of Boston, Mass., is at present employed in this city, subbing for Mrs. Helen Russell Bignell in the Mirror office.

A delegation from this city accepted an invitation from the Boston Printers' Baseball Association to be its guests on the occasion of the Boston-New York game at Boston, August 14, and report a most delightful trip. They were taken on a sightseeing tour about the city, visiting many of the historical places with which Boston is so richly endowed. They lunched at the Clarendon and then were taken to Fenway Park, where a program of sports was given. These were followed by the ball game, at the end of which was a fine exhibition drill by several companies of Uncle Sam's boys. After the game autos were taken for a drive along the South Shore to Paragon Park, where dinner was served in the Palm Garden. The various attractions of the park were visited during the evening, and shortly before midnight the return trip was made to the city. Tuesday morning the visitors were taken for a brief trip along the North Shore, stopping at Bass Point for luncheon, visiting also Marblehead, Swampscott and Revere Beach en route. Those who went from this city were R. H. Folland, Harold Thomson and the writer.

It is doubtful if there is a paper in this section of the country that has a larger percentage of its force in Uncle Sam's service than the Union-Leader of this city. More than a dozen have joined the colors, and the boys have chosen many different branches, including cavalry, infantry, aviation, hospital, marine, navy, besides several who went in early and joined the Canadian forces before the United States went in. FRED T. IRWIN.

NOTES FROM UNION PRINTERS HOME.

John Dingell, a former resident of the Home from Detroit Mailers' Union No. 40, was a visitor during July.

Mrs. Anna Gibson, member of Denver Union No. 49, was here July 8 to visit her husband, Harold O. Gibson, resident from Calgary (Alberta) Union No. 449.

Mrs. Thomas Evans and Mrs. Roger D. Geary, of St. Louis, wives of operators on the Globe-Democrat, are in the Springs on a vacation.

W. E. (Ed) Brown, Seattle Union No. 202, visited the Home July 24. This was the first time he ever saw the institution, and to say that he was pleased, as well as greatly astonished at its magnitude, would be putting it mildly. Ed was on his way home after an extended visit to friends in the middle west.

Many of the readers of these letters from the Home have no doubt had more or less experience in running country newspapers. They are quite familiar with that class of pestiferous friends a country editor and publisher has to contend with, many of whom have to be pacified, and mollified, and crucified, in order to maintain his (the editor's) self-respect and the dignity of a man who is supposed to be capable of managing his own business. It is astonishing to find what a vast number of persons there are in the country who know what to put into the columns of a newspaper better than the editor does; who know just what to say and just how to say it; who are forever giving the suffering editor advice as to how all subjects of importance should be treated, how social and religious questions should be handled, whose little private affairs should be mentioned and whose should be ignored, and a thousand and one other little frivolous affairs in which nobody under the sun could possibly be interested except those who want the editor to run his paper according to their own selfish sentiments. A parallel to all these annoyances can be found, but in a more restricted sense, perhaps, in an institution like the Union Printers Home, where every resident (speaking comparatively) is a superior person—if judged alone by his or her own mental endowments—and is eminently qualified to advise what your correspondent's letters to THE JOURNAL should and should not contain. How many persons there are here who know just how an institution of this character should be run, I would hardly dare say. Nor, indeed, would I enumerate the capable persons who could conduct the affairs of government, state or national, better than those who are elected to handle them, for fear my estimate would be altogether too small. The only thing, therefore, that I can see to do and keep my "health," is to sail in shallow surroundings, never be tempted to range in the fields of giant intellects, but to work out my poor little stunts as it seemeth right and proper. So, whoever wants to advise me as to how my work should be done, or who I should mention in my Home personals and who I should not mention, the least I can do is to believe all wise counsels are kindly offered and thank my counselors generously for lending me their superior wisdom.

Thursday, July 19, was a memorable date to at least one resident of the Home. That is Miss Genevieve Gariepy, member of "Big Six," as the day was the anniversary of her birth. She gave a party to her friends that evening in the summer house on the croquet grounds, at which light refreshments were served, singing and story-telling of personal experiences were indulged in, and congratulations and good wishes offered. Miss Gariepy is quite a sport herself, notwithstanding her continuous membership in her union of twenty-five years. She joined the burro racers at the Home picnic on July 25 and rode an animal called "Big John" (a name familiar to all union printers in New York), and the way she handled the noble beast was wonderful indeed and a caution to all onlookers.

H. Augustin, member of No. 16 and employed by Rogers & Hall, job printers, Chicago, visited a friend of his, Louis Wenzel, a resident of the Home, the latter part of July.

Mrs. C. Burnett and her daughter Helen, of Indianapolis, Ind., and Eugene Worland, of Denver, cousins of Miss Clara Worland, resident from Typographical Union No. 1, visited the Home July 26.

Miss Laura J. Philbrick, sister of the Home bookkeeper, Miss Mildred Philbrick, after enjoying a week's visit here, the latter part of July, returned to her home in Superior, Wyo.

The residents of the Home who drew "prizes" in the selective draft lottery recently, were: J. C. Barth, Pittsburgh Union No. 7; A. D. Anderson, El Paso Union No. 370; Paul M. Coss, Waukegan Union No. 294; Alex Gordon, Winnipeg Union No. 191, and J. Hartney, Ottawa (Can.) Union No. 102. Of course, these young fellows will be exempted on physical examination, but the fact that their names were drawn out along with a million others shows the thoroughness and absolute fairness of the selective system adopted by the government. R. L. Henry, teamster at the Home, and two painters were also conscripted.

The annual picnic at Stratton park, given by the management to the residents of the Home and their friends, occurred Wednesday, July 25. The day was ideal and the spread was tempting and elaborate, enjoyed by at least 200 persons. The committees, consisting of Messrs. Gordon, Deneau and Thousand, arrangements committee, and Finger, Cook, Barber and Guth, committee on sports, spared no pains in making it an event worth while. One of the features of the day was the fife and drum corps furnished by Messrs. Jacques and Cosgrove. After luncheon the sports were indulged in, which consisted of five events, as follows:

Watermelon eating contest for men—Winner, H. Horowitz, silk tie; second, J. L. Losh, pair silk hose. Same, for women—Winner, Miss Helen Ross, pair gold pins; second, Miss Cecelia Daley, patriotic tie.

Hat trimming contest for men (ladies' hats)—

Winner, A. E. Carlson, gold stick pin; second, H. F. Gordon, silk tie.

Peanut race—Winner, Mrs. M. M. Cherry, gold crescent pin; second, Mrs. H. Alexander, silk handkerchief.

Blindfold contest for men—Winner, G. B. Wheeler, briar pipe and half-pound tobacco; second, W. H. Jacques, half-pound box tobacco. Same, for women—Winner, Miss N. Anderson, collar piece; second, Miss Helen Ross, crepe de chine handkerchief.

Burro race for men—Winner, W. E. Toomey, leather belt; second, John Graham, pair cuff links. Same, for women—Winner, Miss M. Brown, fancy collar piece; second, Miss E. Duxstad, patriotic tie.

R. B. Miller, of Des Moines Union No. 118, and a friend of Resident J. A. McDonald, was a visitor at the Home in July. He was greatly pleased with everything he saw and heard.

B. S. Stearns, delegate to the convention from Honolulu (H. I.) Union No. 37, arrived here July 30, after a 3,400-mile trip from the islands in mid-Pacific ocean. He breakfasted at the Home and then went to Denver to greet old friends and former acquaintances, and then visit his former home in the state of Kansas, returning in time to take his seat in the convention, August 13. While here he presented our library with a number of publications concerning the Hawaiian Islands, printed in Honolulu, which for artistic beauty and perfection are only equaled by the best trade journals. Mr. Stearns is the first delegate that has ever been sent to International Typographical Union conventions from our far-away insular possessions.

J. W. ("Buck") Allerton, Home resident from Pittsburgh Union No. 7, was a prize winner in the display advertising contest held in July by the Scholtz Drug Company, of Denver. "Buck" is some artist.

H. W. Gragg and family, of Coffeyville, Kan., friends of G. W. May, resident from Coffeyville Union, were visitors at the Home during the latter part of July. They were on their way to the Pacific coast by auto conveyance.

During the severe thunder storm of July 19, a valuable young Holstein cow belonging to the Home dairy herd was killed by lightning. The animal was estimated to be worth $160.

S. M. Downer, half-brother of Resident J. A. McDonald, Mrs. McDonald and daughter were visitors at the Home the fore part of July. "Mac" took an auto trip with them to the summit of Pikes Peak, and he declares that it carried them all to a point nearer heaven than is generally reached by few printers. Mr. Downer is connected in a business way with the Omaha Bee.

The following excerpt from the Houston (Texas) Daily Post of a recent date is too good to be lost under the dust of oblivion and is therefore copied here that it may be perpetuated in the columns of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL and preserved in the archives of the International Typographical Union. The number of union printers mentioned as being in the army fighting for the establishment of a universal democracy is evidently meant for those enlisted in the Canadian contingent under the British flag, for since the entry of the United States in the great conflict there must certainly be close on to a thousand more:

The union printers of America are doing their share for the preservation of liberty. With 600 members of the International Typographical Union in the ranks of the allies and forty-two already dead on the field of battle, that organization will never be accused of harboring any slackers among its members. The typographical union is one of the best examples of organized labor and has accomplished inestimable good, not alone for its own members, but for the ranks of labor in every industry in America.

W. W. Wilson, alias "Tug" Wilson, alias "Sheriff," born in Iowa sixty years ago, served his apprenticeship in Cedar Rapids, and by inclination a "Missouri River Pirate," was a visitor at the Home the week before the sitting of the convention. This time he hails from Denver No. 49 and came over just to greet his many friends here, where he was a former resident. Since war was declared the "Sheriff" says he had one opportunity to join the navy—the commander wanted his voice to be used as a megaphone. He wouldn't accept the job, however, as the discipline was too severe and the menu of the service didn't include anything to drink outside of distilled water, coffee and grape juice; besides, he was getting too old for strenuous duty.

George O. Musser, delegate to the convention from Muncie (Ind.) Union No. 332, and son of Capt. William A. Musser, resident from Cincinnati Union No. 3, greeted his father affectionately the week before the convention. The latter is still confined in the hospital, but this visit seemed to cheer him up wonderfully.

The Home grounds and buildings were gaily decorated with bunting and lighted with three thousand electric lights the week before the convention in honor of the delegates and visiting members from all over the United States and Canada. The barbecue dinner was served under mammoth tents erected just south of the lawns, under which tables and seats were placed sufficient to accommodate 2,500 persons.

Sam Avery, formerly of New York and a very much traveled young man, deposited his card in our local union the forepart of August, showing up in the newspaper composing rooms for work. In the early part of 1914 Mr. Avery left New York city and went to Paris, where he worked some months on the Paris edition of the New York Herald, studying the French language in the meantime. At the breaking out of the war he started for Australia via the Suez canal and spent several months on the trip, stopping over in various cities on his itinerary to work a few weeks and take observations. Arriving in Australia, he spent a year traveling all over that continent and New Zealand, working in all the cities and taking notes of what he saw and heard there. Then he departed for Honolulu, where the flag of his own country floated proudly, welcoming him back home again although he was distant near six thousand miles from his birthplace. After some weeks spent in the islands he took passage for San Francisco, the metropolis of the Golden West and the home of beautiful women. Early in the summer he came to Denver, from whence, after a season of toil he came over to the Springs to stay until after the convention. He will then depart on the last leg of his journey and get back home in New York after an absence of nearly three years. Mr. Avery is a young man, an interesting talker, and will some day, no doubt, put his experiences in concrete form to help make history.

During the month ending August 14 there were 2,662 visitors registered at the Home, including the union printers already mentioned in this letter and perhaps five hundred more who were here to attend the convention—altogether too numerous to name separately. August 15 was Printers Home day, when at least two thousand visitors partook of the hospitalities of this great institution.

Mrs. Daniel F. Keenan, member of New York Union No. 6, came all the way from "Little Old New York" to visit her husband, who is a resident of the Union Printers Home from Big Six, and feast her eyes on Nature's grandeur as displayed in the "Roof Garden of the World." She accompanied the New York bunch to the convention.

"Christmas at the Home," is the title of a poem printed in this year's convention souvenir by Oscar Langford, resident from St. Louis Union No. 8, and pronounced by competent critics as containing unusual merit. Mr. Langford is a natural born psalmist; in fact, he seems just full of poetic "eflutus" (whatever that may be), which, it is feared by many of his friends, will carry him away bodily some day into the realms of song and celestial melody.

The following are the vital statistics as they appeared on the records of the Home for the six weeks ending August 14, 1917:

ADMISSIONS.

James Cosgrove, New York No. 6; age 61 years; admitted July 11.

Robert T. Fitch, Blue Grass No. 189; age 40 years; admitted July 13.

Anton Ciz, Chicago Bohemian No. 330; age 43 years; admitted July 22.

J. H. Hanson, Pueblo No. 175; age 71 years; admitted July 29.

W. F. Driffill, Tri-City No. 107; age 35 years; admitted July 29.

F. B. Belcher, St. Louis No. 8; age 25 years; admitted July 30.

Lonnie Adams, Fort Worth No. 198; age 47 years; admitted July 30.

William Cotter, Cincinnati No. 3; age 34 years; admitted August 1.

Joseph S. Price, Chicago No. 16; age 55 years; admitted August 1.

Steve Buchovecky, Chicago No. 16; age 28 years; admitted August 1.

H. J. Gaither, Beaumont No. 339; age 40 years; admitted August 1.

A. F. Taysum, Provo No. 750; age 56 years; admitted August 1.

H. F. Burnham, New York No. 6; age 74 years; admitted August 2.

T. O. Lovendale, Hot Springs No. 574; age 49 years; admitted August 2.

A. B. Squeri, Columbus No. 5; age 28 years; admitted August 2.

H. B. Davis, Atlanta No. 48; age 39 years; admitted August 3.

H. C. Hartel, Buffalo No. 9; age 35 years; admitted August 3.

W. D. Yarrington, Dallas No. 173; age 53 years; admitted August 5.

J. W. Myers, San Francisco No. 21; age 44 years; admitted August 5.

Lynn F. Brooks, Imperial Valley No. 707; age 32 years; admitted August 6.

William K. Rutter, San Francisco No. 21; age 57 years; admitted August 8.

Samuel Sherman, Boston No. 13; age 81 years; admitted August 11.

Winston Hall, Santa Cruz No. 589; age 35 years; admitted August 11.

George E. Paige, Peoria No. 29; age 61 years; admitted August 12.

VACATED.

Thomas J. O'Gorman, New York No. 6; age 55 years; vacated July 9.

Edward U. McClellan, Chicago No. 16; age 45 years; vacated July 14.

Glen B. Russell, Saginaw No. 50; age 31 years; vacated July 21.

Edmund C. Palmer, New York No. 6; age 73 years; vacated July 25.

William H. Beck, San Francisco No. 21; age 57 years; vacated July 31.

William H. Coneen, New York No. 6; age 27 years; vacated August 10.

George E. Locker, Lincoln No. 209; age 44 years; vacated August 10.

EXPELLED.

A. Gordon, Winnipeg No. 191; age 25 years; expelled July 27.

DIED.

William R. Wade, Chicago No. 16; age 79 years; died July 3; nephritis.

C. W. Adams, Toronto No. 91; age 25 years; died July 15; meningitis.

Charles B. Harris, San Antonio No. 172; age 43 years; died July 26; spontaneous pneumothorax.

Mrs. W. C. Hoe, formerly Miss Paulsgrove, a former Home stenographer, was temporarily employed here during convention week assisting in the office work. B. F. SMYTHE.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

When Watts returns from Beadle Lake and Baleski returns from his annual visit to Grand Rapids, the boys of No. 429 will have completed their vacations for 1917. "Pep" Bibbins is again on the job after a brief visit to the farm. It might be said that this is "Pep's" first vacation since last May. "Dutch" Neller, after spending a week at Fine Lake, says the cheapest way to get fish is to buy them, and he is by no means alone in his belief.

The newspaper business is very good for August. In fact, better than ever before. Both the Morning Journal and Enquirer-News are planning new machines. This, of course, goes to show that business is above the average. Job work is as good as could be expected at this time, but not at all rushed. MILTON H. MAURER.

PORTLAND, MAINE.

The time, September 16; the place, Unity Hall, Pythian Temple; the occasion, the meeting of No. 66 after a three months' vacation, one of vital interest to every member. Let us all plan to be there. If you are a member of No. 66, this means you!

August 1, Albert H. Brown, of the Express-Advertiser, was married to Miss Adelaide B. Holway, a teacher in the Deering high school, many of Mr. Brown's co-workers being present at the ceremony. The honeymoon is being passed at Ferry Beach, and at their cottage there an auto party from the Express-Advertiser composing room enjoyed their hospitality and incidentally steamed clams (which grow there) and a picnic supper.

Mrs. Maude Sumner Hilton, of Truxton, N. Y., formerly of the Express-Advertiser, was a recent visitor. James M. Ham, a former president of No. 66, who has been working here recently, took out a traveler and left to try his luck on the Providence Journal. Mildred Henley enjoyed a vacation at Old Orchard and Madison; Ida Fichett at Augusta and Lisbon Falls. Harold Grey, with his family, went to East Harpswell, Elizabeth Cronin to Peaks Island. This latter resort, referred to last month, appeared in type as "Peaches" Island, not so great a misnomer as would at first appear, since every island in our famed Casco Bay is a peach. Mrs. Maude Center passed her week off at her home nursing a case of mumps—and they do say her resignation was a negligible quality.

Albert Brewer has returned from a trip to Baltimore and is working on the Argus. Charles Worthen is at Bar Harbor for the summer. Richard Haskell, machinist on the Press, soon leaves to travel for the Lanston Monotype Company. James F. Ray, of the Press, is among those of the second contingent called to Plattsburg.

Howard Cooke, of Springfield, Mass., and George Mooney, of the Boston Post, were recent visitors.

The blueberry picking yarns told by those of our local who have autos in which to reach the plains would sound "fishy" did we not know the fight that is being waged against old H. C. of L., and the thrift evidenced in much canning. Amateur farmers are also displaying the gratifying results of their toil.

Representative Dallas' report in the August JOURNAL is packed with items of interest to the members throughout this district and should be carefully read by everybody. It is hoped that the gratifying results achieved in Lewiston will be duplicated in Bangor in the near future. The women printers, especially, should be in the organization, first for their own good and then to help rather than hinder their men co-workers. Come in, girls, you will never regret it.

A. GILLIATT.

KEOKUK, IOWA.

Emanuel King was initiated as an apprentice member at the July meeting.

G. S. Carver, foreman of the Gate City Constitution Democrat, accompanied by his wife, spent a week at Ottawa, Ill., last month. Albert Kiefer acted as foreman during his absence.

Miss Mary Lee, linotype operator on the Gate City Constitution Democrat, spent two weeks at her home in Creston, Iowa, during July.

No. 68 is represented in the regular army, William Smith having enlisted. The union decided to pay any member's dues who may enlist during the war.

The Gate City Constitution Democrat annual special edition is in process of making at this writing. It will be issued the last of August.

The Sunday Morning Optic, established by Al Hemingway about a year ago, has suspended publication.

Albert Kiefer, Fred Reeve and G. W. Eaton were elected as representatives to the trades and labor assembly.

G. W. EASTON.

MOUNT VERNON, ILL.

At a meeting of No. 720 on August 5 we entertained the members under its jurisdiction at Salem and Benton. The attendance was very good, with great enthusiasm shown by all present. The new president, A. L. Wheeler, is proving very successful in his chair.

Business has been so good that both the News and the Register have installed new machines.

Clarence Hall, a former member of this local, had the misfortune recently to get his right foot mashed off while working on the railroad near Mount Vernon.

Lawrence Fulmer, a member of this local, left recently for Arizona, where he will locate on a farm for his health.

So far as is known no member from this local has entered the services of any branch of the government service.

AUBREY CROWDER.

HOUGHTON, MICH.

Business is about the same as reported in our last communication—good.

Eugene Short has taken a position on the Mining Journal at Marquette, and Mr. Tiopelle, of Detroit, a former member of our local, has taken the position formerly held by Mr. Short on the News at Calumet.

John J. Myles, of Fort Dodge, Iowa, has taken the position formerly held by D. W. Colburn on the Gazette.

JOHN RODDA, JR.

MADISON, WIS.

The biggest attendance in many months was brought out at the August meeting of Typographical Union No. 106, when the first discussional, following the union meeting, was held. The local union voted in July to adopt this feature to make its meetings more interesting, and to bring out the entire membership. President Herman Strauss gave a fifteen-minute talk on the Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs.

A committee of three has been appointed to secure a two-dollar per week increase for all printers. Owing to the high cost of living, the members feel that an increase of $2 will not be refused by the employers, and that it is not asking too much. The present scale is $18 for handmen and $20 for operators. A local ice company advertised for drivers at $85 a month. When this wage for unskilled labor is compared with the wage printers receive in this city, one wonders whether a printer is not worth as much as a truck driver.

Vacationitis has struck many members. Misses Eva Zirble, Lillian Dean and Frances Jones have left on a month's auto trip to Mount Sterling, Ill. Miss Alvince Boku is spending a month at Ripley Lake. Frank Schillinger has returned from a two-weeks' vacation on a farm, where he helped with the harvesting. Harry F. Horn has left with Company G for Camp Douglas; he is a member of the supply department.

D. WEISS.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Despite the hot weather, the August meeting was one of the best attended in the past year. The new officers were installed and President Ames appointed his committees for the ensuing term. Rapid strides forward will be made by the local union during the coming year.

For the first time in years the typographical union marched in the Labor day parade.

An item which will bear reprinting appeared in the June issue of THE JOURNAL. The Scranton correspondent mentioned that the Red Cross Christmas seals to be sold this year are being printed by a concern in that city, the Eureka Printing Company, which is unionized in all departments.

The summer months have brought with them a slowing up of business, which, however, is not so pronounced as in some seasons past.

The book and job scale having expired, committees representing No. 10 and the employers are negotiating a new agreement.

W. G. McCormick, make-up on the Herald, is spending his vacation "back home" at Princeton, Ind.

The selective draft has passed E. L. Schneider with a 100-per-cent rating. The entire membership of No. 10 wishes Ernest well in his new field of endeavor.

Charles H. Booth, foreman of the Courier-Journal, has gone to San Francisco and Seattle. He attended the convention at Colorado Springs.

Joseph C. Barrett, of the Herald, is back from a two-weeks' trip to Cincinnati.

George Kennel, ex-anchor man of the Herald bowling team, now on the Cleveland Leader, paid a flying visit to Louisville the past month.

William E. Ott, for over fifty years a union printer, is seriously ill, and fears are felt for his complete recovery.

After a successful summer social season the thoughts of the printer man are turning to bowling. The league will start its third season some time this month. Bowling as a winter exercise can not be equaled and the boys have found that great benefit is derived from it.

R. L. Higgins, of the Courier-Journal, is back from a vacation trip. FRANK P. BURKE.

HAMILTON, ONT.

EVERYTHING GOING UP.

Oh, where, tell me where has the old panhandler gone—
The printer with the sunburnt face we used to dote upon—
With sunny smile he'd greet you at the bottom of the stair,
And, with a flow of adjectives and consequential air,
Would tell of famous journalists he'd met in every clime,
Then calmly, gently, suavely extricate from you a dime?

Where is that modest, genial chap we're wont to rave about,
Who would receive a piece of change with grateful, gladsome shout,
And then, perchance, would spend it on the giver for a drink?
This species of the printer is well-nigh extinct, I think.

The tourist that you meet today is quite another chap,
He seems to think Dame Fortune should just nestle in his lap;
He'll take it as an insult, and may raise a mighty holler,
Unless you dig down in your jeans and give at least a dollar.

The exceptionally high patriotic spirit shown by the International Typographical Union in furnishing men and money to help bring to a speedy and successful termination the European war has been duly commended by the press in this part of the country, the Hamilton Daily Times, Industrial Banner and other journals having laudatory editorials on the subject. While the big local unions of the United States are deserving of praise for the admirable attitude they have assumed, the loyalty, generosity and sacrifice which some of the smaller typographical unions of Canada have displayed during the last three years should not be lost sight of. They have all done, and are still doing, "their bit" unflinchingly, faithfully and well. Hamilton Union not only keeps its many members at the front in good standing, but made a present of $25 to each one from its ranks who has gone forth to serve his king and country.

The distinguished-looking gentleman in the disreputable-looking auto, who might have been seen on any of the highways and byways between this glorious city and "little old" New York about the beginning of last month, was Albert Waite, of the Spectator news department, and just by way of emphasizing the fact that autos are like racehorses —you can never tell the good ones by their looks— he negotiated the entire journey, about twelve hundred miles, without a puncture or trouble of any kind. Some bird, eh?

It may be interesting to learn that T. G. Rothwell, who wrote the chatty letter published in last month's JOURNAL, enlisted in the 120th battalion in this city. "The Parson," as he is familiarly known, hails from Sioux City, Iowa, and dropped into Hamilton when the roll of drums and blare of trumpets were at their hight. He was seized with the martial spirit and consigned the printing business to the hellbox until he had settled affairs with the kaiser.

To fill a vacancy on the allied trades council, Henry Dodd was elected a delegate at the August meeting of No. 129.

Ed DuLong, 35 years of age, who learned his trade on the Thamesville Herald, and has worked on the Chatham Banner, Wallaceburg Herald and Dundas Star, is making application for membership in Hamilton Union.

The printer who once loved to scrap,
Must now keep his chip in his lap;
The old I. T. U.
With striking is through—
Does this mean we don't give a rap?

R. J. ROBB.

PITTSBURG, KAN.

Work at present in Pittsburg is very backward. We have plenty of help to take care of any rush that may hit us in the near future.

A member in our union reported that in the little town of Asbury, Mo., near here, a union label was in use which had been taken there illegally. The writer made a trip to the town and found the label and has taken steps to go after the man suspected of taking it there.

W. L. Sourbeer, H. S. Maple and Philip Harvey arrived and departed. F. H. SWINNEY.

LAWRENCE, MASS.

Business is fairly brisk in this burg and No. 51 has about sixty-four members corralled in its lineup, with all working pretty steadily.

The old fight for the label is progressing rapidly here, and there are many firms getting back some of their advertising literature because it doesn't bear the label, and when our committee follows up the case we find that it was done in a label shop and the compositor had fallen "asleep at the switch." Lawrence is a strong union city and we are gradually but surely impressing on our fifty-eight varieties of nationalities that they should use the label. We don't stop at our own label, but boost all of the craft signs. We have Italian, Syrian, Polish and French offices in town carrying the label, and let it be said right here that they adhere more strictly to the use of the label than we do. Let all members stick the label on every job and let the proofreader mark it off.

The war draft did not hit many of our members, but three or four of them "took the bull by the horns" and enlisted. The union is taking care of them and is proud of them. The latest to go is "Jimmy" Dugan, of the Sun-American chapel, who enjoys the distinction of being the smallest boy in the union, although "Lon" Fectean, who was drafted and accepted, gives him a good run.

"Teddy" Wade dropped into our midst recently and, after a short visit renewing old acquaintances, departed on his way.

No. 51 is contemplating opening regular headquarters and a committee is looking up the matter with a view to securing a location.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

In lieu of mention in the notes of the death of M. R. H. Witter, the undersigned requested Homer A. Danford, of the Globe-Democrat, to write a few reminiscences, which appear elsewhere in this issue. It is safe to say no one is more qualified to do so, having been closely associated with Mr. Witter for many years.

The International Board of Arbitration met at Indianapolis, July 23 to 26, to consider the appeal from a unanimous decision by a local board of arbitration. The hearing was an appeal against the discharge of Albert Sexton by Hugh I. McSkimming, foreman of the Post-Dispatch. After hearing all the evidence, an executive session was held, attended by Dr. Leon Harrison, fifth member of the local board of arbitration, upon his request and by agreement, and it was unanimously decided that the preponderance of evidence was strongly in favor of Mr. McSkimming, and his action in discharging Sexton was approved. The appeal was dismissed and the decision of the local board was sustained. The following gentlemen composed the board: H. N. Kellogg, C. H. Rembold, D. B. Plum, M. G. Scott, W. W. Barrett and Hugo Miller. The cost of the arbitration of this case was $117.70. In payment of expenses, a check for $25 was offered by each side to Rev. Leon Harrison, fifth local arbitrator, which he returned with the following letter:

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 7, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. HERTENSTEIN—I deeply appreciate the spirit and the motive that animated you and Mr. Bradley in sending me the checks that were inclosed in your valued letter. I am sure I hardly need say to you that in my judgment the task of bringing about peace and a better understanding between the men who work and the man who hires the workers should be far removed from such considerations as compensation or any material expression of good will. I am sure you will not misunderstand me if I feel that I must return these various checks to those who so kindly sent them. I feel most privileged in your trust and confidence in thus being asked to discharge judicial functions in a matter of industrial justice and right. I will always be most happy to serve in this capacity and will deem it especially a pleasure to do so, if such service be considered a labor of love.

Very cordially yours,
LEON HARRISON.

William Maxwell Clark, one of our old-age pension members, died July 25, 1917, of Bright's disease after a long illness. The funeral was held Friday, July 27, from Kron's chapel, thence to St. Peter's cemetery. Mr. Clark was born in London, 1844; was initiated August 4, 1867, and for many years worked at Woodward & Tiernan's. Deceased is survived by a widow and son, the latter a member of No. 8.

A decision was made in the case of an employe working a third shift, beginning work at 11 P. M. and quitting at 7 A. M. Under the scale this employe is entitled to the night rate ($5.40) for seven and one-half hours. All overtime would be at the rate of $1.08 per hour.

During the month the following opinion was rendered to the chairman of the St. Louis Times on his question: "Does an enforced idle day, as a holiday, such as the Fourth of July, when the publishers suspend publication, serve to kill a day of accumulated overtime?" If an employe accumulates overtime, he must give it out when it amounts to a day's time. If he lays off, or is laid off, the lay-off operates to cancel accumulated overtime in an amount equal to the lay-off.

The following acrostic by William E. Barclay, of the Post-Dispatch chapel, dedicated to "Our Boys of the Army and Navy," was received a few days ago:

AMERICA.

[Copyright, 1917.]

A-m-e-r-i-c-a! Our home so good,
Melting pot of the Nations' brood—
Erecting a bulwark of Democracy,
Repelling the World's Autocracy—
In Thee we trust!
Columbia's Allies so sorely tried and true,
Await victory with the Red, White and Blue.

Let us reach our hands across the sea,
And enforce the law of Equality,
Nor cease our humane conflict, till our gallant troops so true
Decide to make the tyrants crave a lasting peace with you.

Our emblem, so starry, was born of the Sky,
For its sanction was given by Him—most high.

Let Capital and Labor, with brain and brawn,
Into the trenches leap—in daylight and dawn,
Bring succor and solace to heartbroken friends,
Enduring with courage the War God's base ends—
Respond—we must!
Till the toll of the bell of Liberty
Yeaned all mankind to Fraternity.

CHORUS.

Attention! Forward march! Brave men on land and sea—
We've packed our "kit"—
We'll do our "bit"
On the firing-line for humanity.

The following members have notified Secretary Woods of having joined the army or navy since our last report: Leo J. Fay, E. M. Powers, Paul A. Rickart, Ben Vander Pluym, Edward Vander Pluym, W. C. Heins, Frank R. Coldewe, William M. Schisler, R. S. Maurice and Z. Guilbeault.

The following apprentices have also notified the secretary of joining some branch of the army or navy: Edward Byrd, J. Emmett Lentz, Patrick J. O'Brien, John N. Paige, Edward J. Rovane, Edward T. Sullivan, William G. Spence, A. E. Sexton, William Thompson and John Stragliati.

Journeymen and registered apprentices should notify Secretary Woods before leaving for military or naval service, so that a correct record may be kept by the union.

Chairmen should remember that it is the policy of the International Typographical Union not to register apprentices under 16 years of age, as a boy may leave other employment to accept the apprenticeship and then be forced out of the position, which would work an injustice through not being familiar with our laws.

Among the visitors in St. Louis recently was F. W. Steffen, secretary of Cleveland Typographical Union, who is a member of the school board of that city.

Quite a number of delegates and visitors spent some time seeing St. Louis and the various points of interest while on their way to the convention. All expressed themselves well pleased with the hospitality received in this city. The International officers also were in St. Louis, attending the funeral of M. R. H. Witter while here.

A. D. Scougal, editor of the Hardin County Ledger, Eldora, Iowa, was in St. Louis a few days ago on his way south. He met a number of his old acquaintances, among them being George W. Bradley, who worked with him in Sioux City, Iowa, many years ago.

Walter Foster, of the Globe-Democrat chapel, is much disappointed in not being able to join some branch of the army or navy. He has made application and taken the examination, but without avail, in each of the following branches of service: Navy, marine corps, First regiment Missouri infantry, Battery A, officers' reserve corps, base hospital unit No. 21 and Fifth Missouri infantry. This persistency in trying to serve his country is remarkable and speaks highly of his patriotism. We would like to see others whom we know show this same willingness to go to the front.

At this writing the following members of No. 8 are reported as being sick: M. G. Bromeling, Thomas C. Dugan, H. C. Haysler, Gerard Kimbrell, E. J. Kreppelt, W. H. Pritchard, E. E. Robbins, L. L. Sawtelle and J. M. Young.

The Query club, of New York, with Nate Newman at their head, stopped in St. Louis on their way back from the convention and were entertained at the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company, T. J. McAuliffe representing the brewery. Hugh I. McSkimming, of the Post-Dispatch; Henry Suerig, secretary of the pressmen's union; Lou Reinhardt, secretary of the bookbinders' union, and George B. Woods, secretary of Typographical Union No. 8, assisted Mr. McAuliffe in entertaining them. Members of the club expressed themselves as surprised at the evidence of good-fellowship existing between the officials of the various allied trades, which speaks much for the advancement of closer affiliation.

The Post-Dispatch is now established in its new modern building, the transfer from the old building to the new being made without a hitch, which speaks volumes for the efficiency of the plans, as carried out by Foreman McSkimming. Later probably a description of the composing room will be given in THE JOURNAL notes. WILLIAM BRADBURN.

SAGINAW, MICH.

Glen Russell, who has been a patient at the Home for several months, returned last month greatly benefited. At the last regular meeting Mr. Russell gave the members a very interesting talk about the treatment he received while at the Home and spoke in the highest praise of the way in which the institution is conducted.

George Goodrich, a charter member of Valley City and a pensioner, died on July 10 of heart trouble. Mr. Goodrich was an operator on the News here for years, quitting the business about seven years ago. He was always an ardent worker in the interest of No. 50 and will be greatly missed.

Leeman and Peters' employes picnicked at Wenona Beach last month and report a good time. An unique comic program was issued by the boys to celebrate the event—a credit to our worthy president, A. Marxhausen.

A Labor day celebration was held here this year, the first in several years.

L. H. Swart, a former secretary of No. 50, has drawn a traveler and gone east, expecting to become owner of a paper somewhere in the south.

During the convention of the Michigan Federation of Typographical Unions, held here in June, pictures of the Home were shown at the Palace theater here through the courtesy of Secretary-Treasurer Hays.

About fifteen members of No. 50 had to register for the draft. At present it is not known who will be called to the colors. ALFRED MACDONALD.

ALTOONA, PA.

Altoona is still on the map, as you can all see by the scale which we put through, and you can also read about the time which we had in putting it through. Many thanks to Mr. Corless and the scale committee for their excellent work!

Frank Barr was obligated to membership and also granted the use of the label at our last meeting. Mr. Barr has a job office and we all wish him good luck with the label, hoping for his active part in the future meetings. Arthur Gibbons, of the Altoona Times chapel, was registered as an apprentice.

Three cheers for our new president! Although he is little in hight we expect big things from him in deeds. JACOB F. MENGE.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

The constitution of No. 55 was amended at the August meeting. The amendments adopted were the increasing of the dues 50 cents per month for the benefit of the sick and mortuary fund, 25 cents of that sum being rebated for attendance at meetings, and the establishment of two funds for the purpose of conducting the business of the union, namely the general fund and the sick and mortuary fund. The adoption of these amendments will without doubt place No. 55 on a good, sound financial basis. A donation of $100 was given the Red Cross. At this meeting a purse of $275 was presented by friends to Jerry R. Connolly, delegate to Colorado Springs, and a banquet was tendered him at O'Reilly's cafe in the evening. Two amendments to the International law were adopted by No. 55 and the delegates from this local to the convention at Colorado Springs were instructed to work for their passage. The amendments provided for the headquarters city to be the permanent place for holding conventions, beginning August, 1920, and that the delegates to these conventions by virtue of their office be the president and financial secretary of each local union.

The convention of the New York State Allied Printing Trades Council, held here during July, was the largest and most successful gathering ever held in the history of the organization, and the entertainment provided was, in the opinion of the majority of the delegates, far superior to that provided at many international conventions.

A delegation from No. 55 was at the station on Thursday, August 9, to see the Query club special on its way to Colorado Springs to the convention. The local boys spent a pleasant ten minutes chatting with the boys from "Big Six" and others who were traveling on the special.

Up to this writing No. 55 has furnished three members to the government for service in the world-war.

James Ambrose Scanlon, ad foreman on the Herald, was presented by his friends with a gold chain, knife and pencil at the August meeting of No. 55. No, "Shorty" isn't going to be married, but just a remembrance by his friends for the many good things he has done in the past.

The Syracuse Journal has removed to its new building in Montgomery street. The office is one of the finest in the country. The composing room is well ventilated and there is plenty of daylight. The boys on the Journal were given a banquet by Manager Harvey Burrill previous to their moving to the new headquarters.

Norman G. Sprague, who has served No. 55 as secretary-treasurer for several years, resigned at the July meeting and Mordecai J. Gosnell was elected to succeed him.

George Wegner, a member of No. 55, died during the month. Mr. Wegner had made application to the Union Printers Home, but his illness proved fatal before he could arrange the trip.

Representatives McLoughlin and Kinskey, while in attendance at the recent convention, visited a few plants which have been unfair since the eight-hour strike. Their trip to these printing plants may bear some fruit in the near future.

Organizer Joseph McKimmie of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders was also a delegate to the recent convention. The bookbinders' organization in this city has been out of existence for several years. Mr. McKimmie will soon have the organization going in this city. He expects to visit here soon to finish up the work.

The next convention of the state allied printing trades will be held in Buffalo.

Inasmuch as the editorial reference in the August JOURNAL to the eulogy of the late Thomas J. Carroll, given by Commissioner Lynch at the convention of the New York State Allied Printing Trades Council held in this city in July, contained only fragmentary excerpts that do not give an adequate idea of the beauty and rhythm of the effort, it is reproduced here in its complete form:

THOMAS J. CARROLL.

Born on August 28, 1870; died October 28, 1916. At the time of his death and for several years prior thereto, President of the New York State Allied Printing Trades Council and Stereotypers' Union No. 1 of New York city; delegate from his local union to a number of the conventions of the International Stereotypers' Union, and at several of the conventions chairman of the committee on laws; president of the New York Allied Printing Trades Council; member of the New York Board of Education; loyal to his friends, charitable to those who opposed him. An ideal citizen, father and husband. Survived by a widow and nine children.

"What of the night, watchman? What of the night?"

Thus the question of the ancients, fraught with apprehension, with anxiety, aye with terror. What unseen and deadly enemies lurked without awaiting the opportunity to hurl themselves on the sleeping garrison, the peaceful slumbering village, the army outpost, and spread rapine, destruction and death? The lonely sentinel, pacing his weary rounds hour after hour, may hold within his alertness and his vigilance the fate of an army, the destiny of a nation. On the earnestness and zeal of one of God's ministers may depend the morality of a city, the eternal disposition of many immortal souls. What of the night? How goes it with a nation? Are the people vigilant and jealous of their liberties and their rights? Can they see behind the velvet mask the smirk of treachery and deceit, and under the alluring handclasp the mail-clad fist? For eternal vigilance is as much a necessity now as when it was said to be the price of liberty, and in these times of stress and turmoil it is as necessary to keep the world safe for democracy as it is to make it safe for democracy.

What of the night, you leaders of labor? Is the right to combine safe? May we go on with our usual activities, confident that you our sentinels are pacing your weary rounds, ever wakeful and ever vigilant to the end that the fruit of years of sacrifice and toil may not be pilfered from the tree of organization? No administrator is charged in respect to the guardianship of hard-won progress with greater responsibilities than is the trade-union official. He stands between capital and labor. He mediates on the one side and conciliates on the other. He knows full well that one false step on his part may mean the disruption of his union. He knows temperaments, conditions and obstacles, and he must be prepared and able to as resolutely combat over-confidence and radicalism among his own followers as he will, when convinced that it is necessary, fight with every weapon at his control for wages, hours and conditions. He must be prepared to patiently bear with the malignity, the sneers and the ill-advised opposition of his own people while he steers his ship of state among dangers and difficulties, as well as he must expect to encounter and overcome the promotion of that kind of discontent by those who are often the loudest proponents in the local unions, and eventually found to be in the service and the pay of the very employers with whom the harassed and assaulted labor leader is attempting to negotiate and concurrently maintain industrial peace.

We are met today to revere the memory of one whose whole life in storm and sunshine was one long chapter of unselfish devotion to the cause of the toilers. Employed by us of the printing trade, yet his efforts were by no means confined to that comparatively restricted field. He was ever on duty, making his ceaseless and weary rounds, listening for the cry of distress, prompt with the succor of his aid, his counsel and his advice. With him service in the sacred cause of labor was equally a duty and a creed, and in the rendering of that service he did it with an unselfishness and a spirit that made it a holy offering for the betterment of the conditions of God's people, those who in the sweat of their brows earn their bread. Yesterday's achievements were but an incentive to him to tomorrow's tasks, and each inch of progress won compensated for all of the pain and travail of the tortuous pathway and sharpened the sickle for the clearing out of the impediments to further advance. I know that every man and woman who is charged with responsibilities in the work we do is many times discouraged at the apathy and the indifference so often displayed by those they serve, and that if they counted the cost and the gain day by day few could maintain the courage to continue in the battle. It is only when we look in retrospect on a year, five years, ten years, that we realize the truth of the assertion that the gradual and continual fall of a drop of water will wear away a stone. We know of the conditions that labor was compelled to endure twenty, ten, five years ago. We know from experience of the devastating rigors of the eleven and twelve-hour day, as we also know of the blessings and compensations of the eight-hour day. We know of the petty brutalities and tyrannies of the small-souled boss doing such deeds here below as angels weep to see, and we also know of the manliness and freedom and liberty in the modern workroom in which every employe expects to and is expected to do his work well and conscientiously of his own accord, and not to be driven under the sting and lash of a feudal-like retainer, whose main qualification lies in his ability to drive, and drive by reason of a man's necessities allied with a scarcity of opportunities to labor.

All of these gradations in the upward trend of the economic mercury were familiar to our lamented former president. He passed through them all, and he played a man's part in separating the base from the pure, in the establishment of the truth of the doctrine that a man is a man, whether he works with his hands or his brain; that the object of life is not work but happiness, and that out of work will come happiness if toil is made incidental to life, through the provision for social as well as economic divisions of the day's activities.

We of labor rarely appreciate efforts in our behalf put forth in the lifetime of the individual. Rather are we prone to narrow criticism and unwarranted faultfinding. The smallest whisper of calumny with us soon grows into a mountain of denunciation. Achievement meets with but faint and grudging praise, while failure carries with it quick and lasting repudiation. Of failure, the life of our friend was to an unusual extent free, of criticism he had his share. Few bouquets came his way during his life; in death his grave was covered with nature's choicest blooms. In life only the smiles of his closest friends cheered him on his way, in death the pathway to his last resting place was dewy with tears. In life men oftimes said of him harsh and cruel things; in death voices spoke in awe and wonder of the glory of his work.

But so runs the stream of life. Men and women are much the same, no matter what road they tread, or that the way they walk is carpeted with roses or spread with thorns. In this man's life, however, there was manifested on its going out a spirit that cleansed the record of all that was inconsiderate and unkind. As usual, with those of us of labor who serve, our friend departed this life but poorly endowed with the wealth of the world, except as that wealth was represented in the priceless jewels of his children. And then his friends and those who knew him only by his work awoke. We know the story. It is not the place to repeat it here, except to say that his family has been placed above want; the wolf will not gnaw at that door. And in the other world, where we trust and believe the soul of Tom Carroll rests in eternal peace and happiness, we hope that last great outpouring of friendship and appreciation combined in a substantial testimonial to his loved ones may not be to him unwelcome, that it may be as sweet incense rising as balm from the altar of love and friendship.

Thomas J. Carroll is dead. He passed away in the prime of a life of usefulness and achievement, serving an organization that he loved and that had faith in him. During his lifetime he was a sentinel on the tower, a watchman in the darkest night. His record—made, his duty done, his lifework ended. The book is closed. Others will take his place, and of them we will also ask:

"What of the night, watchman? What of the night?"

The convention decided to print the eulogy of Commissioner Lynch as a separate document suitable for framing purposes. FLORINCE A. TAGUE.

ELIZABETH, N. J.

At the last meeting of No. 150 the apprentice committee reported that two apprentices were ready to take the I. T. U. Course in Printing. No. 150 has made it obligatory that all apprentices have a certificate of graduation from the school before admitting them to full membership.

August has been a very hot month in these parts, although business is very good at present, with every one working.

The Journal has recently installed a monotype caster with the intention of adopting the non-distribution system as soon as the caster has gained sufficient headway to permit. William Sheeran is in charge.

J. L. Saunders, of the Times chapel, has put on a sub for the summer. Mr. Saunders is connected with a vulcanizing establishment and reports that the business requires all his attention.

John Mellick, of the Journal chapel, is spending two months with relatives at Port Washington, Wis. He reports that fishing is fine around there.

C. J. Sawdy has resigned his situation on the Evening Times and reports that he intends to open a job office in the very near future.

Eddie Neubauer, of the Journal chapel, is making a tour of the surrounding states in his auto. Charles Gustafson is covering the situation.

Edward ("Pop") Miller, of the Journal chapel, has put on a sub during the hot months. He is the oldest active member of No. 150, having been at the case for more than fifty years. William Robison is covering the situation.

H. L. JACKS.

KEENE, N. H.

John J. Hudson, our secretary-treasurer, is now at Concord with war comrades who expect soon to be in active service, and this causes a change to be made among our officers, as follows: Aubrey MacWha, president; William Preston, vice-president; Henning Youngdahl, secretary-treasurer.

The Sentinel Printing Company has gone onto a fifty-hour-a-week schedule since June 1. The job force has Saturday afternoon off and the news force quits an hour earlier four days a week. The other plant, which moved here from Boston, still continues the long hours (fifty-two and one-half hours a week).

The co-operative gardens owned by our members have done fairly well in spite of a dry spell of considerable duration. The copious rains recently will doubtless be very beneficial.

IRVING W. STAPLES.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

R. J. Farthing and S. E. Ballou have purchased the linotype machine in the McAndrew office, and are doing work for the trade.

The O. H. Legg Printing Company has moved from the third floor of the Waterbury building to a ground floor location.

W. S. Wrenn recently arrived from Chicago to become foreman of the Federal Printing Company.

Carl Mellin, operator at the Register office, was married on August 1 to Miss Hazel Casson of this city. The honeymoon was cut short by the summons to the groom to present himself at the Great Lakes training station on August 10, he having enlisted in the navy a few weeks previous.

Frank G. Nichols, apprentice member, is the latest to enter the service from here. This gives No. 118 nine journeymen and three apprentices who have volunteered.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Rickert and daughter Bernice, of Waterloo, visited friends in Des Moines on their way to the convention. Mr. Rickert, in addition to representing his union at Colorado Springs, is president of the central labor council and a member of the board of aldermen.

Messrs. and Mesdames W. H. Boyd, C. W. Brown, George D. Riggs, George H. Krukenmeier, Carl K. Smith and C. N. Pumphrey, and O. W. Miller from Des Moines attended the Colorado Springs convention.

The writer wishes to commend the Missouri Valley Typographical Conference to unions within its jurisdiction which have not yet affiliated, having found the secretary prompt and enthusiastic, always willing to co-operate with local secretaries. If you are not acquainted with its work and aims get in touch with Mr. Rhode and give the question of affiliation consideration.

The average member thinks that when he pays his dues to the union, in so far as he is concerned, his duty ceases then and there, and as to giving some of his time or leisure to the affairs of the union, or even grace it with his presence, is time wasted. We have about 110 members of this class. It would be well for all our members to bear in mind that they are cordially invited to attend the meetings at all times. At the last meeting just twenty-two members were present of a membership of 130-odd, notwithstanding the fact that a scale was to be adopted at that meeting.

Don't forget to boost.

Don't forget that you are welcome.

Don't forget there is work to be done and

Don't forget that your services are appreciated.

Paul F. Leary, of the Trenton Evening Times machine force, reported at Fort Myer, Va., August 25, for intensive training. John L. Haney, operator of the same force, enlisted in the aviation corps and is now training at San Antonio, Texas.

Louis Jones, of the MacCrellish & Quigley plant, has been ill for several weeks, and Clyde O. Hines, of the Times force, has been ill of ivy poisoning for some weeks. Both are recovering.

At the state federation of labor convention, held at Paterson, August 20, 21, 22, No. 71 was represented by Benjamin F. Wilson, W. A. Hannum and Reuben Forker.

A new scale of wages was adopted at the last meeting, to become effective October 8.

An effort is being made to bring the state federation of labor convention to Trenton next year.

Lafayette Hooper, foreman of the Trenton Times composing room, has returned from his vacation, which was spent in automobile touring, mainly in the New England states. He covered 2,000 miles and touched eight states.

Work is splendid in this city.

LEON G. BASFORD.

NEW ENGLAND TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.

The past month has been an exceptionally busy one. A number of our members have been called to the colors, thereby making it possible for some of our unemployed to secure work.

The monotype school, conducted under the joint auspices of the Lanston Monotype Company and Boston Typographical Union, has been closed, owing to the inability to interest the members of No. 13 in sufficient number to warrant the continuance of the school.

The New England linotype school, conducted by E. N. Carver, a member of Boston Union, has been closed. Pursuant to an agreement entered into between Mr. Carver and officers of Boston Union and the New England Typographical Union two years ago, none but members of the typographical union were to be enrolled as students in the school. The result of this agreement proves that there is but one place in which the operation of typesetting machines can be taught, and that is in the composing room.

The California State Conference has been disbanded, owing to the inability of unions in that state to send delegates to the conferences. The distance from one end of the state to the other being so great, few unions were financially able to send delegates.

The Inter-Mountain Typographical Conference held a meeting in the city of Colorado Springs on Sunday, August 12. Many delegates to the sixty-third convention of the International Typographical Union were in attendance. Among the speakers was Secretary Murphy, of the New England Typographical Union.

The delegates from New England to the sixty-third convention of the International Typographical Union were assigned to committees as follows: W. C. Trump, of Boston, chairman of the committee on returns and finances; E. N. Cahill, of Lynn, chairman of the committee on provincial, state and district unions; F. S. Dunham, of Springfield, chairman of the press committee; Thomas O'Shaughnessy, of Boston, committee on thanks; Maurice Adler, of Boston, committee on apprentices; Leroy Hetherington, of Boston, committee on federation delegates; J. F. Murphy, of Providence, secretary of the committee on laws.

The Christian Science Monitor chapel, of Boston, and Lynn Union have presented the Union Printers Home with liberty bonds.

The organization committee of New Haven Union is making excellent progress and its work is commendable. Many other locals are laying plans for organization work.

EASTON, PA.

The third annual picnic of the Free Press Publishing Company was held on Monday evening, July 16, at Island Park and the management invited the members of Easton Typographical Union, their wives and sweethearts. An elaborate dinner was served and the amusements at the park were at the expense of the company. The keys to the park were turned over to the Free Press and its invited guests, and the whole affair proved the best yet and the most enjoyable of any given. The ladies of the committee in charge of arrangements, to whom the credit for the success of the outing belongs, were Miss Amy B. Nicholas and Miss Inez Weeden, and they were congratulated on the manner in which they handled this large gathering. Calvin Yonson, the caterer of the park, provided for nearly two hundred guests which was appreciated by all present. The menu included an abundance of good things. Clarence N. Andrews was toastmaster and made a brief speech welcoming the Free Press employes and the members of Easton Typographical Union and guests.

Appropriate souvenirs were presented to Mr. Andrews and Evan Dalrymple, treasurer of the Free Press Company, both of whom were completely surprised. Mr. Andrews received a gold ring, replacing one which was lost some time ago; and Mr. Dalrymple's present was a gold stick pin, set with an opal. The presentation speech was made by W. F. P. Allis, secretary of the Free Press.

Short speeches were made by representatives of nearly all of the printing establishments in this city and Charles Reilly, president of Easton Typographical Union, spoke on behalf of the members of that organization, expressing their appreciation of being asked to participate in such an enjoyable occasion. Mr. Bitting of the Thomas W. Price Company, and David B. Skillman, college reporter of the Free Press, and a member of the Northamption county bar, made appropriate remarks.

At the conclusion of the speechmaking one verse of "America" was sung and everybody present adjourned to the dance pavilion, where Thomas' orchestra furnished music. For more than two hours old and young indulged in every amusement that the park affords.

The relations existing between Mr. Andrews, editor and general manager of this corporation, and organized labor makes us believe he is not only a father to the Free Press, but is one to Easton Union No. 258. CHARLES R. HAGER.

BRISTOL, TENN.-VA.

No. 426 will see to it that none of its members become delinquent while serving in the army during the war. Some of our members have also subscribed for liberty bonds.

Work is only fair, with an abundance of men to supply the demand.

Earnest T. Pippin, of the King Printing Company chapel, has returned from a vacation spent in Indiana.

George W. Hamlet, who was with the McGee Printing Company for several years, is now with the King Printing Company. He is succeeded at McGee's by his son, Charles Hamlet.

The Herald-Courier moved into new quarters, just across the street from its former location, in February, and has an almost entirely new equipment, consisting of a 24-page web press, stereotyping outfit and all the accessories that go to make up a splendidly equipped newspaper plant. It also added a model 14 linotype machine and discarded an old No. 2. P. S. Ezzell deposited a card from Norfolk and is tickling the keys on the No. 14. The composing room is on the second floor and the working conditions and sanitary arrangement are the best that have ever been known in the history of Bristol. Oldtimers say there is not a more sanitary composing room anywhere in the country. It has several large doors and windows, all the machines and smelters are thoroughly piped and a giant oscillating fan in one end of the room plays over the men continuously. JOHN R. DOVE.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

A happy party of twenty persons left here for the Colorado Springs convention on August 6, with "Chief" Dawson at the head of the procession.

President William Young, of Philadelphia Union, and President William Hughes, of Scranton Union, were here in August mingling with their many friends.

Ned Sims, president of Wheeling Union, and John A. Weaver, of the same place, delegates to the convention, came to Pittsburgh to join the people who were in the party bound for the convention.

James P. Bowen, delegate to the convention from Philadelphia, was among the Pittsburghers in the coach on their way to Colorado Springs. "Jim" was handing to his friends an unique card bearing the reproduction of the original check given by George W. Childs to the president of the International Typographical Union calling for $10,000 as a foundation fund to start the movement for a Home for union printers. It was at the convention held in Pittsburgh in 1886 that the president of the International Typographical Union received the check from Mr. Childs.

James Edward Leslie, dramatic editor of the Dispatch, and a member of Typographical Union No. 7, died during the month of August, age 63 years. The following editorial, taken from the Pittsburgh Dispatch, expresses in eloquent terms the kind of a man Mr. Leslie was to those who knew him best:

It is given to few men to have passed three score and to have retained the heart of a boy. Yet that was the happy character of James Edward Leslie, dramatic editor of the Dispatch, who died suddenly yesterday morning, unfailing good humor, unflagging interest in life and the things that make life worth living, an untiring worker because he loved his work. Death came to him as he would have wished it, swiftly and painlessly, as softly as the dropping of the curtain at the end of the play. He was a familiar figure to the theater-going public of Pittsburgh, which had learned to trust his judgment, his honest hatred of shams, his enthusiasm for the good, the true and the beautiful. Among his associates in newspaperdom and in the theatrical world he will long be remembered gratefully. He was one of those rare spirits of whom it can be said it was good to have known him.

David J. Berry, publisher of the National Labor Journal, and a member of Typographical Union No. 7, has been appointed a member of the appeal board, the highest draft tribunal in Allegheny county.

Frank ("Deacon") White, of the Dispatch chapel, is back from a three-weeks' visit to his mother and relatives in southern Ohio.

CHARLES Q. LAFFERTY.

SAN MATEO, CAL.

On Thursday evening, August 2, a number of the members of Typographical Union No. 624 tendered a farewell dinner to Benjamin N. Fryer, who has enlisted with the Masonic ambulance corps of the United States army. Mr. Fryer received orders to leave with others in his unit for American Lake, and as soon as it became known the union decided to give him a royal send-off and farewell.

Secretary L. E. Harris got in touch with as many of the members as possible and as a result eleven printers sat around a large table in the dining-room of the Perichon House, where an excellent dinner was enjoyed. The table was tastefully decorated with flowers and in the center was a stand of colors consisting of the United States flag and two smaller French flags. To make the affair more realistic the napkins were neatly folded into a shape resembling a submarine. The various courses of the dinner were interspersed with a continuous rapid fire of jokes, laughter and the usual "printer's good fellowship."

Mr. Fryer, who is an Australian by birth, came to San Mateo in December, 1915, and took the position of linotype operator on the San Mateo County News, which situation he has held since that time.

There are several members of San Mateo Union, which embraces practically all of San Mateo county, whose names have been drawn for the new national army and still others who have offered their services to the country and may be called soon.

Following the dinner President T. W. Love, of the union, made a short address, and with his usual humor told of the honor that is felt by all in the fact that San Mateo Union is to be represented at the front among the first.

With a few well-chosen remarks, Mr. Sweetser introduced Benjamin N. Fryer, guest of the evening, who told of the aims and ambitions of himself and other members of the unit, and said that there seemed to be a feeling in some quarters that the ambulance men were looking for an easy, safe job, when in reality it is the most dangerous of any branch of the service.

Digitized by Google

Secretary L. E. Harris was next introduced and dealt with the serious side of the service in which Mr. Fryer had enlisted, telling of actual experiences in the Spanish and Philippine campaigns.

The other speakers were A. L. Ham, G. Morris and J. E. Harris. At the close of the meeting all arose and joined in singing "America," what was lacking in harmony being made up in patriotism, which was the note of the affair.

L. E. HARRIS.

PATERSON, N. J.

Ed Hoke left here on August 6 for Philadelphia. He is working on the North American. Michael O'Hearn, from Pittsburgh, spent several weeks in the Silk City recently.

Hugh McKee worked a week on the Morning Call, and departed for pastures new.

Those who attended our picnic had a good time, as did those who attended the session of the New Jersey Union Printers' League the next day.

J. William Jackson, accompanied by Mrs. Jackson, spent a two-weeks' vacation at Sea Gate, Coney Island.

"Mike" Greengrass is nursing a sore finger. The reason: "Trying to talk while running a Merg." He is now the machinist-operator on the Clifton Times.

The executive committee is very busy making some of the small shops live up to their agreements. They should be aided by all members of No. 195. The chairman, "Jim" Brown, would be glad to receive any help or suggestions made to him.

No doubt ere long the president of our local, as well as the president of the pressmen's local, will each devote one day a month doing missionary work in our jurisdiction. It is sadly needed and would not entail much expense.

H. L. Vanderveld, H. Van Houten and G. W. Van Vladricken were delegates to the New Jersey State Federation of Labor, which convened at Entre Nous Hall, this city, on August 20, 21 and 22.

H. L. VANDERVELD.

ASBURY PARK-LONG BRANCH, N. J.

No. 721 is getting along fairly well under the existing conditions in this vicinity. Work at the Long Branch Record has taken an awful slump and lay-offs have been in order for the last two months, where last year at this time everybody worked overtime. Other shops are doing fairly well.

The union has bought a $50 liberty bond. Among those who have deposited their cards were H. G. Peterson and Harry Wiley, of New York, and Charles Mullen, of Philadelphia. Charlie Hancock, of Newark, made a short visit. Charlie Hoffman is now on the Evening Press.

Howard Voorhees took his traveler and is now located in Morristown. Charlie Holland is back on the Long Branch Record. He took the position left vacant by Leroy Van Brunt, who got a better situation on the Red Bank Standard. Charles Weed is back on the Times-Journal, Lakewood.

Several of the boys have been named on the draft list and expect to join the colors soon. Aaron Edwards enlisted in the naval reserves, but up to the present time is still working.

J. P. Leigh, N. H. Schuyler and J. Van Cleve Scott were delegates to the New Jersey State Printers' League at Paterson.

Many of the local typos have become expert farmers, and if it comes to the worst, there will be potatoes to eat this fall.

CHARLES F. DERMIGNY.

HILLSDALE, MICH.

H. H. Clarkson has resigned as secretary-treasurer of No. 724, and H. M. Mosher was elected to fill out the unexpired term of office. Mr. Clarkson is leaving the city and No. 724 extends thanks to him for his services as secretary-treasurer. Mr. Clarkson expects to locate in Cleveland, Ohio.

The Hillsdale Leader, for many years the leading weekly publication of the county, suspended publication on August 2. Mr. Segerstrom, the proprietor, is remodeling the plant, and will devote his entire time to high-class job printing.

Gene D. Yarick, former manager of the Commercial Printing Company, is now located at Monroe, Mich., where he is manager of a large printing concern.

H. M. MOSHER.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

During the past month business in the job end has taken a decided slump, and some of the boys are just holding onto their jobs "by the skin of their teeth." In the newspaper end the usual routine is seldom broken and there is rarely any changes in the personnel of the staffs of the different papers.

"Barney" McCoy, who has just recovered from a protracted serious illness, is back on the job at the Times, while Mr. Galvin is subbing on the same sheet for the boys who go to the country in search of mosquitoes and black flies and return with tales of piscatorial adventure.

The foremanship at the McMillan job plant has recently undergone a change. For some time past Charles Lawson has wielded the big stick, but about a month ago he relinquished control. J. C. Merrill now controls the destinies of the printing branch of the McMillan establishment. Mr. Lawson has taken a position with his brother, William, in the Globe jobroom.

Our last meeting was uneventful as regards any special or extraordinary business, but there was a good deal of routine and minor affairs that kept us in session about two hours on a fine evening. However, while the night men (who, by the way, are the most regular attendants) long for the outdoor freedom, they heroically stuck to their posts till all the business was transacted. Speaking of attendance, I notice by the August JOURNAL that Moose Jaw, Sask., had quite a pleasant shock at their July meeting, when all of fifteen members attended. Well, it would be a severely rude shock if No. 85 had less than that number to turn up at any meeting. Still, with a membership of eighty-seven, we have reason to complain of the attendance at the regular meetings. Some of the members don't even know where the hall is, and probably never will until some question arises that will affect their pockets. Then they will be there with both feet, and have more to say than those who have "borne the burden in the heat of the day." Paying dues is not the only duty a member owes to his union—he must do that or get out. Every true union man should attend most of the meetings and by his business acumen and counsel assist in carrying on the work which he would probably be the first to criticize if it was done contrary to his ideas. The union room is the place to do the union's business—not on the street corners or other public places.

Jack Lang, foreman of the Standard, last month attended the meeting of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows in Sydney, N. S., his place being filled by William Carrigan, "Billy" Essington taking the latter's place on the heading frame.

Tom Boyce, of the ad alley in the Telegraph, has gone on a two-weeks' cruise up the St. John river in the yacht Semol. It will be useless to say anything about the trip, as Tom is a good story-teller and on his return will relate some marvelous experiences. A. D. COLWELL.

NEW LONDON, CONN.

After a long and peaceful slumber this local has been awakened with a flash. Down from Maine came Representative Joseph Dallas, and after a few stirring remarks at the July meeting he directed a committee that had been trying to negotiate a scale for over a year, with the final result that the committee met with the greatest of success. A scale running for three years was signed up with the three papers and one large job shop. An increase in wages of $1.50 per week was received for the first year, with a dollar more for each of the succeeding years. Two new holidays were also granted, these being Labor day and Thanksgiving day. Much credit is due to the committee, who worked tirelessly, never losing hope of final success, and were in turn cheerfully thanked by the union. Messrs. Burnett, Creighton and Anderson composed the committee.

A picnic was held on June 10, but as the day turned out to be stormy, we had to make the best of being inside a pavilion for the day, so consequently it was a tame affair.

Leroy Bolles, formerly employed at the trade in New London, but now living in Waterbury, was one of our summer visitors, renewing old acquaintances and looking over the old town, which, by the way, has changed some since he was last here. He made several attempts to get a look at the lighthouse at the mouth of the harbor, but as the season was in the midst of our foggy days he was unsuccessful in his attempts.

Edward Colby, one of our oldest members, attended the Manchester convention and was very well pleased with the work being carried on throughout New England, and reported a very pleasant stay in the New Hampshire city.

Matthew Brennan, our new financial secretary, who succeeds Walter Creighton, who held the position for the past two years, has been an earnest worker for this local and should be able to carry on the work of that office in a very capable manner and deserves the earnest support of all the members.

The Globe chapel pulled off the big event of the season among the printers, it being in the shape of an outing on August 12, at Bride Lake, East Lyme. With a few of the boys from some of the other offices, they left the Globe building at 9 A. M. in a big auto truck for a twelve-mile ride to the grounds. The boys all turned cooks and made an elegant chowder under the direction of Ralph Burnett, while William Corcoran, our pressman, made a punch that made everybody feel in the best of spirits. "Keg" Harry Murphy lived up to his nickname by taking care of the beverage in that line. George Connor kept an eye on the soft drinks and also saw that no one was hungry in the line of sandwiches. Dan Daly, a telegraph operator, proved to be the comedian of the party, adapting a little ballad on the office boy along these lines:

Some say the devil is dead,
And some say 'tis blarney;
Some say the devil is dead
And buried in Killarney.

The devil boy was found taking a nap in the auto truck after a diligent search was made for him. In the athletic events "Bill" Stanton and Johnny McGill carried off the honors in the quoit games; Elmer Page won the swimming race; "Bill" Corcoran, the fat men's race; George Connor, the running and standing broad jumps; James Flanagan, the 100-yard dash. Ike Browne and John Connell brought in a fine mess of fish from the lake, which were cooked and very quickly devoured by the boys in record time. A great game of three-o'-cat was enjoyed until Harry Lezarde tried to knock the ball out of the lot and broke the bat in the attempt, and also broke up the game. Steamed clams were served at 5 o'clock and coffee and sandwiches at 7, after which the party started for home, voting it one great day. Another outing has since been planned for the second Sunday in September.

All the printer-farmers are now reaping their harvest. Mr. Morrell, of the Telegraph, claims the biggest crop, as he has nearly an acre planted and has had very good success with it.

Vacations have been sort of rarities this summer, as only two or three of the members have been able to secure a sub. All our members are steadily employed.

None of the printers have been called to the colors from here as yet. Most of the boys are married and raising young sailors or soldiers.

Business is about the average, with all of our twenty-four members employed. One traveler, a Mr. Barr, was here and subbed for two weeks on the Telegraph while "Bill" Stanton and "Jim" Flanagan took a vacation. He then departed for Boston.

The Evening Day has reached the 10,000 mark in circulation, which is a record mark for a town of 20,000 people. They employ close on to fifty people in the plant. JOHN P. CONNELL.

UNION PRINTERS' LEAGUE OF NEW JERSEY.

"Newark, October 28, the New Jersey Metropolis."

The quarterly convention of the Union Printers' League of New Jersey was held at Paterson, N. J., on Sunday, July 22, 1917. Delegates and visitors assembled at the Labor Lyceum, on Van Houten street, at 1 o'clock to participate in the meeting. Twenty affiliated unions were represented by the full quota of delegates and New York sent fraternal delegates. The International Typographical Union representative was also present.

The meeting was formally opened by President Whitney, of Paterson Union No. 195, who welcomed the delegates and visitors and asked all to stay and partake of the buffet luncheon which had been provided.

In the absence of President Gottlob, Vice-President Myers assumed the gavel and Secretary Scriven called the roll of officers, which showed President Gottlob and Sergeant-at-arms Sorenson as not being present. Delegate Stegmeyer, of Perth Amboy, was appointed sergeant-at-arms for the day. The roll call of delegates showed over fifty present.

Communications were read from President Marsden G. Scott, Secretary-Treasurer John W. Hays, Deputy Public Printer Chisholm, Charles Reilly and L. B. Wanbaugh, expressing best wishes for a successful convention.

President Gottlob, of the League; President Jennings, of Hudson County Central Labor Union; Theodore Brandle, president of the building trades of Hudson county, and George H. Reed arrived and addressed the convention.

The reports of the different unions were most encouraging. Members all working, trade brisk and a demand for help in some sections.

President Rouse, of "Big Six," addressed the delegates and visitors on the effect of the draft on the printing industry and urged the membership to get in touch with all capable unorganized printers throughout the state. He also dwelt on the literature which the International Typographical Union has been sending out, touching on the large number of enlistments for war service.

Representative McLoughlin rendered a most complete report which covered the biggest part of the state. Several pending scales have been adjusted and organization work is being taken up with the assistance of local committees. He reported that he has been assisting the Rahway reformatory committee and took part in all conferences and will keep in touch with any future developments at this plant.

President Rosenson, of Hebrew-American Typographical Union No. 83, spoke of the rapid progress made with high scales and short hours in New York city in the Hebrew-American branch.

The report of the fraternal delegate to the twentieth session of the Eastern Pennsylvania District Typographical Union, held at Reading, Pa., May 27, 1917, with President Corless presiding, was most interesting.

The conference voiced its appreciation of the New Jersey league in sending a fraternal delegate to conventions of the Pennsylvania district. Many matters were discussed and a most successful meeting adjourned to meet at Lancaster, Pa. The sending of fraternal delegates to future meetings of the Pennsylvania league was discussed and it was decided to dispense with same for the present.

About 150 delegates and visitors were present. Many arrived on Saturday and enjoyed the annual picnic at Baum's park. Mrs. William H. Watson, of Brooklyn, and Mrs. Joseph W. Soffel, of Hoboken, were present, with Mrs. Leon H. Rouse. Newark, Jersey City, Hoboken, Trenton and New York were well represented.

Newark tendered an invitation for the next convention and it was unanimously agreed to meet there on the fourth Sunday in October. From present indications it will be a record gathering of printers.

Members of every local union in the state have invested in liberty bonds, and no doubt when the amounts are compiled by the International Typographical Union New Jersey will be well up in the front. Union printers can always be depended on when Uncle Sam calls.

Typographical Union No. 94 has endorsed the labor temple proposition and taken 100 books for the drawing. It is now up to the members to do their "bit" and try and dispose of as many as possible. If you have not received a book the secretary will supply you.

The Hudson County Labor Review is now running a "Typo Column" of interest to printers throughout the state.

John W. Hickey and Miss Cora Tee Bailey, both members of New Brunswick Typographical Union, were recently married and are receiving the congratulations of their many printer friends throughout the state.

A résumé of the work done and trade conditions throughout the state during the past three months presents an encouraging outlook for the fall season in the printing industry. The membership is most steadily employed, and the demand for linotype operators in the larger cities has been hard to meet. The usual summer slump was hardly noticeable.

Thomas C. Stephenson, assistant secretary of Boston Typographical Union No. 13, was a recent visitor to Jersey City, having come on to New York with the Boston baseball aggregation. If you contemplate a trip to the "Hub," look Tom up; he will be glad to meet you. FRED C. SCRIVEN.

QUERY CLUB OUTING.

The eleventh annual outing of the Query club was held at Blasberg's farm, Paterson, N. J., on Sunday, July 29. Special trolley cars conveyed the 246 participants from Hoboken to the foot of the Garfield mountains, where the entire party marched up an incline with the "Big Six" band at its head playing inspiring music. It was pronounced the largest and most successful Query club outing ever held. The breakfast and dinner in greater part was grown on the farm, and the voluntary declarations of the diners as to the splendid food served must have been music to the ears of the proprietor. The program of sports had Joseph O. Young as starter and Peter J. Corcoran referee. Each member of the winning baseball team received a stag-handled pocket knife, distributed as follows: James Anderson, C. Palen, Joseph Lyons, Joseph Dallas, Charles O'Brien, George Thompson, J. W. Madden, Charles Wagenman and William McCormick. The umpires were James H. Dahm and William Singer. The 100-yard dash was captured by Charles Gaab, who won a fountain pen. In the bowling match J. Kaser got the top score and carried off a handsome stein. The potato race afforded plenty of amusement, Joseph Lyons winning; but the prize of a desk clock went to D. Micheli, who finished second, on account of Lyons having won a baseball prize, this being a rule at all Query club outings. Rain here stopped the other athletic events—the shoe race and an obstacle race—and the prizes of a solid gold pair of cuff buttons and a smoker's set went to tickets 227 and 369, the stubs of these lucky numbers being drawn from a hat.

One of the best features on the program was the inspiring music rendered by the "Big Six" band. Under the able direction of its leader, the band played marches, operatic selections, patriotic airs, sentimental songs, and other forms of music, and played them splendidly. All day long many of the members and guests ignored the other form of entertainment and, lounging near the band, drank in the melody provided. Too great stress can not be laid upon the participation of the band, and the Query club is to be congratulated on having secured such able co-operation in its efforts to entertain. The artistic skill displayed was a pleasant surprise to those present, and to the members of the band themselves the many expressions of delight and appreciation must have been pleasant to hear. No. 6 is to be heartily congratulated upon the success attained by the band, which has proved itself an artistic asset of which the union may well be proud.

Breakfast was served at 12 o'clock, and after a lapse of five hours, during which trips through the mountains and participation in the athletic games sharpened the appetites of the men, when they sat down to the dinner table, where they did justice to the poultry, meats and vegetables which were served.

The outing committee is to be complimented for the enjoyable day's entertainment provided. It consisted of David Fisher, John McParland, William Brittain, Lawrence Prendergast and Arthur Leary. The officers of the Query club are Nate Newman, president; Charles M. Conlon, secretary.

Some of the notables present were: President Leon H. Rouse, Secretary John S. O'Connell, Organizer Theodore Douglas, Clerk John Killeen, ex-Presidents P. H. McCormick and James Dahm; ex-Delegates Warren C. Browne, William Brennan, John Campbell, Joseph Young, John Crammond, Lawrence Prendergast; Delegates-elect William Haw, Thomas W. Johns and Richard F. Cavanagh; James Griffon, ex-president of Chicago Union No. 16; ex-Delegate John McParland, Frank Pollard, city sales manager of the Intertype Corporation, with his two assistants, Robert Van Horn and John O'Sullivan; "Judge" Miller, of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company; E. Bastian, of the American Type Foundry, and others. NATE NEWMAN.

PASSAIC, N. J.

After laying on the table for three months, the nomination and election of a president for No. 178 has finally come to pass and we now have in the chair John Volk, jr., of the Daily News chapel. President Volk had a rather stormy session before him as the "rebate system," which is the bone of contention in our local, was brought up again. After hearing both sides it was allowed to remain in the by-laws, the president casting the deciding vote in favor of it. This rebate system calls for the payment of 50 cents and is refunded to all members attending the meeting; all failing to attend lose their fifty cents. We uphold the president in his decision, for had it been defeated conditions would be similar to those of the Worcester, Mass., local, as told in the July issue of THE JOURNAL.

J. "Neal" Ernest, chairman of the News chapel, spent his vacation visiting friends at Newport, R. I., and in Pennsylvania. Devoe and George Rasp also enjoyed their vacations during August.

Harold Kimlin was appointed to the auditing committee to succeed Joe Liddy.

Claude Mutch and George W. Rasp were appointed delegates to the Passaic Trades and Labor Council from this local, with Mr. Erickson, who is the treasurer of that body and has been doing good work for the union. We hope the new delegates will stand by Mr. Erickson and do their "bit" and attend the meetings.

Bert Nolan deposited his card with No. 178 and is subbing at the News, so the men all can enjoy a vacation. Bert intends to leave for Baltimore and other southern points after the men have had their rest. Sergeant-at-Arms Kimlin spent his vacation with relatives in Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Work about town is normal at the present time, with the newspaper end topping the job shops.

A number of members of No. 178 attended the meeting of Hackensack Union No. 642 and a fine time was enjoyed by all who made the journey.

Captain Fred Gott, of No. 178's bowling team, issued a challenge to the Hackensack local for a series of five games, and hopes that it will be accepted. Mr. Gott predicts a clean sweep for his charges on the strength of his new "300 hitters" that will soon be warming up for a long season. He expects to battle all of the union teams in this vicinity. GEORGE W. RASP.

MISSOURI VALLEY CONFERENCE.

President Ball and Secretary Rhode, of the conference, both were in attendance upon the Colorado Springs convention. Mr. Ball was a delegate from Wichita Union. The Intermountain Typographical Conference held its annual one-day session at the Springs the day preceding the opening of the convention. At the morning session the writer was called upon to say something about the work of this conference, and at the afternoon meeting, among others, John F. Murphy, secretary of the New England Typographical Union, discussed the work done in his district.

The state of trade in the Missouri Valley district during August showed some improvement over July, with Oklahoma and southern Kansas showing most promising conditions.

The conference officers will endeavor during the next month or two to secure the affiliation of as many as possible of the local unions in the district not now having conference membership, to the end that a large delegate representation may be had at Oklahoma City next January. Conference dues are only 1 cent per month per member, with no assessments.

Columbia (Mo.) Union, where a strike has been in progress over a year, is making strenuous efforts to get the University of Missouri printing, contract for which will be let October 1, into a union office. The work now is done in non-union offices. CHARLES RHODE.

St. Joseph, Mo.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

San Francisco at this writing (August 15) is experiencing, perhaps, its most unique labor trouble, and when such controversies appear unique in this city most surely they are out of the ordinary. Nine years ago the street car men's union went down and entirely out in its fight with the United Railroads. The struggle lasted over a period of nearly six months and at the finish there was not enough left of that union to hold the charter. All attempts since that time to reorganize the union have failed because of the espionage system maintained by the company. On Saturday night, August 11, 1917, following the evening "rush" hour, the crews of perhaps half a dozen cars stopped work, left the cars standing at busy transfer corners, and went away. Nobody apparently knew what the trouble was. Not a union labor man in town had prior knowledge of what happened. Trusted officials of the company were taken by surprise and were entirely unprepared for such an event. The following day (Sunday) other crews quit and today (Wednesday) the entire system is crippled, it being estimated that more than 1,500 men are off the job. There is little or no disorder, the men being quiet and orderly, but apparently very much in earnest. They say that their action is entirely voluntary and in no way influenced by outside parties. Developments so far seem to prove that to be true. The men say they will go back to work when the company grants the eight-hour day and fixes the minimum wage at $3.50. It looks as though the company must yield. While the incident related above is admittedly unique, the editorial printed in large type and occupying half a page of the Chronicle is not only unique but absolutely astounding. The Chronicle, while its relations with union labor have generally been most satisfactory with members of the printing trades unions, has for quite half a century been regarded as the mouthpiece of capital and the money interests, and has seldom, if ever, neglected an apportunity to champion the cause of those interests, while still printing the news of the day as it happened. It has this to say about the situation:

THE CHRONICLE BELIEVES THE STREET CAR MEN SHOULD HAVE HIGHER WAGES AND SHORTER HOURS.

The Chronicle believes that the United Railroads, in refusing to recognize existing conditions, is making a serious blunder, and that the sentiment in the community will not uphold them in standing out against the demands of their employes, which, when all the circumstances are considered, must be regarded as reasonable. The people, by a large vote, established an eight-hour day and a minimum wage of $3 for every one in the employ of the municipality, and long before that action was taken nearly every employer in San Francisco was compensating on still more liberal basis. The Chronicle has been doing so for a long time and has no reason to regret the result.

There is no question about the arduous nature of the work of the employes of street railway companies, nor of the character and ability of the men to whom we trust our lives. They have to be "on the job," no matter how inclement the weather, and are subjected to requirements much more rigorous than those imposed upon men in most other occupations. They are expected to be polite and tactful to the patrons of their employer, and are often called upon to bear with the unreasonable who fail to recognize the difficulties inseparable from the attempt to please everybody. They are a carefully selected body, and while their occupation is not included among those designated as skilled, they possess qualifications which years of training would not permit some to acquire, and are only gained by those who attain them by attention to the duties they are called upon to assume.

The people who make daily use of the cars are aware of these facts and their sympathies are with the men. They realize that conditions under which platform men work produce a mental strain which is necessarily aggravated by excessively long hours and the feeling that they are insufficiently compensated for their services, and they desire to see the tension relaxed.

Motormen and conductors employed by the United Railroads are required to be on duty an average of fifteen hours a day in order to perform ten hours' work, and some of them are even subjected to worse working conditions in order to eke out a bare existence.

The striking carmen protest that they have not been inspired, as has been charged, by the I. W. W. or any other organization to make their present demand. No one will question the sincerity of this repudiation. They required no other inspiration than their necessities, which must be apparent to every one who will give the subject a moment's thought.

They ask that the United Railroads pay them $3.50 a day for eight hours' continuous work, and time and a half for all overtime, and they couple with their request an appeal to the people, "who know how far a dollar will go," to say whether this wage is more than enough to provide the necessaries of life for the average family.

It needs no referendum to tell us what the answer to this appeal would be. These are war times and they have produced abnormal conditions which it is useless for the corporation to try to withstand. If it can not comply with them it had better retire from the field and leave it to those who will adjust themselves to the inevitable. One thing is certain: When San Francisco recognizes, as it does in the present juncture, that men are demanding simple justice it will stand by them. We repeat what we said in the opening sentence, that the Chronicle believes the United Railroads is making a serious blunder by holding out against reasonable demands. The corporation will win the applause of the people and profit by yielding.

Josiah C. Harlow, of the Chronicle chapel, died suddenly on the night of Thursday, July 26, 1917, cerebral apoplexy being the immediate cause of death. Funeral services were held on Monday morning, July 30, from Star of the Sea church, Eighth avenue and Geary street, and interment was at Holy Cross cemetery. Josiah C. Harlow was 51 years of age at the time of death and was born in San Francisco. He had long been well known to the members of No. 21, having spent many years of his life in the newspaper composing rooms of this city. He had not enjoyed good health for some months, but his death was quite unexpected. He had passed the evening motoring with a party of friends. Death overtook him at Twentieth avenue and Lincoln way immediately after he had alighted from the machine that he had been driving. He is survived by his mother, Catherine Harlow; his son, Josiah C. Harlow, jr., of the United States navy; Fayette M. Harlow, of the Examiner chapel, and James E. and Lucy S. Harlow of this city.

Leslie F. B. ("Doc") Turner died in this city on Friday, July 27, 1917, being suddenly stricken with hemorrhage of the brain. He was 40 years of age at time of death. Funeral services, under auspices of the union, were held at the chapel of the Truman Undertaking Company on Sunday, July 29, at 4 P. M. A. C. Turner, of Riverside, a brother, attended the services and accompanied the remains to Riverside.

W. C. Hercules, of Denver, was a visitor at headquarters recently. He was en route to Los Angeles, where he expects to remain for an extended vacation, although he didn't tell us the reason why. He expects to return to San Francisco later and may take up his residence on the coast.

J. W. Meyers, formerly in charge of the composing room of the E. C. Hughes Company, who has been a sufferer from psoriasis for a long time, has been admitted to the Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs. William K. Rutter also was admitted to the Home during August.

Mrs. C. M. Smith, wife of C. M. Smith, of the Bulletin chapel, was killed by being thrown from a horse in San Jose on Friday, July 13. Mr. and Mrs. Smith, with their children, had only recently returned to San Francisco from New York city.

Ed Fitzgerald, for many years assistant foreman of the Call-Post composing room, has been advanced to the foremanship, succeeding W. A. Rossetti. Ross C. Wilson will be his assistant.

W. A. Rossetti, until recently foreman of the Call composing room, which position he resigned to accept a place in the Hearst service, was the recipient of a beautiful traveling outfit, the gift of members of the chapel.

chapel, held Tuesday, July 24, William H. Ellis, a member of that chapel, was the recipient of a handsome traveling bag, presented by the chapel in honor of his election as a delegate to the Colorado Springs convention.

Frank J. Cody, late of the Schwabacher-Frey chapel, is in Honolulu, where he has accepted a position on the Commercial. GEORGE A. TRACY.

The following excerpt from the commission issued to George A. Tracy, president of No. 21, will be read with pleasure and the sentiment therein contained endorsed by practically the entire membership of the International Typographical Union:

Reposing special confidence in the fidelity and ability of George A. Tracy, I do by these presents * * * appoint him as a civil service commissioner in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

The appointment was made by Mayor Rolph, whose administration has been an inspiration to students of municipal affairs, and whose ability to recognize fitness in his official family has made his administration efficient and harmonious.

The position pays a salary of $100 per month and the duties of the office in no way interfere with Mr. Tracy's activities as an official of No. 21 —the meetings of the commission are held on Monday evenings—and, unlike the holders of many municipal offices, the incumbent is subject to removal only by a recall at the hands of the people. The tenure of office is six years, the commission expiring on July 1, 1923.

There were three applications for the Home made at the July meeting of the union, and it was rather a singular coincidence that two of the applicants died within three days afterward. Maxine Bouret and David N. Pendergast, and Miss Van Stry, the third applicant, is in a very poor physical condition. Owing to the illness of President Martin, Vice-President Adler presided at the meeting. The application for the old age pension of Francis A. Davis, of the Globe chapel, was approved.

Thomas J. Whittem, of the Advertiser-Record chapel, was married to Mrs. A. E. Pepper on July 21, and they went to New York and Atlantic City for a couple of weeks on their wedding trip. He is highly respected by all the members of the chapel, who presented them with a beautiful water set as a wedding gift.

Ernest Harcourt, an apprentice members of the E. L. Grimes chapel, joined Troop E, Thirteenth cavalry, early in July and is now stationed at Fort Riley, Kansas. John J. Curry, of the University Press chapel, joined the navy, July 20. William Fallon, an operator on the Boston Globe, joined the general service as a first-class printer and went on duty July 25. Fred Drew, machinist apprentice on the Christian Science Monitor, on July 24 joined the Fifth Massachusetts machine gun company, national guard. Charles A. Edwards, monotype machinist and son of Bob Edwards, of the Post, joined the Massachusetts gun company, Fifth regiment, national guard, on July 25.

Maxine L. Bouret, age 53 years, died July 24, 1917, after a long illness, having been at the Union Printers Home for two years, 1913-14-15. His remains were interred in Hope cemetery, Worcester. He learned his trade with John Nolan, of the American, in Woonsocket, R. I., was delegate to the International convention in 1888, came to Boston with a Providence traveling card in 1892, and worked on the Boston Globe for a number of years. He took a very prominent part in the affairs of the union for many years and served on the executive committee several terms. He loved life and made a game fight to rid himself of the unfortunate malady with which he was afflicted. He had a kindly disposition and leaves a widow and a host of friends to mourn for him.

In a letter from Treasurer Malcolm A. Knock, I quote the following, which I think will be interesting to most of our readers:

DEAR TOM—This will go down in International Typographical Union history as one of the greatest of conventions. This fact is mainly due to the Home and of its twenty-fifth birthday. Yesterday was the proudest day in the life of the Home. Fully 2,500 visitors were royally entertained. The exercises were elaborate. The governor of the state, the mayor of the city, two prominent judges and a host of minor lights hobnobbed with the hewers of wood and the drawers of water in emulation of the spirit of true democracy. Before the board of trustees went out to the Home it entertained the governor, mayor and other dignitaries at an elaborate spread at the Acacia. At the Home the throng feasted the inner man on barbecued ox, the historical fatted calf and the savory roasted pig. This repast was served in two huge tents (circus tents). The governor, the mayor, the notables, President Scott and Omaha McCullough made addresses, while a brass band and glee singers churned the air with sounding brass and vocal delights. The Home building itself and the paths leading to it fairly dazzled with ornate bunting and sizzling electricity. The day was a long one for me, for, with six other zealots, I got out of bed at 2 A. M. and wig-wagged my way up to Pikes Peak in an automobile, a distance of thirty-six miles after you begin the ascent (going and coming). We saw the sun rise, engaged in a snowball fight, slid around on the ice, breathed laboriously and struggled with eardrums that hummed. It snowed while we were there, and was not only cold enough for overcoats, but blankets failed to keep us warm.

Richard F. Keyes died of heart disease on August 8. He was born in Boston, was about 70 years of age, and worked at the old firm of Mills & Knights for a number of years previous to his going to work at the municipal printing office. Mr. Keyes originally joined No. 13 in 1874. He was a man of exemplary habits, kind and considerate, and made many friends. Funeral services were held at St. Columbkille church, Brighton, August 11, and a large delegation was present from the office in which he worked, and the secretary's chapel was represented by the assistant secretary. He leaves a widow and five children.

David N. Pendergast, an operator on the Journal for many years, died suddenly Sunday, July 22, after attending the union meeting that day, and his remains were taken to Providence, R. I., where he was buried in the family lot. He was 42 years of age, learned his trade on the Newport Weekly Observer, and was in the navy at the training station at Newport for six years. He leaves a mother two brothers and three sisters.

Isaac A. Beals, for many years a member of No. 13, died Tuesday, July 31, 1917, after a long illness. He came to Boston with a Halifax traveling card in 1898 and worked in several news and job offices. He leaves a widow, one son and two daughters. He was president of Hartford Typographical Union at one time, and was otherwise active in union affairs.

Mrs. Annie Quinn, mother of Ernest Quinn, chairman of the Post jobroom, died Wednesday, August 15, leaving one daughter and four sons. Mr. Quinn's many friends sympathize with him.

In a letter to Representative Dallas, one of the delegates to the recent convention of the New England Typographical Union wrote as follows: "After attending the convention nothing could make me stop working for the International Typographical Union. That is just what it did for me. I was getting discouraged at the way things are up in my town, but the convention gave me a new lease of life."

Oscar Miles, secretary of Hartford Union and first vice-president of the New England Typographical Union, paid a brief visit to the union rooms while passing through here on a business trip.

A brother of J. Harvey Holt, chairman of the Transcript, was severely injured recently, a large piece of iron falling on him and breaking both legs. The many friends of Mr. Holt extend to him their sincere sympathy.

"A Tale of Two Cities." Boston went, Boston saw, Boston conquered, and the reporter of the New York Sun in his column account of the printers' baseball game at Ebbets field, Brooklyn, on Monday, August 6, said, after Boston beat New York 9 to 1, that when the New York hosts had showered so many kindnesses, dinners and courtesies upon the Boston players, delegates and friends, he thought the Boston players were very much lacking in appreciation when they trounced the New York boys in such a manner. It was a corking good game and everybody was keyed up with double-barreled happiness and holiday joy. The New York Sun's fund for our "Sammies" in French trenches to aid the soldiers' tobacco fund was increased to the extent of $368. Previous to the game E. W. Sweeney, chairman of the printers' publicity committee, staged many interesting athletic and musical events, and John Harvey, of Boston, won the base-running contest in 14⅘ seconds; Willie Irwin, of New York, won the 50-yard dash over several other boy scouts, and Private Walter Shanahan, of the Seventh company, won the 100-yard dash in 12 seconds flat. Shannon's naval battalion and the Fourteenth regiment bands played between the innings and accompanied the national guardsmen in review across the field, which was a beautiful sight. Fine vaudeville singers also enlivened the occasion with high-class singing. About forty-five players, managers, committee and friends went to New York from Boston, and they all are loud in their praise for the grand entertainment which they received and laud the true sporting spirit of every member of the New York club. The Boston visitors to New York were provided with sumptuous accommodations at the St. George hotel, Brooklyn. Automobile trips were taken covering every section of interest in New York, and a dinner and entertainment never to be forgotten were provided at the Shelburn hotel, Coney Island, Monday evening, which was the grandest treat the visitors enjoyed. On Tuesday, besides other automobile sightseeing trips, the visitors were taken in the special steamer, Tourist, around the island of Manhattan, and I think it was one of the best features of our pleasant trip there. William J. Cowley, chairman; George E. O'Donnell, commissioner; T. J. Hamilton, president of the New York Printers' Baseball Association; Charles Bain, Steve Connolly, J. W. Tupper, Willard Sweeney and others deserve great credit for the success of the outing.

On Monday, August 13, about fifty players, managers, committee and friends of the New York Baseball Association paid a return visit to Boston. They were housed at the Adams house, and played the second friendly game at Fenway park, which resulted in Boston winning by a score of 8 to 2. Previous to the game three companies of the Fifth regiment national guard, at full war strength, with their band, and a detachment of marines with band paraded around the field and were much admired. The soldier's equipment race, three heats and a final, was a big laugh producer, and Soltier, of Company B, won in the final heat. Red Powers, of Company H, was the winner of the 100-yard dash, and Clements, of Boston, won the sack-circling contest in 15 seconds. The true spirit of patriotism was very evident. Voluntary donations were made to the fund which will be used to supply baseball outfits for our "Sammies" at the front, which netted a nice little sum of money. President J. H. Riley, Treasurer J. A. McLoughlin, Secretary J. H. McCarthy, Charles Lee, F. A. McGlew, G. H. Ellison, William McCarthy, the committee; Boston's national commissioner, Henry C. Whitcomb, and the national secretary of the baseball association, Joseph J. Dallas, made plans for the comfort and entertainment of our New York guests, which included several sightseeing automobile parties around the interesting historical parts of Boston and a dinner with all the fixings at Paragon park. On Tuesday, the second day of the visit, the party was taken in automobiles to Bass Point, where a buffet luncheon was served, thence along the north shore, visiting the beaches of Swampscott and Marblehead. Fred T. Irwin, John Holland and Mr. Thomson came from Manchester, N. H., and enjoyed hugely with all present the umpiring of John L. Sullivan, Boston's own "strong boy." W. H. Sullivan, secretary of Worcester Typographical Union, and wife were also present. THOMAS C. STEPHENSON.

READING, PA.

During this hot weather things are rather dull in this town. Advertising in the dailies is at its lowest ebb, but there are signs of a revival as cooler weather approaches.

Robert Leightner, of Harrisburg, was in town looking for an operator and succeeded in getting Albert Deyshes to accompany him. Charles Zimmerman is now at Woerner's, operating the intertype.

The Telegram and News-Times installed two new model 19 linotypes. Both are equipped with head-letter mats and a full range of figures, etc., for display work.

Andrew J. Mengel returned from his vacation spent along the Potomac and Rappahannock rivers. George Fredricks, a former member of No. 86, now of Brooklyn, N. Y., visited old friends here during his vacation.

Charles E. Miller (No. 1), our delegate to Colorado Springs, remembered Henry J. Weand, the only member of No. 86 in the Home, with a nice monetary donation, collected at the last meeting. The Hampden fire company also sent a donation to "Mickey," as he was familiarly known.

Messrs. Mason, Miller (No. 2) and Sherman attended the quarterly session of the Eastern Pennsylvania District Union, held at Lancaster, on August 12, as delegates from No. 86. The session was lengthy, but full of "pep" and "ginger." Here's hoping the future sessions will be of the same caliber, as they are interesting and put life into the organization. There were about a dozen visitors from Reading in attendance.

The election of officers brought out a very large attendance at the August meeting of No. 86. The label committee made a lengthy report. The label is being demanded on printing by some firms which heretofore never bore the label.

HARRY W. SHERMAN.

BOISE, IDAHO.

Charles S. Bickley, who was for upward of seven years connected with the commercial department of the Evening Capital-News, on August 1 severed his connection therewith and accepted a situation as operator on the newspaper side. Mr. Bickley departed on August 13 for an extended vacation trip to Seattle, Wash.; Victoria, B. C., and other Puget Sound points.

Ed Price, who was for eight years employed as an operator in the Capital-News chapel, recently resigned his situation and purchased the interests of A. E. Schwartz and Ray N. Castle in the Merchants Printing Company. Mr. Castle has taken a position in the state pure food department, and Mr. Schwartz is taking a vacation.

W. J. A. McVety, foreman of the Statesman composing room and a member of the state conciliatory board, who was recently delegated by the governor to investigate I. W. W. disturbances in the Cœur d'Alene district with a view to mediation between the strikers and their former employers, after a thorough investigation returned to Boise with a report that "mediation is a vain I. W. W. remedy," according to the Statesman. In his report to the chief executive of the state he made, among other suggestions, the following, which the writer heartily seconds:

That a legitimate organization of mill and timber workers be effected under the auspices of the American Federation of Labor, to counteract the I. W. W. influence.

That a plan in this connection be presented to E. F. Caton, president of the Idaho Federation of Labor, at an early date in order that the conditions of next year may be anticipated and met.

That a conference be held during the next few months to determine what should be done to offset labor disturbances.

In connection with the foregoing, because the lumber workers have not heretofore been organized in Idaho, do not infer that the Idaho State Federation of Labor has been sleeping. Not yet two years of age, and still piloted by President E. F. Caton, secretary of Boise Typographical Union No. 271, thirty-one new unions and two central bodies were organized in Idaho since April 1, 1917, during less than three months time. There are now about 100 local union organizations in the state, of which sixty are affiliated with the state federation. We are all highly pleased over these results, including Mr. Caton, who says, "I don't believe any state in the union can excell this record." And the good work continues. The federation officials are now concentrating their efforts upon securing affiliations.

Herbert L. Whitehead, who for sixteen years was foreman of the Capital-News composing room, resigned his position and, after a couple of weeks' vacation in Idaho mountains, departed August 16 with his family for Salt Lake City, with San Diego, Cal., as his ultimate destination. Mr. Whitehead will be missed in Boise, and the best wishes of a host of friends, including perhaps every member of Boise Union as well as many former members who are now infesting other portions of Mother Nature's anatomy, follow him to his future abiding place, wherever it may be. He has no definite plans for the future, but, inasmuch as he still retains property in Boise, we have hopes that "we may meet again." Merrill Johnson, for five years a member of the Statesman chapel, has succeeded Mr. Whitehead as foreman of the Capital-News.

At the August meeting of No. 271 Ed Price, on account of becoming a "proprietor member," resigned the presidency and Charles Eckhard was elected to the chair. Merrill Johnson, on account of having assumed a foremanship, resigned the vice-presidency, whereupon H. Luther Straight was elected to succeed him. While Price and Johnson have been very active and efficient officials, and No. 271 regrets to lose their services, here's hoping to the present incumbents. Eckhard will work hard, and we know Luther is Straight.

The hillward trails have witnessed a heavy traffic of journeyman printer vacationists from the capital city during the past two months, in quest of ozone free and conservation of nerve energy. "Pete" Annett spent a week on Rattlesnake creek above Arrow Rock. Herbert Thompson enjoyed a couple of weeks around Trinity Lakes. W. A. Corts had his, and Charles Hawkes went on a trip that took him into Canada. Fred Beck and wife spent a month visiting various Washington points, making the trip in their Maxwell. There have been others who've enjoyed brief respites from the turmoil of city existence, but the writer has not mentioned them all, perhaps because he also and his better half were absent during the last two weeks in July, hooking the elusive trout and otherwise rejuvenating. Mr. Park attended the convention in Colorado Springs.

Floyd J. Olds, of the Capital-News jobrooms, has taken unto himself a wife.

LAWRENCE O. NICHOLS.

HARRISBURG, PA.

A thunderbolt came from a clear sky on the morning of Saturday, February 10, last, when the announcement was made to the employes of the Star-Independent that it was the last day on which that newspaper would appear and that the plant had been purchased by the Telegraph, the only other evening newspaper in the city, and that the two publications would thereafter appear as one. Ninety-five per cent of the Star-Independent employes, some of them with that newspaper from thirty to forty years, fell outside the breastworks with but eight hours' notice. But as every cloud has a silver lining, an oasis in the desert was duly appreciated when the Patriot Publishing Company, through its manager, Richard M. H. Wharton, established the Evening News, the first issue appearing on the streets on Thursday, February 15, just four working days after the Star-Independent was consigned to junk. But this is not all.

It was the nucleus in giving to the union printers of Harrisburg one of the finest and best equipped printing establishments in the United States. This assertion covers a wide "bit" of territory, but if the reader will bear with the writer in an enumeration of what the Patriot and Evening News plants contain, then it can be said boastingly that there is truth in the claim. Here are some of the principal improvements made since the Evening News appeared in the journalistic field: Fifth story erected on Patriot building to accommodate the forces of the editorial and composing rooms of both newspapers. New sextuple press, with a capacity of 72,000 twelve-page papers per hour, installed in basement. Capable of printing from fourteen to twenty-four pages at the rate of 36,000 per hour. Four new linotype machines of the latest models installed, making a battery of eight; lead and rule caster; Ludlow typograph, on which all display lines of advertisements are cast from eighteen to forty-two point; a saw trimmer and a slug router. Stereotying department equipped with three steam tables, matrix roller, etc., all new. Cement floors in all the departments, including editorial, composing, telegraphic and stereotyping rooms. Ceiling fans, hot and cold water shower baths, forty-two lockers and the finest sanitary toilets obtainable. And last, but not least, the circulation of the Evening News, yet in its swaddling clothes, is nearing the 25,000 mark. Not so bad for an infant, eh?

The printing trade has been good here for a number of months, but there has been considerable difficulty experienced in filling the places of printers who have joined the colors.

John L. L. Kuhn, one of the heavy stockholders in the defunct Star-Independent, took over the state printing contract on the first of July for the coming four years, he being the lowest bidder.

Daniel L. Keister, long a member of No. 14 and twice elected to the legislature, is a candidate for mayor of Harrisburg on the non-partisan ticket. He has the endorsement of the united labor organizations of the city.

The Patriot-Evening News management has entered into an agreement with the International Board of Arbitration for 1917-1922, thus insuring against possible strikes and lockouts during the period mentioned.

Many of the local printers were entertained by Lancaster Union on Sunday, August 12, when the Eastern Pennsylvania District Typographical Union met in that city.

Edwood ("Wifty") Barnes, known by printers in every big city of the United States during a few decades of the previous century, is still on terra firma here and able to do his "bit," whether it be in a war garden or at the case. OTTO M. BAKER.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

John Franey, who died in New York in July, joined No. 9 in 1881 or 1882 and was a live wire from the start, not only in No. 9 but in the Buffalo Central Labor Union and the Knights of Labor. During the strike on the Courier and the Commercial Advertiser he and Thomas Gauley edited Justice, a paper brought out by the union for the purpose of boycotting the two papers—and it was some boycott. The circulation of the Courier got down so low that it was not worth while starting the big press to print the edition. He was a delegate to the St. Louis convention in 1884 and to the Pittsburgh convention in 1886, and was active as an anti-brotherhood man at both. It was at Pittsburgh that he offered the resolution and the design that gave the printers their first union label. Franey and Chester Mastin set it up in the Times office. As this was before Mr. Mack became a millionaire there was not a clean font of type in the shop and Franey went over to the foundry and bought enough to set the words "Union printers only employed on this paper." It was intended for newspapers. It was ordered copyrighted and President Amison referred to it at the Buffalo convention. It was only used on the Buffalo Sunday Truth and perhaps on one of the Utica papers. Franey was active in securing the passage of the first factory inspection law, and made some very libelous statements concerning one of Buffalo's most eminent philanthropists in connection with the repeal of the convict labor law. Franey was threatened with dire penalties, but they didn't happen, and he was appointed deputy factory inspector when the bill became law. He had been in business as patent broker for many years, but never lost his interest in union affairs.

Secretary McLaughlin reported that the Victor company, dealers in furniture, had its printing done in Detroit, where the People's Outfitting Company has a plant of its own and does the printing for a chain of ten stores. It looks as if a triple entente, composed of the three lake cities, would appeal to Messrs. Sprunk, Hoban and McLaughlin.

James Hinchey's eyes will not permit him to work as an operator yet and he is soliciting work for the Union and Times. Daniel Flavin shows but slight improvement, and Harry Pingle, of the News chapel, is dangerously ill. Vice-President Harty also is on the sick list.

Patrick Moran, of Columbus, called on William O'Neill, of the Courier, recently. O'Neill says Moran is publisher of a labor paper and prosperous, but does not explain the contradictory terms. Moran was lucky that some of our poverty-stricken publishers did not rob him of his secret.

Representative Kinskey has organized a union in Geneva with twenty-one charter members. A. J. Cowan is president.

D. E. Peugeot, of the Express chapel, has been endorsed by the democratic committee for the nomination for judge of the city court.

The allied trades lost a big label shop when the Courier Printing and Lithographing Company folded its tent in July. The company could trace its pedigree through seven papers back to 1830, among them the Western Star, the first daily in Buffalo, and the residuum appeared as the Courier in 1846. The company prospered and for many years was known as "the largest show-printing house in the world." The strike and boycott in the '80s ruined its circulation and influence as a newspaper and for a number of years it existed as a medium for scholarly editorials on abstract subjects and press notices for theatrical companies whose posters were printed in the jobroom. In 1897 the paper was sold. Then the plant became part of the American Lithographing Company and much of the work was transferred to Erie and Cincinnati. Then the paper business was sold and trade became too small for the building. About a year ago the plant was moved out Main street and the company was reported to be doing well. The Union and Times falls heir to some of the business and the Clement company gets the city directory and has put in another linotype to help out on the work. The old newspaper strike, the lithographers' strike and the eight-hour strike were too much of a handicap for even the union label.

The seventh annual outing is over and Chairman Schmidt and Messrs. Dodge, Chartrand, Rombach, Jenkins, Wild, Cantwell, Wymer and O'Donnell have every reason to be proud of everything connected with it. They had a big, friendly family party, evenly divided between men, women and children; the weather delightful, the refreshments plentiful, the games excellent, and the steamer ride down the "River of Stars" and around Grand island made such a day that the committee, if the weather gets the habit, thinks of organizing a community chorus and adopting "The End of a Perfect Day" as a festal anthem. There is even a suspicion that the union made some money on it.

Norman Allen, of Cleveland, got such a hurry call to join his hospital unit in New York that he forgot he would need eats on the way.

Claims for damages under the workmen's compensation law originating in the eight counties in western New York will be handled in Buffalo hereafter.

Barney McCormick's heart trouble kept him out of the national army and into the army of benedicts. The foreman of the Union and Times was married to Miss Teresa Sharkey in August.

HUGH WALLACE.

BROCKTON, MASS.

The draft hit a large number of our members; in fact, at the outset it almost looked like a conspiracy to cripple the printing business in Brockton. To date, however, only two of our members have been accepted. Cecil E. Foster, of the Enterprise, has the distinction of being the second man in Brockton passed by the examining board who did not claim exemption. Egbert C. Wilson, of the Keith chapel, although having a dependent wife, was not allowed exemption, and he also is to take up arms for democracy. Good luck to you, boys, and a speedy return.

Has a man a right to earn a living in this land of the free and the home of the brave in any legitimate manner in which he sees fit? The Brockton Central Labor Union, by its action in the recent controversy between the jitney operators and the carmen's union, says "No." In spite of the fact that the jitney operators were members of the central body and were perfectly right in asking for protection and assistance, the same that one union man expects from another in time of need, the central labor union went on record that, inasmuch as both parties were affiliated, they could not take sides; or, in other words, sanctioned the attempt of the carmen's union to force the jitneys out of business and give back to the street railways the absolute control of Brockton they had once enjoyed. It seems that the jitneys were cutting a considerable hole in the profits of the street railways, and in order to remedy this sad (?) state of affairs the railways had to resort to stringent methods to curb the business of the fast-growing and popular jitney. The railways were after 6-cent fares, public opinion was already against them, so it was absolutely necessary to seek outside channels to take care of the jitney menace. And here the street car men's union enters the case, draws up a set of regulations that even the powerful railways could not comply with and do business, but at the same time the jitney men were expected to comply with all this mass of "can't-do-this-and-must-do-that" stuff. These regulations were submitted to the city government by the carmen's union and a public hearing held, but to date no decision or verdict has been rendered. At the public hearing the street car men tried more of their nefarious work by trying to pack the hearing and freeze the jitney men out, but fortunately it did not work as expected. One might well ask of what benefit the central labor union is to the community if it is willing to stand idly by and see one union grossly wrong another. A great war is now raging over precisely this same principle, although in this case it is nations involved instead of unions. If there had not been petty politics going on in the Brockton Central Labor Union this affair would have been fought tooth and nail, and it also shows very clearly how the street car men's union feels toward their fellow union man by trying to "bust" one union and in the next breath asking the union men to patronize the trolleys.

The August JOURNAL, with its report of the officers and representatives, is perhaps one of the most interesting books of the year; yet how many members took advantage of the opportunity to gain an insight as to what our officers have done and are planning to do in the future? And also those members who are apt to criticize the work of our organizers should spend a few minutes to read their comprehensive reports; they will then begin to realize and appreciate the work these men are doing for the greatest labor organization of all time.

Why not a printer's bowling league during the coming winter as a means for a little diversion? The Howard Print stands ready to put a team in the field, and it seems as though teams could be mustered up at the Times, Enterprise, Tolman's, and the Standard, with perhaps a team of all-stars from the other shops, making a league of six teams. With the bowling material available a league of this sort would make considerable showing in bowling circles. Talk it in your chapel and let's see if we can not get something started along these lines.

Until a short while ago the Poet and White Owl cigars were made in Boston under union conditions. Recently, however, this concern, having established a reputation and being well known in labor circles as makers of fair cigars, decided to dispense with the stamp and do business on the strength of their past record. Consequently they moved their factory to New York state and are now manufacturing these cigars under decidedly non-union conditions. The members should remember that the Poet and White Owl are now unfair to organized labor.

For the second time within the short space of three months fire again destroyed part of the stock in the retail establishment of Kohn & Pollock, stationers and printers, the fire occurring on the morning of August 6. The flames were confined to the rear part of the fourth floor, believed to have been caused by spontaneous combustion. The damage amounted to $2,000.

The Franklin Relief Association, composed exclusively of members of No. 12, has raised its sick benefit. Heretofore the members were paid $5 a week when they were sick. The rate is now $7 a week for fifteen straight weeks. The dues are 10 cents a week. The entrance fee has also been reduced. This is the best insurance that any printer can get for his money.

Newark Typographical Union No. 103 recently celebrated its fiftieth anniversary, and J. T. Hudson, of Newark, remembered his friends, Arthur L. Jackson, "Bill" Hanafin, Henry A. McAnarney and Walter H. Mules with souvenirs of the event. Mr. Hudson was a visitor in Baltimore last August at the convention and proved himself a good "mixer."

Samuel H. Ziegler, of the linotype force of the Evening Sun, has resigned from that paper and accepted a position with the National Publishing Company, of Washington, D. C.

David J. Jones, linotype and monotype operator on the Evening Sun, has quit the Sun office. Allan Eney, who has been operating a linotype machine on the same paper, takes Jones' place on the monotype keyboard.

Parker Wampler, vice-chairman of the American and Star chapel, met with a very painful accident by cutting his hand on a bottle at his home. Several stitches were required to fix his hand in good shape.

Harry Miller, formerly linotype operator on the Morning Sun, has been transferred to the Evening Sun, and John R. Hackney, make-up upon the Morning Sun, has been transferred to the proof-room.

"Joe" Harvey, of the Monumental Printing Company, has resigned from that company and is working in the adroom of the Sun.

George L. Bop, a member of No. 12, has changed his occupation, and in the future will be found in the editorial room of the Baltimore American. Mr. Bop will still carry his card of membership.

"Bill" Hanafin has left town for a few weeks and will help the Philadelphia Public Ledger fill its columns full of linotype matter.

The condition of President Arthur L. Jackson, who is confined to his home with a relapse of typhoid fever, remains the same.

W. R. Finneyfrock, who has been in charge of the small-ad corrections on the Sun, has been transferred to the make-up. "Finney" had his troubles the first Friday night figuring out the denominations of the various churches when he was making up those particular ads.

"Eddie" Hirsch, who still carries his typographical union card, has been appointed chairman of the press committee for the national convention of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, which will be held in Buffalo beginning August 14.

Friday, July 21, turned out to be the busiest day in Baltimore for the newspaper printers. Some of the boys worked thirteen and fourteen hours on a stretch helping to get the names of the drafted men before the public. Every man did his share of the work and well.

While the war has put Baltimore in a bad way for pressmen and pressfeeders, it has not affected the organizing of new firms in the printing industry by any means. Within the past month four different firms have begun to do business in this city. The new firms are the French-Bray Company, 206 South Sharp street; Harry L. Bald, 823 North Calhoun street; William J. Ruzicka Company, 501 North Gay street, and Sol H. Emanuel.

Russell Mules, formerly linotype operator on the Evening Sun, has accepted a position as timekeeper and stenographer with the Consolidated Engineering Company, of Baltimore, and has reported at Charlotte, N. C., where the company is building a cantonment for the army. Mr. Mules' card will remain in the Sun chapel.

Clarence S. Glassmeyer, formerly linotype operator on the Baltimore American, has accepted a position as operator on the Evening Sun.

Percy Chewning, of Baltimore, who has been traveling all over the country, wrote home from Colorado Springs that he had made it a point to be there for the convention. After seeing a little more of the country, Mr. Chewning will return to Baltimore.

J. M. Matthews, who formerly worked in the adroom of the Evening Sun, is a member of Company B, Fourth Maryland infantry.

The Thomas & Evans Printing Company has just finished printing for the city a book containing the names of every city and state official in Maryland. The book contains eighty-six pages of advertising, seventy-eight pages of reading matter, and is well printed and bound. WALTER H. MULES.

"Save the waste and win the war."—Hoover.

Summer dulness in all its implied meaning set in in union activities locally, and save for our officers sticking on the job in the interim, our union's activities, in so far as meetings are concerned, have been quiet for two months, our July and August sessions being eliminated on account of the warm weather. Meanwhile a special committee, consisting of Nat Matthews, Percy Foster and Arthur Auld, has been endeavoring to secure a new meeting hall for our sessions henceforth, and the committee has gone to its work most assiduously. Many places have been looked over, many more have been discussed, and their decision will be conveyed to the membership in a special notice from the secretary, for we must needs have a hall for our meeting this month. The Red Cross found instant favor with the members at the June meeting, when a liberal donation was voted the fund, with the stipulation that periodically the sum would be duplicated as long as the war lasts. But that is not all, for our individual members have done splendidly in individual contributions to the Red Cross, to the Young Men's Christian Association, to the Knights of Columbus and the liberty bond sales.

Our hats are off to the members of Manchester (N. H.) Union on their splendid handling of the New England convention in June, for the glowing reports we get here are that the Queen City boys did themselves proud, and all this without a souvenir program and its attendant ills and set-backs. The influence and the benefits of the convention ought to figure quite potentially in typographical circles in Manchester for some time to come, for unless I am terribly in error the beneficial effects will be quite the most impressive thing the convention will have left in memory's storehouse long after the breezes of Uncanoonucs are forgotten and the mammoth Amoskeag factories have faded from the mind and the most retentive memory. May time only accentuate the good that we do, not only in Manchester, but all over our jurisdiction.

Miss Lilla M. Brault, linotype operator on the Sun, who has been away from her keyboard on account of illness, is improving.

Though the union did not send a delegate to the Colorado Springs convention, the reports of the officers and organizers published in the August JOURNAL were read with avidity, and the salient points in the more important passages in those reports were discussed among the members. Those of us who have been atop Pikes Peak, or have stepped into the Manitou or the Cave of the Winds, those of us who have baked for even a little while in the warm sunshine that spreads its rays over the mountains and into the nation's own dreamland, our Home at the Springs, can live awhile in remembrance of what they saw, can go back in memory's storehouse and ponder again the scenes about the immaculately kept Home, and will wonder, yes, wonder, at the progressiveness which sticks out all over the management of the Home, the charming homelike atmosphere of the place, almost bidding you to remain behind the massive gate, which tells the uninitiated tersely and tritely that here is the Union Printers Home, a home in all that the word implies. I can recall my visit two years ago quite vividly on my way to the Los Angeles convention, with my friends, William C. Nickerson and Renforth C. Bleakney, of Boston Union; Senator Jackson, of Lynn; William Blake, of the Boston Mailers; John Brown, also of the Boston Union, good fellows all, we elected to walk from our hotel to the Home and we rounded the hills and at length came to the top of the hill, the while breathing in the wonderful air of that mountainous country. We stood, as I recall it for the minute, in open-mouthed wonderment at the entrance of the Home, the stern reality of which had shattered our fondest dreams, and then we went about the grounds carefree and chatted with the residents. My recollection of the Home, the mountains of Colorado, the matchless Royal Gorge, where the overhanging mountain edges seem as if they would momentarily topple over on you, the sandy Utah desert, the buoyant salty waters of Salt Lake, the foggy mornings in 'Frisco, the sunshine orange valley of Los Angeles, the two great expositions are but a few of the incidental things I recall of the 1915 convention at Los Angeles, where the eloquence of ex-President James M. Lynch enthralled us all. Ah, how could I forget, he who has gone before, the fluency and irresistible wit of clever "Booth" Thomson, now no more, he who gave so much time and talent to a furtherance of the apprentice boy and his future. Verily, the Colorado Springs convention must have sorely felt the loss of "Booth," must have longed for his matchless wit as the presents were doled out to the home union's committee. Alas, he has gone, but mayhap the spirit of one who in life was so in love with the International Typographical Union and its programs, mayhap the spirit of he who gave much of his energy in later years to a solving of the apprenticeship question, perhaps, I say, the spirit of "Booth" Thomson hovered over the spot where stands the Home on its journey to the stars.

Our meeting this month is liable to develop several interesting matters because no session has been held since June and things which have been discussed during the past two months may come up for action. At any rate, the September meeting annually seems like getting a fresh start on the work of the union after the heat of the summer.

Worcester's capable correspondent, William P. Cantwell, has been compelled to relinquish the pen of correspondent to some one else, a pen which he wielded with efficacy and earnestness, and which in laying down brings much discomfort and disappointment to those who have monthly been edified by him in masterful contributions. If I recall correctly, Mr. Cantwell was a delegate to the Lowell convention in 1914 and I had the pleasure at that time of meeting Mr. Cantwell and of being forcibly impressed by his strength of purpose and earnestness as a union man. Success to him wheresoever he may go.

Representative Dallas, in his report to the International body, speaks of the negotiations with the Shaw Stocking Company, previously referred to at length in these columns. He states that the president of No. 310 will take advantage of any opportunity that may present itself, and I am glad to state that I have been working on several plans in relation to that plant for some months in the hope that at a later date I might get a conference with the new treasurer, Albert Walton. One of our members has been made foreman of the composing room of the plant, and I find there is a splendid sentiment prevalent there that our members are the most capable in the firm's employ.

Things don't move as swiftly as one would like in the adjustment of these scale and hour ideas with plants like the Shaw company. Unfortunately, obstacles are invariably encountered in these schemes which take months to surmount, obstacles which sorely try one's patience, but which time removes. It has taken years, not months, but over a decade of years to establish the pleasant relations now existing between our union and the employers in our town, it has taken time, precious though we think it is, to build up here a strong, virile union, but in less than one-third the time it has taken to build up those things which we here in Lowell pride as the strong links in our chain, can be smashed by ill-advised action or too close adherence to one's own importance as an official of the union; self-consciousness and arrogance has lost many a battle, and he who arrogates to himself all the wisdom, all the knowledge, all the judgment and all the perception has short shrift, and his superior attainments, self-styled, inevitably lead others into places and troubles that show us up not well but unwisely and savor of amateurish nonsense. Hence if our attitude on things which come up in our jurisdiction is not thoroughly understood by all, it does not follow that because it is not understood that those who are in authority temporarily are leading the organization astray.

JOHN V. DONOGHUE.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Unionism received a boost in Kansas City when the 2,500 street car men struck for recognition of their union. Public sympathy was with the men. The company refused to treat with the strikers, imported strikebreakers from the slums of eastern cities, and prepared to start their cars. On Saturday night of the strike 10,000 people congregated at the scabs' quarters, marched the 550 men with their hands in the air two miles to the Union station and compelled them to board cars. The company resorted to our old friend injunction, but failed to move a car, and on August 16 signed up with the men.

Prospects for unionizing some of the non-union shops was announced at the last union meeting.

The St. Louis special, with about one hundred delegates and visitors, were entertained here at the musicians' club rooms Friday evening, August 10. President Traylor and Jack Shryock with their wives accompanied the delegates. It is said that Shryock has been much concerned over the herd of Holstein cows at the Home, and intended to make it his special business to see they are looked after.

Frank Klunk, proofreader at the Star, was struck by a motor car several weeks ago while out to lunch. He suffered a fractured hip and probably will be permanently crippled.

Norman Ray, William Michael and Frank McQuaid received commissions at the officers' reserve corps at Fort Riley, Kan., and will leave soon for France. Det Smith, who joined the marines, already has received recognition from the government and came home recently to bid his friends good-by. He wore a sharpshooter's medal.

No. 80 instructed its delegates to vote for the repeal of the six-day law.

With the high cost of living and the public endorsement of the carmen's union, now is the time to start a label campaign. F. L. STARKS.

JACKSONVILLE, ILL.

At the last regular meeting it was decided that No. 356 would pay all dues and assessments for members who answered the call to the colors.

Ralph Douglas, apprentice at the Journal, has joined Company B, Fifth Illinois infantry.

A resolution was passed at the last meeting that a clause be added to our scale protecting members' situations who joined any branch of army or navy.

"Bill" Mercer, well known throughout Illinois, caught a few nights' work at the Journal last month.

The following editorial appeared in the Jacksonville Journal, August 15:

A WELL-DIRECTED LABOR ORGANIZATION.

The facts set forth in the address of President Scott of the International Typographical Union at the annual convention in Colorado shows that organization now, as in the past, is one of the strongest and well ordered of all labor organizations. So reasonably and with such vision are the affairs of the typographical union managed that one seldom reads in the press the stories of any differences between union members and their employers. Further evidence of the wisdom which has guided this organization is found in the financial statement and in the record of the anti-tuberculosis hospital and other institutions for the comfort and care of union members that the organization maintains.

There is another outstanding fact in the president's report which further commends the union at this time, and that is the number of young men who have enlisted for army service. The patriotism of the organization is still further shown by liberal subscription made from the national treasury for the purchase of liberty bonds. The typographical union furnishes a fine example of organized labor rightly conducted.

Delegates to the second annual Illinois Typographical Union meeting, to be held at Joliet in October, will be elected at the next regular meeting. C. E. NEWPORT.

EDMONTON, ALTA.

Owing to continued lack of support by a large majority of the membership, non-attendants at regular union meetings from month to month, it was decided at the August meeting to take a referendum vote on a proposal to increase the dues from 2½ per cent to 3 per cent, and allow those members attending regular meetings a rebate of 75 cents for the corresponding month, thus making the dues less under the increased rate at the present time to attendants. This action is in line with that taken by several other subordinate bodies in the west, and it is to be hoped that the members will realize the importance of the scheme to such an extent that it will become effective.

President Knott was unanimously the choice of No. 604 as a candidate for the now vacant position of International Typographical Union representative for the province of Alberta.

As a result of efforts put forth by the executive committee of the Western Canada Conference in distributing literature to country printers, the writer at the present time is negotiating with several printers located in country offices upon inquiries being made by said individuals with a view to becoming members. After a thorough résumé of the course pursued to seek membership in the International Typographical Union—and what a great organization it is—I have recommended at all times that they take the I. T. U. Course in Printing. After going through the usual test, George A. Duncan, of Grande Prairie, was received into membership last month, and several other candidates are likely prospects.

Since last writing, a new job office has been opened on Jasper West by J. D. Skinner, and is now an addition to our long string of union offices.

Electric metal pots for typesetting machines have taken on well by the employers in this city. The Adair typesetting plant is now fully equipped with the new health safety device, and two new machines recently installed by the Journal also are so equipped, with assurance that the entire battery will in the near future receive such furnishings. It might also be added that the Bulletin has placed an order for electric pots for its battery of five machines. The installation of this equipment in the various machine offices will tend to improve sanitary conditions, as well as improve the quality of production.

With the coming of summer resorts within close proximity to the city, the opportunity has presented itself for towns-people, and especially printers, to spend week-ends as well as an occasional week, at some of the beautiful lakes, bathing, boating and fishing. Many are the fish stories told by the victims of Old King Sol. Thomas Morgan, in charge of the plant at the Hotel Macdonald, has returned after enjoying a pleasant vacation on the Pacific coast.

The writer is convalescing after being confined to his residence for some weeks, as a result of being a passenger on the wrecked C. N. R. Alberta Beach train on Saturday, July 28. The most serious injuries experienced were to the spinal column, but no permanent defects are entertained. Fortunate in escaping fatal injuries to say the least, when it is considered that five persons were killed in close proximity.

J. G. McMurray, after remaining with us a few weeks, has departed for Calgary.

A. N. Wright, of Town Topics, and Mrs. Wright are on an extended visit to eastern Ontario and Quebec. Thomas E. Rutherford, who has been employed on the Camrose Canadian for the past three years, is again in our midst.

A union picnic of the ladies of No. 604 was held in the South Side park on August 11. The weather was all that could be desired, being ideal for the long program of sports, which included a number of new and well-thought-out events, all of which met with keen competition. The affair will be a memorable one. With cooler weather approaching, the ladies are making plans for regular monthly social evenings throughout the winter.

C. J. ("Dad") Stevens, an old-time member of No. 604, is home on furlough after rendering a year of service in France. Private Stevens won the distinguished conduct medal by carrying dispatches from the front line trenches to headquarters under fire, and by capturing a number of German prisoners. He bears four wounds, the most severe of which was inflicted by a shrapnel bullet in the breast, which punctured his lung and led to his being invalided home on furlough.

George Mackintosh, secretary of Edmonton Union until enlisting in November, 1915, has returned home, and received a warm welcome. "Mac" has been in the hospital for a lengthy period, suffering from a severe bullet wound in the thigh, and he has been advised by the local military hospital authorities since arriving here that it will be necessary to perform an operation on the injured limb. One and all hope that this operation will prove to be successful to the utmost extent, and that no unforeseen developments will result. Here's hoping for the best.

GUY R. DEETON.

SPARTANBURG, S. C.

No. 341 held its regular August meeting on the first Sunday with a very small attendance. The members seem to be devoting more time to pleasure these days than they do to union affairs.

We are drafting a new scale which is to be presented to the different offices some time soon.

Ogburn Campbell has returned after spending several weeks in North Carolina.

Curtis F. Shields has answered the call of his country by joining the coast artillery company.

T. A. Wilson, who is now in Columbia, paid Spartanburg a visit for a few days.

John W. Tinsley, of the Journal chapel, was married to Miss Rena Palmer, of Charlotte, on July 28.

Spartanburg Union has voted to keep up the cards of all her members that enlist for service in the army.

L. C. WILSON.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Not in over fifty years has the sound of martial music and the sight of sober-visaged soldiers marching through the streets been fraught with such significance as on July 25, when the Rhode Island national guard, as brave as any in the land, paraded the streets on the eve of their departure for a training camp before vast throngs of people, perhaps the largest crowd ever assembled in this state to witness a procession of any kind. Amaranthine memories of the event of July 25 were carried home by the thousands that lined the route of march to wish Godspeed to the troops in the perilous undertaking that the future may hold in store for them. For many—those who had sons in line—it was indeed an occasion that tried the stoutest heart. Mothers, sisters, wives and sweethearts were saddened at the thought that some of the boys may never come back. Many men, even, among those watching the procession were seen furtively to wipe their eyes. It was a fine tribute that the people of Rhode Island paid to the boys who so willingly have taken up arms in defense of the nation's honor. Old Glory was everywhere in evidence. The spectacle of the marching hosts between solid masses of humanity, topped on either side by artistic decorations in the American colors, was to the dullest onlooker an inspiring sight. The stirring marches played so swingingly by the bands added another thrill to the grandeur of the exhibition. The final appearance of the guardsmen before they begin training for the conflict abroad opened up vistas to the human imagination that lead to most uncertain happenings, and for this reason the sight of these brave lads kindled a feeling of devotion toward them. At the close of the parade the coast artillery, said to be the largest national guard unit in the country, held a review and a battalion drill parade on Dexter training ground. The printers of the city were particularly interested in the parade because of the number of the craft who have enlisted, and these men received their share of applause as the line passed.

One of the printing offices in the city has inaugurated a daylight-saving scheme. The dawn of this new era has not been in operation a sufficient length of time to determine it a success or otherwise. At present its victims sympathize with those inflicted with the "lobster shift."

Clifford Frazier, for some time employed in the composing room of the Bulletin, has withdrawn his card and gone to Cauvin, Alberta, Canada, where he intends to pursue the art of agriculture.

Veteran Samuel R. Macready, after an absence of several weeks from his work in the composing room of the Providence Bulletin because of a serious illness, has returned to his labors.

Visitors in Providence the past month were: James Russell, Worcester; William Carr, Taunton, and Robert Sterling, on the road. Norman E. McPhail and William Upton came to town via the Colonial line from New York on their way to Boston and stopped off here to visit friends.

President John F. Murphy was presented with a suitcase by members of No. 33 prior to his departure as a delegate from Providence Union to the Colorado Springs convention.

J. Bowditch has deposited a New York traveling card. Withdrawn: Charles Crabtree; John Sharp, who has gone to Taunton, Mass., and Robert McEndy, who is now employed on the Attleboro Sun.

The Providence Tribune Company has signed the agreement as recommended by President Scott and Chairman Kellogg, guaranteeing to its employes who may enlist their situations on their return from service.

Robert Carroll, of the Tribune, and Miss Rachel Keefe were united in marriage at St. Joseph's rectory on August 15. Mr. and Mrs. Carroll have the best wishes of the membership of No. 33 in their new departure.

EDWARD N. GRIFFITHS.

MIAMI, FLA.

The Metropolis Publishing Company has built an addition to its composing room and the management has moved the battery of linotype machines into the new part. This change gives much more room for the working force and adds greatly to the comfort of the employes. Formerly the summer conditions in the composing room were almost intolerable.

W. S. Thompson, who left on a few weeks' outing recently, has returned and is again listed among the working class.

Phil Pritchard, who was employed on the Metropolis all winter, left for the north last month on an extended trip. Shortly after his departure his name was published as one drawn for military service.

On the night of August 2 the management of the Miami Herald tendered a banquet to its entire force in honor of seven of its members who had enlisted for service in defense of flag and country. Of the seven enlisted four were from the mechanical department, and included Leo Wolfe and Russel Messler in the national naval volunteers, Harold Silvers in the signal corps and Earl Hoag in the aviation corps. The others included Mrs. Marjorie Stoneman Douglas, society editor, yeoman in the naval reserve; W. W. Thompson, reporter, and Roy McHugh, assistant advertising solicitor, in the national naval volunteers. Each of the enlisted men was presented by the general manager, Edward Taylor, with a beautiful solid silver, gold-lined cigarette case with the monogram of the recipient engraved upon it. In presenting the gifts Mr. Taylor thanked the enlisted men for the honor which they were bestowing upon the Herald by representing it at the front, and he assured each one that his situation would be open for him on his return. With the departure of these men for the front almost every available man on the mechanical force of the Herald is now in active military service, while the Metropolis has been slighted, inasmuch as not one of its mechanical force is among the enlisted or drafted numbers. Although No. 430 is small numerically, it can not be classed as a slacker, as one-sixth of its entire membership is now represented in the two great arms of the United States fighting forces, namely, the navy and the army.

H. A. Davis, linotype operator from the United States in general, but lately from Atlanta and the west coast of Florida, paid Miami a visit last month and while here subbed on the Herald.

WESTERN CANADA CONFERENCE.

William Oxley (Brantford, Ont.), and William Murray (London, Ont.), have deposited cards with Saskatoon Union, as well as J. Turvey (Calgary), and G. H. Fowler (member-at-large).

C. J. (Dad) Stevens, an old-time member of No. 604, Edmonton, is home from the front on furlough. He was quite severely wounded.

George Mackintosh, former secretary of Edmonton Union, is back from the front, having been invalided home.

H. W. Falconer, president of Moose Jaw Union, is away to his old home in New Brunswick on a holiday jaunt.

Mrs. B. W. Bellamy, of Medicine Hat, has been appointed on the special committee decided upon at the recent convention of the Woman's National Council held in Winnipeg, to discuss and report to the next convention on the pros and cons of the typographical union label and the relationship in general existing between the organized labor movement and the Woman's National Council. Another big effort will be made at next year's convention to have the label adopted by the council.

Medicine Hat Typographical Union is having an interesting scrap with the city council of that city over the fact that city printing has been unnecessarily executed at out-of-town printshops.

Wilfrid Hughes and Bryce Holland, of Regina Union, have enlisted, the former in the infantry and the latter in the aviation corps. Nelson Newbatt presented himself, but failed to pass medical examination.

James D. Wallace, president of Saskatoon Union, was a candidate at the recent elections in that city to fill a vacancy on the aldermanic board, but was unsuccessful. It is claimed a dead set was made upon him by the anti-labor forces. He was given to understand that he would have been quite acceptable to a certain class if he had not run as a labor man, and he was the recipient of overtures to break away. But "Jim" is made of too good stuff to sacrifice his union principles for the padded seats of the council chamber.

The executive committee of the Ontario Conference has taken up many of the matters considered at the Regina convention of the Western Canada Conference, and is now actively cooperating on some of the propositions that were adopted at Regina.

Fred Tomlinson, of Medicine Hat Union, who was invalided home from the front some time ago, and has been in Victoria, writes that he is again about ready to get back into the printing game. Fred endeavored to sign up again, but was considered unfit for further service at present.

The southern Alberta branch of the patriotic fund, at a general meeting held in Calgary, decided to urge the Dominion government to raise and administer the fund in future. This is directly in line with a resolution adopted at the Regina convention of the Western Canada Conference.

An agreement has been negotiated with the Calgary newspaper offices, the wages to be $25 flat days, and $27 flat nights. Arrangements have at time of writing been practically completed for a similar raise for job men, which means an increase of $3 on the floor. The term of the original contract remains unchanged.

Pte. Johnny Bleaken, returned veteran, has resigned the presidency of Calgary Union, following the advice of his physician. Vice-President A. W. Jenkins steps up, and B. J. Orman becomes vice-president.

The executive of the Western Canada Conference has requested the International executive council to appoint D. K. Knott, president of the conference, as representative for the province of Alberta, to fill the vacancy created through the resignation of R. R. Elliot on account of serious illness.

Calgary, 147 members, two machine subs, averaging full time. Moose Jaw, thirty-eight members; trade fair. Medicine Hat, seventeen members; trade fair. Lethbridge, thirteen members; trade fair. Saskatoon, sixty-six members. Regina, 111 members; several cards deposited; trade continues good.

B. W. Bellamy.

HARTFORD, CONN.

Owing to the hot spell, our last few meetings have been poorly attended. But here's hoping the weather won't keep them away from our next meeting.

Just a reminder: In these days of doing your bit, don't forget to do your bit for the union label.

The Courant Publishing Company has installed metal feeders on their machines.

"Pop" Chase was elected delegate to represent our union at the state federation of labor convention, held at Danbury this year.

The following have enjoyed the sea breezes the past month: "Bill" Wheldon, at Brantford; "Bill" Bowan, at Sound View; "Brownie," of the Globe office, spent a few weeks touring Chicago, St. Louis and Indianapolis, visiting old friends.

Two members have been called to serve the colors at this time of writing.

Business is fair in the newspaper end and quiet in the job end at this writing.

Tom O'Connell, of the Globe chapel, has the sympathy of the members of No. 127 in the death of his wife, which occurred recently.

No. 127 will pay dues for members who have been called in the draft to serve their country.

The allied printing trades council has issued a list of union offices now and this fall will make a drive to gather in a few more non-union offices in the fold. Good progress is being made in getting the milkmen to have the label on their tickets, etc.

Ray Willis, operator on the Post, has returned from a three-weeks' vacation in New York and way stations.

First Vice-President O. A. Miles has been in Providence on business for the New England Typographical Union.

Arrivals: Andrew Boland, J. A. Monroe, W. ("Broken-Nose") Roach. Departures: John Laird, L. H. Maisenbacher. H. F. TROMMER.

OMAHA, NEB.

S. H. Parsons, proofreader on the Bee, recently presented to a company of Omaha recruits bound for "Somewhere in France" an historic bugle which was used by a bugler called "Frenchy" in Custer's operations against the Indians near Meade, S. D. The bugle was given to Mr. Parsons by his brother, who received it from "Frenchy" just before his death. "Frenchy" was spared the fate of his company in the Custer massacre by some violation for which he was given a term in the guard house.

T. W. McCullough left August 9 for Colorado Springs, where he was scheduled to make one of the principal addresses at the anniversary celebration at the Union Printers Home.

F. A. Kennedy, publisher of the Western Laborer and a member of No. 190, was recently appointed a member of the exemption board for the state of Nebraska.

O. R. Robinson of Columbus, Neb., formerly employed on the Omaha Bee, but now in charge of a Columbus daily composing room, visited in Omaha a few days recently.

Trade in Omaha held up very well until August 15, when it dropped very perceptibly.

Cards received: G. L. Zimmerman, J. H. Hollis, J. W. Whitmer, Fred White, A. V. Billings, E. J. Lawder.

Cards issued: W. R. Murray, E. B. Holub, E. D. Smith, J. S. Harminia, Otto Ewing, A. L. Cockle, James. Davis, R. J. Milligan, Glen E. Brewer, G. L. Zimmerman, D. W. Menser, J. H. Hollis. D. L. STANTON.

HALIFAX, N. S.

The August meeting of No. 130 brought out a full quota of members. The present quarters of the union were almost inadequate to comfortably seat the large attendance. The temperature was high for Halifax, yet interest flagged not until the final tap of President Norris' gavel. Consideration of the new scale was the interest arouser, and all angles of the question received attention. The proposed new scale will be submitted to a chapel vote and tabulated returns will be presented to the next meeting. Both employers and employes agree that there must be an increased scale, but the minimum or maximum of that increase will be determined when the last conference between both parties shall have gone into history. There are differences of opinion as to the wisdom of holding the job and machine scales together; the great benefit arising from an equalized scale, however, is the concerted action and co-operative effort which ensues when the members have a common purpose to pursue.

Two apprentice members were elected to full membership, Edward Harris and John Zinn. A few more are to follow before the snow falls. Business continues normal, all members on the pay roll. Joe Kennedy is reported on the sick list. Another label shop has been added to the list, the Nova Printing Company, Ltd. This makes eight offices carrying the union label.

"Con" O'Brien paid his annual visit to Halifax last month. A deep breath of the ozone from old ocean, he says, keeps him fit during the rest of the year. "Farmer" John Brunt also was in town "getting a glimpse of old chebucts." "Con" Keefe reports himself as fit as ever for the sprints. He says "you want a few of the old boys to liven things up."

"Ike" Beals, who died in Boston, was at one time secretary of No. 130. He also held the position of assistant foreman on the Herald. His laugh was a tonic, his geniality and optimism were always sure gloom dissipaters and general is the regret at the passing of one of the old guard.

George W. Harris has been appointed chairman of the labor temple committee. President Ralph Eisnor is the delegate from the trades and labor council to the convention of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, to be held in Ottawa.

It is some time since a delegate has been sent from Halifax to the International Typographical Union convention. Some of the members are talking this matter up, and it is hoped something will be doing next year. J. E. SCHAFFER.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

The August meeting of No. 20 was held on the afternoon of Sunday, the 5th, and was fairly well attended. The chair was occupied by President A. E. Hill, who had just returned with his bride from an extended wedding trip to northern and eastern cities. He presided, if possible, in a more dignified and businesslike manner than ever, perhaps with the view of impressing upon Mrs. Hill, who was present, that he was right there when it came to being "boss." Besides the regular routine business transacted an assessment was voted to defray the expenses of G. W. Bobo, whose physician advised him that he could not long survive without a change of climate, to Colorado Springs. August E. Vuillot, a member of Battery E, was elected to membership, and Solomon Schulman, also a member of Battery E, was elected to apprentice membership. At the close of the meeting Mrs. Hill made a short talk to the members that was heartily applauded. Mrs. Hill is a most charming and attractive lady, and many of the members had the pleasure of meeting her.

G. W. Bobo, who has been in failing health for some time and unable to work, has gone to Colorado Springs, to await action on his application for admission to the Home.

Chairman W. W. Shivell, of the Banner chapel, requests the announcement that there is back-pay coming to the following: George Johnston, A. B. LaPreux, Harry Hite, M. V. Dickerson, H. D. Reese, and W. F. Smith. This is on account of the increase in the scale, and accumulated while the settlement of the scale was pending.

Chairman Charles Rothenberg, of the business committee, is endeavoring to get a record of all apprentices in the various chapels. So far he has secured but few. Chairman of the various chapels are requested to turn this information over to Mr. Rothenberg at once.

Tom Dougherty recently received by express from Florida a live alligator. He wondered why in thunder the donor couldn't have sent something that he could eat instead of something that looked like it could eat him. It developed that "Oom Paul" Wagner, who had been in Florida on a visit to his family, had captured the "critter" and forwarded it to him.

H. C. Sanborn, foreman of the Tennesseean and American, spent a couple of weeks camping and fishing on Harper river during August. "Sandy" is some angler, and it's a cold day when he doesn't catch 'em.

There has been some improvement during the past month in condition of trade in book and job shops, with sufficient men to take care of the work.

Lytton Alley and Horace P. Newton, delegates from No. 20 to Colorado Springs convention, left early in August in order to visit several western cities during their stay. Mrs. Alley accompanied her husband on the trip. By the time the September JOURNAL is in the hands of readers the delegates will have returned and given an account of themselves.

R. W. Allen, who for the past four years has had charge of the monotype casting department of the Ambrose Printing Company, left with his family on August 17 for his native state, Texas. He is now located at Waco, where he has a similar position with a large concern. Earl H. McEwen, who has been with the Brandon Printing Company, accepted the position vacated by Mr. Allen. At this time it is not known who will fill the vacancy at the Brandon plant. Mr. Allen made many warm friends during his residence here, and by his departure No. 20 has lost a stanch member and the city a splendid citizen. He and his family carried with them the good wishes of a host of friends.

John Moran has been heard from at Colorado Springs. E. ROY MOORE.

TACOMA, WASH.

Tacoma and vicinity, at the present time, is experiencing unusual activity in the labor movement, and the general public is beginning to realize that organized labor is fighting a battle forced upon it by corporations refusing their men and women a decent living wage that the present-day laborer is entitled to in justice to himself and family and working conditions and hours in keeping with the present-day advancement.

A striking example of the united support given a newly-organized union by the general public to assist the men in obtaining their demands—recognition of their union, reinstatement of seven men discharged for labor activities, a living wage, decent working hours and conditions—was enacted during the last two weeks in July during the street car men's strike in Tacoma.

The company's refusal to grant their demands—reasonable and justifiable as every one knows them to be—threw the sympathy of the entire city with the strikers. Never before in the annals of organized labor has the entire community, which was the direct sufferer, stood so solidly for the strikers, assisting them in every way possible to win their strike. Every one walked and smiled the first few days of the strike, regardless of distance, until the jitney came to the rescue, and complaints from the people were as few and far between as the few scab cars which the company attempted to force on the people and which they absolutely refused to use for transportation facilities.

Although the company may have felt that violence was used against them by strike sympathizers, who, at times, surrounded a scab car and stopped its progress, these were nothing more than mild demonstrations, as was shown in a crowd of two or three thousand people in which not a single window was broken and but a few trolley ropes cut, and during which time the strikers went so far as to try and protect the company's property. The company must take the responsibility of these mild demonstrations, due to their importing strikebreakers from eastern cities.

The strikers have returned to work feeling that they have won a big victory over the Stone & Webster Company, a corporation that has fought organized labor for years, in that the company has consented to the employes joining any labor organization which they see fit, reinstatement of five men who were discharged for labor activities, the other two men's cases going before the arbitration board, as do wages and hours.

No. 170 placed $100 at the disposal of the executive committee to be used in assisting the striking carmen.

Not only are the street car men asking for a square deal from the corporation that holds an iron hand over them, but the shingle weavers and timber workers are asking for the eight-hour day. Regardless of the fact that the Lumber Manufacturers' Association has recently created a fund of $500,000 to be used in the destruction of unionism, these men have come forward with their demand for eight hours. Mills, logging camps and factories using wood in their manufactured products have been closed by their refusal to grant the shorter day, when the men walked out. A few mills and factories have voluntarily given their men the eight-hour day with the ten-hour wage scale, and those refusing and suffering a shutdown include the largest mills in this vicinity.

So strong has the spirit of organization become that it has spread to the telephone offices and stores, and steps have been taken resulting in the organization of the telephone operators and store clerks.

There is no doubt that this organized movement is placing union labor before the public in a better light, with the result that their demands will be recognized as just demands and that laborers, whether organized or not, will be benefited by better working conditions and hours granted them by their employers as a direct outcome of the battle waged by union men and women.

CAREY PRINTING COMPANY OUTING.

Surely one of the "best ever" was the Carey Printing Company's outing, held July 21 at Duer's picnic grove, Whitestone, L. I. Fully 400 people attended at this occasion, which was a purely "family affair," and therefore enjoyed by everybody. This affair demonstrated that these outings are the more preferable, as the so-called "stags" for men only are in bad repute. Anyway, if you are out for a good time, let your family enjoy it with you. The Carey outing is a worthy example. The main event was the baseball games between the compositors and the pressmen. Three opposing teams had been selected after the bindery team had forfeited its game on the previous Saturday. The press people were hopelessly outclassed, as a score of 28 to 1 in favor of the compositors clearly proved. The only run scored by the opposing team was made by Harry Praeg (foreman) by special request, he not being a member of the team, did not want to see his team whitewashed.

While the baseball game was going on the other events were taking place and the large program came to a close at 6 P. M. This late hour prevented the swimming races being held, as the committees claimed they were too tired to officiate. This claim was, of course, decried by many, but was allowed, as Mr. Stumpf did not even get a chance to have his breakfast, and came very near being cheated out of his dinner.

All the "big guns" of the firm were present, but the only one that stuck to the last was Mr. Dittman and his family, who seemed to enjoy themselves to the utmost. Dancing was indulged in during the whole day and more so after dinner. At 8 o'clock the bugle sounded for the drill of the Home Defense League, of which the Carey company participates with two companies. For amateur soldiers the executions were masterpieces, as the loud applause from the merry picnickers was surely heard miles away. At 9:30 train time had arrived and ended the wonderfully successful outing, long to be remembered by all participants.

PARKERSBURG, W. VA.

Parkersburg is once more enrolled with those cities and towns having a local branch of the International Typographical Union, No. 357 having been reorganized, August 1, through the efforts of Representative Campbell.

No. 357 is like the cat having "nine lives." She refuses to remain dead. An unsuccessful effort was made about three years ago, but since that time the sentiment in favor of organization has been growing, with the present gratifying result. While the membership realizes the difficult conditions with which they will have to contend, they are, on the whole, optimistic regarding the future.

WINNIPEG, MAN.

At a special meeting, held August 1, it was finally decided by the union to accept the employer's offer of $25 per week for one year. A majority of the members present were still in favor of holding out for $27, but the necessary three-fourths majority not being forthcoming, the members bowed to the inevitable. The decision of the executive council to refuse to grant strike permission, aided by the fact that the employers doled out quite a number of individual raises during the time the scale negotiations were in progress, was responsible for turning a practically unanimous vote to hold out for $27 into a reluctant acceptance of $25. It was stated that if the union agreed to accept the employers' offer there would be no difficulty in the printer getting $27. Which raises the question, who is the printer and who is the judge? It has happened in Winnipeg that members who were considered incompetent in one office have received over the scale in another. And some of the printers who are now enjoying a wage over the scale might not be considered competent if they had to seek pastures new. The fight now comes on the enforcement of union shop conditions.

The event of the month in printing circles was the holding of the first annual picnic of the ladies of No. 191 at Kildonan park, Saturday, August 11. There were twenty-one events on the sports program, starting with a race for babies three years old and under and finishing with the inevitable married man's race. There were forty-seven prizes for the winners of the events, in addition to which every baby present received a prize. The greatest excitement centered round the contest for the special prizes, of which there were three donated by Mr. and Mrs. Dave Hutchinson for the babies' race and the seven-year-old girls' race, and by the executive committee of No. 191 for the race confined to the ladies. The tots' race caused great amusement, the special prize, a pair of handsome white rabbits, being won by G. A. Ryan, one year and ten months; E. Forbes being a close second. The special prize for girls of seven years was won by M. Limmert, and Mrs. J. Stevens took home the case of silver teaspoons presented by the executive committee. A slight misunderstanding seems to have arisen among some of the contestants in the race confined to girls of sixteen years and under. They seemed to be under the impression that it was for girls of sixteen years and over. Albert McAuley came in first in the married man's race, for which there was a large entry, but the judges gave the decision to the next best, they, presumably, being influenced by section 121, general laws, with reference to priority, Albert having not been quite so long in Winnipeg as the other contestant. A tug-of-war contest between Harry Powers and one of the ladies who tried to pull Harry by the coattails out of the group composed of the members of the picnic committee who were lined up for the official photograph, was won by Harry. In the football match, which was won by the married men by 2 to 0, Schell proved that the union meeting is not the only place he can kick. At the conclusion of the distribution of prizes cheers were given for the ladies, and the hope expressed that they hold another picnic before the season expires. The outing was a great success and the ladies established a number of precedents. The members of the picnic committee found themselves left with a cash surplus instead of a deficit, as has been customary in union affairs; the two-page program, although it contained the sports program, was the least part of their expenditure, and there was no waste of paper; and everybody went home thoroughly satisfied and happy. The picnic committee received donations from the Union, the Telegram news, Telegram job, the Press night, Free Press job, Farmers' Advocate, Stovel's and Willson Stationery Company chapels.

Private George Russell, late machinist on the Telegram, writes from Shorncliffe that, although not yet on the firing line, he has been experiencing some of the discomforts of warfare, having been quarantined for diphtheria and having had airships dropping bombs near him. George says an airplane dropped a bomb twenty yards from where he was stationed and that his heart stood still during the few seconds' warning he received from the time he heard the whiz until the explosion took place. Bill Robertson is in the Eighteenth reserve battalion, bombing instructor and a full corporal; he was wounded in the arm. Jack Birnie is at Shorncliffe with the Fourteenth reserve, also Alf Welch and Rube Nix. Alf Mathews is a captain on the staff. Bert Luff is with the Eighteenth reserve.

On Thursday evening, August 9, the members of the Stovel chapel held a reception at the residence of J. Rossiter to do honor to W. Archer on his safe return after two years' active service. W. Archer was one of the first of the Stovel employes to volunteer, and the members of the chapel exerted themselves to the utmost to make his home-coming enjoyable. Richard Pollock is now chairman of Stovel's chapel.

Tommy Weldon, who has been a member of the Brooklands school board for a year, has, along with some other members, been unseated on a technicality. It has been customary in the Brooklands district to allow members of the school board $25 a year as a recompense for the time devoted to the public service. However, Tommy and some of the other new members seemed to have the idea that they were elected to look after the interests of the ratepayers. These ideas were too radical, however, and the opposition dug up a forgotten clause in the school board act which forbids the members receiving any recompense whatever for their services. It's a cruel world, Tommy. Accept $25 for a year's hard work and you get unseated as a grafter, but get away with a million or two and then it will be the Hon. Tommy or Sir Thomas Weldon. Don't give up, Tommy. Remember Dick Whittington!

A referendum note taken by No. 191 on the compulsory service bill showed a majority opposed to conscription.

A later letter has been received from Private George Russell, in which he states:

> They are sending back to Canada for military duty a big bunch of men and I have been picked to go. I have been on two drafts for France. At first I was passed as A-2; all that class go to the trenches. Then I was graded B-2; they go to France also. I am still in B-2 class now, and we are all up in the air as to what they want us in Canada for. Lots of rumors why we are going back and what we are going to do, but haven't heard anything definite.

CHARLES RYAN.

LONDON, ONT.

The August meeting of No. 133 was only fairly attended, but, from a desultory beginning, developed into rapid-fire action, one of the bones of contention being the question of legality of a former meeting being postponed by the president, at the verbal petition of a goodly number of the members, the consensus of opinion being that no dire results were in evidence and that the cause for complaint was rather far-fetched. Delegate Ferguson reported that the trades and labor council would hold a monster picnic on Labor day, and requested that No. 133 donate a silver cup to the prize list for the baby show, which was granted. Three candidates were received into membership. The meeting was adjourned to meet on the second Sunday in September, instead of the first.

When this reaches the eye of the reader another commercial printing plant, the Hay Stationery and Printing Company, will have become unionized from garret to cellar.

Those having the organization work in hand are still on the job, and will be found in action until London is 100 per cent union, so far as No. 133 is concerned, so we would counsel our members who are employed in offices without agreements to sit tight and watch the seeds sprout. Enough said.

The London Advertiser has boosted its employes' wages from $1 to $3, according to amounts formerly received. Hats off to the Advertiser.

Al Fagan is now out of the hospital, and expects to be in harness at the Free Press chapel.

Alf Winslade, who suffered a severe attack of appendicitis, is again manipulating the ivories at the Free Press.

Arthur Hately, of the Charlton Press, and one of our promising young members, is slated for the foremanship of the Hays company.

Robert Garner, for thirty years a member of No. 133, passed away early on Friday morning, August 3. Bob was well known throughout this district, and was held in high esteem by all who knew him. He was at one time associated with the Garner-Young Press, but, although a proprietor, never relinquished his card, and was an active member to the end. The sympathy of No. 133 goes out to those who are left behind.

The foreman of the Free Press having recognized the ability of Peter McIntyre, an apprentice, by paying him the journeyman's scale, No. 133 will petition the International Typographical Union to permit his initiation as a full member.

Joe Millett, of the Free Press chapel, has taken out a traveler and hied himself to Ottawa. Joe says if Mike Powell can survive in Ottawa, there's a chance for him. But then, Michael doesn't have anything to do but sit on big fat cushions.

TEMPLE, TEXAS.

At our last meeting Bernard Middlebrook's application was voted on favorably.

Secretary-Treasurer J. P. Black spent his vacation at the Baptist state encampment at Lampasas, Texas. He reports a large attendance and an enjoyable time.

Recorder Andrew McBeath was absent at the last meeting, being in San Saba doing some special work for the Telegram. As far as we know, this is the first meeting that "Mac" has missed since the organization of No. 688. This leaves only the writer with the record of having never missed a meeting since we organized some six years ago.

At a recent meeting of the central trades council it was decided not to have a regular Labor day celebration for various reasons, but to have a basket dinner in the City Park in the interest of the Red Cross Society and have one or two good speakers to address those present.

Charles Williams has been elected as a delegate to the central trades council.

Jewell Smith, a member of this local, has cast his lot with Uncle Sam's boys in the motorcycle department at Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio, Texas. They expect to be in France soon. "Buddy" will make a good man in this department, as he has quite a bit of experience in riding motorcycles in speed contests.

The writer received a very interesting communication from Joseph H. M. Smith, secretary of the Union Label League of Fort Worth, Texas, as to how they conducted their organization so successfully in that city. We will use many of his suggestions. He has our thanks for same.

STUART SHAW.

LINCOLN, NEB.

Notwithstanding the terrific heat for several days, the mercury crowding close to 110, and a hot wind blowing from the south, Typographical Union No. 209 held a very interesting and profitable meeting Sunday afternoon, July 29, with more than the usual attendance.

The newly-elected officers were all in their places, President Eckert, presiding. Nine cards were received, six withdrawn and five applications read. Two were initiated, one of whom is under enlistment, expecting to go to the front—John H. Curtin and Charles D. Lilliard. The other applicants were George L. Hall, Carl David Spence, Wilbur L. Stickler, Horace Chester Orr. Cards received: Oliver Graf, W. L. Bustard, J. R. Page, C. E. Romaine, Mrs. W. J. Leigh, Fritz Langenheim, Mart Cole, Ed Kelley. Cards withdrawn: Frank H. Kent, Mert Cole, J. R. Page, J. W. Whitmer, C. D. Walker, A. C. Evans. Chapel reports were good and work pronounced fair, with nearly every printer working.

Mr. Ihringher, of the temple committee, reported that the Labor Temple was purchased seven years ago at a cost of $20,000, and today the debt is wiped out all but $3,500, and it is hoped to clear up the incumbrance soon.

A contract was reported signed with the Terminal Printing Company, a new concern just started in this city.

The delegate to the International Typographical Union, M. H. Adams, was instructed to use every means to prevent the locating of an auxiliary printers' home in any other part of the country, but not to object to the enlarging of the present buildings if it be deemed advisable. He was instructed to vote for an increase in the old age pension, and to favor any bill that tends to uphold the present International laws as they exist today.

A committee was appointed to draft resolutions of respect for the mother of August Radebaugh, who died during the past month.

Lincoln Union did not subscribe for any liberty bonds as a union, but nearly every member subscribed individually, the Star chapel gathering in $1,200 worth, and nearly all from $50 to $100.

HENRY ALLEN BRAINERD.

BANGOR, MAINE.

On Sunday afternoon, July 29, a mass meeting of the central labor union was held in the city hall. The meeting was called at the request of the state department of the American Federation of Labor to increase the interest in trade unionism and bring back some of the old life of labor organizations in Bangor. Many prominent speakers were on the program, and among them was Edward S. Alden, of Holyoke, Mass., editor of the Artisan. Mr. Alden is to be the editor of the proposed labor paper, the Maine Labor Journal. It seems very strange at this time, when No. 446 has a campaign on for new members, that only four could attend this meeting. In many letters in THE JOURNAL you can read where a correspondent will say if it was a meeting for the drawing up of a new scale, 80 per cent of the members would have a voice at the meeting. The Commercial, an evening paper that employs about thirty non-union printers, is the reason of this campaign. Many in that office, if approached by some of the older union men, would listen more readily of the benefits to be derived by carrying a card, but some don't even care how things are progressing. However, the writer is not discouraged, because some headway has been made and the organization committee, under the leadership of Joseph J. Dallas, is still on the job and has succeeded in making an impression on the Commercial.

Herbert S. Rand, of the government printing office in Washington, formerly of the News chapel, arrived in Bangor August 14 and was married to Miss Pauline Murphy, the assistant librarian of the public library. No. 446 wishes them success.

Herbert C. Jordan, ex-secretary, has returned from Augusta, where he was called with the reserves of Company G, Second Maine national guard.

Work is very quiet now, as usual during the summer months.

CALGARY, ALBERTA.

Since our last effort things have happened—events that we delight in recording: A flat scale has been signed up and now the "floor" and "machine" stand equal in both news and job. True, even with this concession on the part of employers, it can not be claimed that our scale is commensurate with the high cost of living, or that it compares with other scales in the west. It does not. Further, we are always up against that moss-back bewhiskered argument of the bosses, that our scale is the minimum, and they always bemoan the fact that "it's hard on the good workman." On such occasions we have to remind the employer that the union has no objection at all to him practicing the virtue of "charity," and if an employe is worth more than the scale—to pay him more.

These remarks lead us somewhere, viz: to the apprenticeship question. Unfortunately, most of the members of the apprentice committee of No. 449 appear to be engaged in intense agriculture or some other pursuit, and whenever called upon for a report can handle the finest line of excuses imaginable. This is regrettable, and the number of printers one meets today who lack solid technical knowledge is deplorable. The future of our craft and our union depends upon the apprentice of today, and it would seem that both employer and employe lack vision by not insisting that all apprentices take the I. T. U. Course, or at least part of it. This is not a question of sentiments of helping the boy; it is a plain, bold, economic necessity, for who will be responsible for us in our decrepit old age? The journeymen we are making today. Now is the time to start, and No. 449 will have to do something this winter.

The specious arguments of "advanced philosophers," that technical education means "better slaves," will not be tolerated by our membership, who know that technical education does not necessarily mean increased production, but it does mean "perfect production" and ease in production. The educated worker exerts less effort to produce a day's work than the uneducated.

August has been a month replete with summer events, picnics, foot races, etc. The Albertan job department sojourned to Bowness on Saturday, August 4, and from all accounts a rip-roaring time was spent. Not the least interesting feature of the affair was an auction of the "fragments" by "Dad" Farmsworth, who succeeded in securing some record bids. The management provided cars for transportation and covered all lost time. Their generosity is much appreciated. Quite a pleasing souvenir program was produced for the occasion, the general get-up of which—from a typographical and literary viewpoint—was unique. A foot-race, which for downright crookedness it would be hard to beat, was arranged by certain members, and two guileless, unsophisticated brethren from the Albertan news end were persuaded to travel with one of the contestants to "time" a trial spin. The rendezvous was Victoria park race track and the hour 3:30 A. M. The guileless starters with scrupulous punctility got the "dark horse" away on the dot and then 'neath the shadowy gloom of the grandstand they waited, and they waited—and they kept on waiting, until one of the two fearing the "dark 'un" had fallen down a gopher hole, or some other catastrophe had overtaken him, decided to take a trial spin of the course himself. He did, but could not discover the trial horse. Being charitably inclined, it was at first thought he had lost himself in the dark, but when an examination of the alleged running costume was made the whole brutal affair was made plain to the faithful—it was a bundle of oily rags. Around about breakfast time they decided to follow the example of the "dark horse," who had "hit the hay" some hours previously, and "Shorty's" remarks, as he climbed the mountain leading to Edmonton, are better left unproduced.

Saturday, August 11, was the gala day—the women's picnic. A crowd of some 200 assembled and His worship the Mayor (an old "Pyster" and charter member) graced the gathering with his presence. Sports for big 'uns and little 'uns were indulged in and it was a real pleasure outing. To record the numerous events and their exciting finishes might trespass upon valuable space, but we can not close without expressing our great appreciation of the ladies' efforts and the courtesy of the two daily papers who arranged to publish early and thus give their employes and families a right royal time. Now for a good fall and winter program, ladies.

Aphoristic—Don't kick about lack of unionism, cliqueism and the many other evils that beset the local unless you are doing your share for the social betterment of all. The local is what you make it—by permitting the other fellow to have all the say.

MOUNT VERNON, OHIO.

Typographical Union No. 783 was chartered June 12, 1917, with ten members.

Work is very slow here at present, but we look for a rush very soon.

Mount Vernon has one member in the army—Marion Elder.

One card was received, that of John C. McCreary, formerly of Colorado Springs No. 82. Mr. McCreary is owner and publisher of the Free Press at Fredericktown, Ohio.

Thomas A. Kellisor is on the sick list.

GUY I. ELDER.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

This being the first "batch" of items from your correspondent—a new man on the job—not much should be expected this month, but we promise to be diligent in the future and "cover the field more thoroughly," and endeavor to "dig up" some interesting "stuff" for the members.

The delegates to Colorado Springs convention—John P. Keating and R. L. Thacker—have not returned at this writing (August 19), hence no report is at hand. It is needless to say, however, that No. 23 appreciates the appointment of Mr. Keating as chairman of the laws committee.

Charles Hubbard, of the Journal, spent his vacation in Colorado, a visitor at the convention.

The Wisconsin State Federation of Labor assembled in twenty-fifth annual session in Ashland in July. Delegates of No. 23, this, as in former years, have been in the front ranks, assisting in building up a strong progressive and militant state labor movement for the furtherance of the workers' welfare. This year our organization was especially honored in the unanimous election of Henry Ohl, jr., as general organizer, thus placing him at the head of the organized labor movement in Wisconsin. In selecting Mr. Ohl, the federation secured a strong union man of high standing in state labor union circles, and particularly in Milwaukee—possessed of that sound judgment and understanding of economics that will enable him to ably lead in organization work. He was organizer for No. 23 during the eight-hour strike, and is also a member of the Wisconsin legislature. Union men everywhere in the state should lend a hand when Mr. Ohl visits their locality.

Frank J. Weber, who organized the state federation twenty-five years ago, continuously serving as general organizer, declined to again accept. He is to be commended for his invaluable service in having so ably and honestly piloted the state labor movement for a quarter of a century. No. 23 extends congratulations to Mr. Weber, and also to Mr. Ohl, his successor.

President Blakely, of No. 23, who represented the Federated Trades Council at the state federation convention, served as assistant secretary, a job he has held for several years. He reports that, though many difficulties were encountered in the first year in organization work, the convention was the biggest ever held, and the labor movement is making steady progress. Plenty of workers are nevertheless outside the organization when they should be on the inside. Watch Ohl get after them; he'll fetch 'em!

Fred Boughner, whose home is at 507 South Leavitt street, Chicago, and who was injured by a street car, mention of which appeared in last month's JOURNAL, is in the county hospital, recovering.

Secretary Thomas reports work not any too brisk.

Orlando Frantz, after rusticating in North Dakota for two months, is back on the job at Kruenberg's. C. W. Cline has left for Los Angeles, Cal., to reside. Ed Madden is taking instructions in the navy in San Francisco. Art Martin, formerly of the Sentinel, now on the Fond du Lac Reporter, called at the secretary's office recently. R. E. Becker has taken unto himself a wife. Miss Conole was a visitor at the Colorado Springs convention.

In the trades council meeting last month the question of building up the milk wagon drivers' union was taken up. It is likely that a census will be taken as to how many union men have their milk delivered by union men. We would urge all members of No. 23 to become organizers at once. Get information on the milk question from Frank J. Weber, and demand the drivers' union button.

In reading THE JOURNAL, I notice that there is considerable complaint from the various correspondents in not having fared well at the hand of the law-makers in the various states in securing passage of labor laws. We here in Wisconsin also registered our complaint. Yours truly served in the Wisconsin legislature recently closed, and witnessed the slaughter of labor bills—95 per cent of them—but it's our own fault. No. 23 was desirous of having an eight-hour day printing law enacted. The bulk of the state printing is done in the non-union Madison Democrat. The democrats and republicans—except a very few—have no sympathy with organized labor, and love non-union establishments better. Those members from industrial centers where thousands of union men helped to elect them were the most bitter against labor bills, which is shown in the roll call on the eight-hour printing bill—killed, 41 to 47. These voted to kill the bill: Burnett, Wausau; Chapple, Ashland; Dixon, Racine; Edwards, Waukesha; Everett, republican administration floor leader; Gamper, Taylor county; Kurtenacker, LaCrosse; Melvin, Sheboygan; Rappel, Manitowoc; Saugen, Eau Claire; Vincent, Kenosha; Weickert, Fond du Lac; Whittet, speaker of the house; Otto, Eighteenth ward, Milwaukee. These were absent: Battis, Oshkosh; Buckley, Waukesha; Carl Hanson, Manitowoc; Peterson, Racine; Schroeder, Jeske, Schiewitz, of Milwaukee. The printers fared better than the other organizations. This same roll call could be applied to practically every labor bill. From this record one may judge how hard it is to get a labor bill passed, particularly when the senate is made up of millionaires and near-millionaires. Imagine how a millionaire would strive to pass laws for the masses.

Cards deposited: Ralph Dinse, William T. Kelley, B. A. Johnson, S. G. Bradley.

Cards withdrawn: Leon E. Derr, G. A. Higgenbothan, Ralph Dinse, J. C. Maccracken, C. W. Cline.

Work has been a little slack for a few weeks, but gives indications of picking up soon.

Joseph Erpenback, an apprentice of the Telegram chapel, is in camp with Troop L. cavalry.

At the August meeting one card was accepted. Nothing of importance was taken up except routine business.

The male members of this union decided to have a "stag" up the river Sunday, August 19. Mr. Beck, of the Leader chapel, donated some liquid refreshment.

Louis Best of the Telegram chapel has the sympathy of the local owing to the death of his mother, which occurred a short while ago.

GEORGE A. STEBBINS.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Representative Charles T. Scott was the only member of No. 174 to attend the Colorado Springs convention besides our delegate, Frank M. Baldauf.

R. S. Heiges is now a member of the firm of he Western Linotyping Company, having purchased the shares held by E. A. Cheever.

President Seth R. Brown spent several days in Sacramento the middle of August, being called there by Governor Stephens as a member of the federal appeal board for the southern district of California in an endeavor to make the decision of the several federal appeal boards of this state uniform on all like cases.

In noting the election or re-election of the officials of No. 174 last month I inadvertently omitted the fact that John H. Godfrey, our genial secretary-treasurer of several years past, had been returned to the office by acclamation—no one opposing him this year.

Harry Ingledue, after spending a couple of months at work on his "sit" on the Tribune after his return from the Home at Colorado Springs, resigned the first of August and returned to Colorado Springs, believing that the higher altitude was necessary for his health.

the military service of the United States at the present time, the following members having enlisted in the regular service before the draft order reached them: Frank Dunn, C. N. Harris, M. J. Markel, F. M. Montgomery, S. H. Winburg, G. W. Goldenbee, Henry Rohrick, Harry E. Bean, A. E. Buechner and C. B. Endsley. Two apprentices, Ernest E. Scott and Leo S. Coburn, have enlisted. At the present writing it looks as though the draft will get a number of other members, most of whom are married and some with one or two children. W. K. LOCKWOOD.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

Much satisfaction was expressed here when it was noted that the next convention of the International Typographical Union would be held in Scranton. We are not far from Scranton and expect to make a good showing there.

We were invited to participate in a Labor day celebration at Elmira. Martin Mangan is busy at this writing getting a baseball team in shape to engage in battle with a team of Elmira printers on that day. Much enjoyment is anticipated by all who are going to be there.

Several of our members have been called for examination for the draft army. They will soon know whether they are accepted or not. Some of the boys expect to be "somewhere in France" soon.

The summer dull period has arrived and work is not very plentiful just at present.

Cards received: William G. Gleason, Ousto Marionin, Edgar B. Ward, L. B. Nye.

JULIAN H. WALKER.

SHAMOKIN, PA.

The draft has taken one of our loyal members—Ray J. Howells, of the Mount Carmel Item. We wish him Godspeed and a safe return.

"Jack" Eisenhart printed the souvenir book for the central labor union for Labor day.

John O. Hoy, formerly operator on the Dispatch, has moved to Mahanoy City and deposited his card in Pottsville Union.

Warren A. Dietz, formerly with the Shamokin Printing Company, is working at Trevorton, Pa., and has charge of the Times in that town, a paper under our jurisdiction. W. J. HENNESSY.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Scranton, 1918. Any one taking in the convention at that town will have no cause for regret, as they have the livest bunch in that burg that ever sought to entertain members of the International Typographical Union. The boosting committee is to be congratulated on its fine work.

Barry Meehan, formerly of Montreal, Canada, but back in his old home, Lexington, Ky., accompanied by Dan J. Crowe, paid a flying visit to Cincinnati last month. After furnishing their race horse friends with enough tips to keep them broke the rest of their lives, they promised to return for the fall race meeting at Latonia.

President Charles Morford of the bowling league is busy making arrangements for the winter's practice, preparatory to taking the trip to Indianapolis next spring. All bowlers who are members of No. 3 should send in their names to President Morford or Secretary Eddie Sauer at the Enquirer office. A good time is had at these weekly matches, the expense of which is a trifle.

The state-wide prohibition campaign is on in full force. The "drys" are advertising heavily with cards in street cars and ads in the daily papers. The "wets" are to perform the same way. This will make work for the job printers and it would be a nice thing to hold an election on the booze question each year. Booze here is now price and a half (15 cents), and promises to go higher. Jitney booze, like the old-fashioned "square man," is a thing of the past. We liked 'em both.

The 1917 convention, like all conventions of the International Typographical Union, upheld the policies of the administration. After men get on the ground, see the proof and learn all the facts, they realize where the best interests of the members are. Every member should read thoroughly the officers' reports, weigh them carefully and do his own thinking. Fly-by-night backcaps on the administration usually come from some one who has an ax to grind.

A large number of Washington printers and their ladies passed through Cincinnati on their way to the convention. Among those who laid over here for several hours were the following: Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Bowen, Charles D. Deming, Joseph M. Eggleston, W. A. Kinsolving, and Leroy D. Brandon. They were met at the station by Johnny Dugan, who took them to the Typo club for lunch and then on a short sight-seeing trip on top of Mount Adams. It was the first time several of the party had ever been in the Queen City of the west and were much pleased with its natural beauty.

H. E. ("Rube") Springer, an old-time Cincinnati typo, but for many years located in Atlanta, passed through this city on the way to Buffalo to attend the convention of the Eagles. He was entertained at the Typo club by Manager Dugan, took in the New York-Cincinnati ball game, and spent quite a bit of time with old "Moxie," who years ago conducted the cafe back of the Enquirer. "Rube" was looking healthy and quite prosperous.

N. J. Baum, for many years active in the affairs of No. 3, but who has been located in Huntington, W. Va., for a number of years, visited the Typo club on his way to Colorado Springs, where he was a delegate.

Dan Crowe, of Lexington, just can't stay away from "Cincy." He ran up for a few days early in August to compare notes with President Eddie Farley of the Typo club on a couple of goats that are classed as race-horses.

Charley Scheiman, Denny Greany and Bob Forestal, all of Indianapolis, spent a few days in Cincinnati after attending a moonlight river ride given by the Louisville bowling typos. They came up to "Cincy" on a boat for a little rest and "pleasure" on the water, but when they pulled in nine hours late with not a bit of "refreshments" on the boat, the trio were in anything but a happy mood when they finally landed. A quick trip to the Typo club, however, soon had our Hoosier brothers in excellent spirits.

William C. Quinby, for many years foreman of the Donaldson Lithograph Company of Newport, Ky., and also a former vice-president of this union, died early in August after a comparatively short illness. At the time of his death Mr. Quinby was mayor of Dayton, Ky.

A large delegation of Indianapolis typos and their friends came to Cincinnati on August 5 to see the New York Giants and the Reds meet. At the time the Cincinnati team was in second place and baseball fans for 300 miles on all sides of this city were pulling for Garry Herrmann's bunch to pass the Giants. The Indianapolis delegation was met by a committee and escorted to the Typo club, where Johnny Dugan had made arrangements to satisfy their every want. The crowd had a most enjoyable day, although they all were disappointed when the Herrmannites were licked. Among those in the party were the following:

J. Mulvihill, J. Peak, J. Twinam, Al Wahnsley, George Page, F. Dolph, Ed Broden, J. Frye, I. Page, C. Witmer, J. Sheridan, A. Weber, G. McBride, T. Works, Charles Greene, H. Woodard, C. Gibson, E. Shine, G. Braughton, D. Drake, C. Reimer, F. Bottin, T. Metzker, Charles Powers, H. Cole, J. Murphy, A. Robinson, H. Baist, B. Toner, H. Toner, W. Lynch, E. Griffin, J. Griffin, D. Sweeney, J. Sweeney, T. Sweeney, J. Riley, B. Riley, D. Riley, E. Toole, F. Hancy, J. Harvie, Glen Mitchell, J. Hanes, H. Alexander, Fred Finney, C. Secrist, C. Schumacher, Orville Swiggett, Russell Gilmore, E. Beckman, D. W. Runshe, A. W. Tellman, Clifford Miller, Charles Childers, and Vaughn Cooke.

Andy Anderson, who pitched for the New York typos the first two years of the Union Printers' National Baseball League, and later with the Detroit team, passed through here on his way from Chattanooga to Detroit, and called on Johnny Dugan at the Typo club. Andy is now one of Uncle Sam's Sammies, and went to Chattanooga to take a special course in military affairs. Anderson is looking the picture of health. He expects to start for France within the next few weeks. JAMES W. DOUGHERTY, SR.

Eugene Merz of Pittsburgh, Pa., visited Secretary Murray and many of his old acquaintances in this city during the past month. Merz joined No. 3 about thirty-five years ago and was active in the workings of this local for many years.

G. Stanley Mathews, one of the members of the local auditing committee for the past two years, is now wearing one of Uncle Sam's uniforms, and from present indications will soon be "somewhere in France." His father, Charles J. Mathews, of the Enquirer chapel, was elected to succeed him as one of the auditing committee.

Secretary Harold P. Murray entertained quite a few delegates to the convention as they passed through the city.

Quite a few members have been taking their vacations recently, affording some of the subs a much-needed stretch.

Vice-President Ludwig Lang is now among the "old men," being a grandfather, and elated over the fact, although he is still very young in appearance.

Harold P. Murray, our secretary-treasurer, has the fever—no, not hay fever—fishing fever. Believe me, he told some stories—the fish he caught were all silverhooked. All war news was put aside when he returned from his two-day trip.

Joseph W. Ford of No. 3, and one of the proprietors of the Quality Linotyping Company, was married during the past month.

George Stinchcomb, a former member of No. 3, his card now being with Denver Union, is in St. Francis hospital of this city suffering from a complication of diseases and is also totally blind. He has requested Secretary Murray to see that his remains will be placed in the beautiful plot belonging to No. 3 in Spring Grove cemetery.

No. 3 made a creditable showing on Labor day with a brass band to lead the members. Secretary Murray was one of the two assistant grand marshals of the parade.

William C. Quinby, sr., a continuous member of No. 3 since 1886, passed to the great beyond Thursday morning, August 2. Mr. Quinby has been in failing health for several months. For many years he held the foremanship of the composing room of the Donaldson Lithographing Company of Newport, Ky. At the time of his death he was mayor of Dayton, Ky., having served two terms in that capacity. JOSEPH F. ILLIG.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

George Patterson, a former member of No. 15, visited friends and relatives in Rochester and Elmira during August. Mr. Patterson formerly was connected with the government printing office in Manila, and on his return to the states engaged in the printing business in New York city. John Boyer, machinist on the Evening Times, spent his vacation on an automobile tour through some of the states on the Atlantic coast. Charles Schroth, a member of the Democrat and Chronicle office, joined Troop H and has left the city for "somewhere in the United States." Vice-President Allen has resigned his position at the Post jobroom and is now employed in the Herald jobroom. S. B. Covey also resigned his position at the Post and is now employed at the Hendel job office, taking the position made vacant by the resignation of Mr. Zwerline, who has purchased the interest of Bert H. Bates in the Bates-Howe Printing Company. President Burns, R. N. Chapman and S. B. Covey were elected delegates to the central body to fill unexpired terms.

The Herald chapel held its annual beefsteak dinner (breakfast) during the latter part of July. Five members of the Democrat and Chronicle office were the guests of the Herald boys.

JOHN O. RUPPERSBERGER.

MONTREAL, P. Q.

The August meeting of the union brought out the "faithful few," and the proceedings were very interesting. An unusual number of subjects were discussed and acted upon, all having an important bearing upon the welfare of the local. The "jobroom" organization report was well received, but the "delinquent list" was not, and very bitter were some of the comments on members working in what they reckon "cushy" jobs, and drifting along one or two months behind. A rude jolt will be given them in the very near future. President Black was instructed to "carry on" the good work of organization. It was decided to apply for membership to the Ontario Typographical Conference. A letter was read from the secretary of the master printers' association explaining the delay in taking up the apprentice clauses.

The most successful picnic in the history of Montreal Typographical Union No. 176 was held on Saturday, August 4, at Pine Grove park, Chambly. Special trains in the morning and early afternoon carried the members, their wives, children and friends to the grounds, and by 3 o'clock there were close to one thousand merry-makers present. The best of order prevailed, and the prosperous and happy air of the picnickers was quite in accordance with the traditions of the trade, which was a pioneer in North American unionism. The various committees had done the preliminary work well, and a program of a score or more of contests was run off with unusual dispatch, one event following another with the minimum of delay, so that all were concluded in ample time to permit the return to the city before dark. In addition to the straight races, for each of which there were full entries, the boys' boot race, the thread and needle race for little girls and boys, the egg and spoon race for women, and other odd competitions, created much fun. At the conclusion of the events, the prizes were presented by President Thomas Black. A dance program of twenty numbers attracted crowds to the dance pavilion. The wives and families of many of the seventy-five members on active service overseas were present as the guests of the union.

W. A. McGowan, a member of No. 176, has been appointed to succeed Harold Lowe as instructor in the monotype school. His knowledge of both languages will help the students considerably, especially those from No. 145. Mr. Lowe resigned, owing to continued ill health.

Frank Rycroft is reported wounded. Before enlisting he was employed in the office of the Financial Times Press. A son of Jimmy Drury has gone to join the imperial aviation corps at Toronto. L. A. Trepannier, of the Gazette-News chapel, has enlisted in a signaling corps at Ottawa.

On the occasion of "Billy" Bell leaving the city, the members and friends of the chapel of the Financial Press presented him with a handsome traveling bag in recognition of his services as chairman. Mr. Gilmour, superintendent, made the presentation. Tommy Keenan will replace Mr. Bell as chairman.

Belgian day was celebrated on July 21 and was a great success. One of the most enthusiastic workers was Gus Francq, of No. 145.

Representative Drury and President Gauthier, of No. 145, report having instituted two locals in the Province of Quebec, one at Sherbrooke and another at St. Hyacinthe. Visits were also paid to many surrounding towns. Much work can still be accomplished in the Province of Quebec, and now that a start has been made it is to be trusted that the International Union will persistently tackle this extensive province.

With deep regret we record the death of one of our pensioners, Joe Larose, who died at his home after a short illness. The late Mr. Larose was a printer for many years, and for the past seven years had been employed in the jobroom of the Gazette Printing Company. Previous to that time he had been in the Herald Press, and was one of the members injured in the Herald disaster. He leaves a widow.

To A. A. Adams, of the Herald Press, we extend our sympathy on the death of his brother, Clifford W. Adams, at the Union Printers Home. Arrangements had been made for the Montreal delegate, Mr. Cantwell, to convey a message from his brother in Montreal, when word came of his death.

The allied printing trades council, at its August meeting, had an interesting discourse from Vice-President McHugh, of the printing pressmen, also the presence of Representative Drury. The many scale negotiations and unsettled condition among the various locals has upset the arrangements for the issuing of the allied label contracts.

Traveling cards issued: Miss Manto, John Fraser, W. H. Leonard, W. A. Bell, J. J. O'Connor, Harold Lowe, J. S. Bamber, J. M. Buckman, Fred Bliss, H. Prenzler, C. E. Rice, R. Bourque. Cards received: J. Duncan Stewart, Fred W. Forster, A. Gagne, P. Forest, Miss Manto. Initiations: W. S. T. Lucy, W. H. Hopkinson and Louis O. Tremblay.

JAMES PHILIP.

Jacques-Cartier No. 145.

The annual report of President Scott is certainly the pride of the International Typographical Union. It receives the admiration of all on account of its importance and inspires respect for the splendid indications it contains concerning its immense development and the magnificent uplift of its members on every phase, and in its moral and financial support for the welfare of all.

President Gauthier is still on the road for organizing purposes in the Province of Quebec. Jointly with Representative Drury, they have succeeded in organizing two cities this far—St. Hyacinthe and Sherbrooke. We congratulate headquarters for the wise action in appointing Joseph Gauthier. He is certainly the right man for the situation that has been neglected too long, and we believe that much good will come out of the organizing work in his hands. Our organization is unknown in a large part of this province, which causes lots of trouble in the large cities where locals exist, having to deal with men coming from these small towns.

The discussion at the last meeting was specially long regarding the Labor day parade. President Gauthier made an ardent appeal to the members to show up this year better than we ever did in the past. Owing to the troublesome epoch we are going through, it was a general appeal to all organized workers to use their best possible efforts to make this year's Labor day the most remarkable one in the annals of the labor movement.

Messrs. Joseph Gauthier and L. Gadoury were appointed as delegates to the labor congress convention, which takes place in September in Ottawa, and which is also considered most important on account of the serious problems to be discussed.

ARTHUR LECLAIRE.

PORT ARTHUR, ONT.

At the June meeting the matter of an increase in wages, to meet the increased cost of living, was brought up and everybody was in favor of it. The executive committee was then instructed to get busy, which it did without any delay. A new agreement calling for an increase of $3 a week was drafted and has been submitted to the employers, as per our present agreement calling for sixty days' notice of change of scale. Tourists please take notice.

Our membership has dropped from twenty-four to thirteen members.

The three Port Arthur papers, the News-Chronicle, the Port Arthur Star and Canadan Uutiset, report business as being fair.

J. Saunders and W. Murray are working at Brandon, Man. H. Richards and G. Carter have moved to Saskatchewan, Sask. E. McKinstry left last month for Bradford, Ont. G. Wilson, formerly news department foreman of the News-Chronicle, is now working at Sudbury, Ont. Sergeant Ralph Richards, who went overseas with the Canadian forces, is in a hospital in England.

MISSOULA, MONT.

At this writing President Zeh is in Buffalo as a delegate to the Grand Aerie of Eagles from the local lodge. As a bird Mr. Zeh soars high in the esteem of fellow Eagles, having recently on retirement as worthy president been presented with an elaborately designed ring set with a diamond. He is also grand chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, and in this capacity is this year visiting the various lodges of that order throughout the state. By way of diversion he operates three machines and acts as machinist on the Missoulian five-mill battery.

C. C. Doty, Missoulian make-up artist, accompanied by Mrs. Doty, spent two weeks during August on a visit to Pacific coast points, including Portland, Seattle, Tacoma and Port Townsend. Mr. Doty's son, Calvin, was stationed at the last-named place with the coast artillery corps, having enlisted at the first call for volunteers.

B. T. Nesmith, now conducting a job shop, is building a modern bungalow.

George Keller is working a machine stretch at the bureau of printing.

In this land of high mountains, high altitudes and high life, alleged high wages are having a hard battle against the high cost of living.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The recent peace proposal emanating from the vatican at Rome recalls an incident of the Spanish-American war. It has often been asserted that that war was brought on largely by the newspapers, and it is a well-known fact that most of the big papers, especially those of the yellow variety, had a great deal to do with bringing on that conflict. One of the big New York dailies early in 1898 imported a writer from the west who had made quite a reputation as a writer of border fiction, and a series of articles from his pen appeared daily, remarkable for their bitterness against President McKinley and all who opposed the war. The articles were given unusual prominence on the editorial page, occupying about four half columns, with a half column white on each side, and a fac-simile signature at the bottom, and they fairly shrieked in italics, small caps, caps, and black type, the author evidently being given carte blanche to say anything he pleased, and it was reported that he was the highest-salaried writer ever employed on a newspaper. Just at that time there was talk of the intervention by the pope to prevent war, and one Saturday night the presses of the big paper were waiting for the editorial page as the starter for the main sheet of the big Sunday issue. The plates began to come down from the foundry, a revise was run out on the first press to be plated and sent to the foreman's office for an O. K. After considerable delay word came from the foreman to send back editorial plates to the foundry and to destroy all copies printed and under no circumstances to allow a copy to get out. Finally, after a delay of more than an hour the page was made over and the presses started, the Sunday issue being very late that morning. Of course there was a good deal of curiosity as to the cause of the unusual occurrence, those who knew the facts being under orders to say nothing of the matter, but it leaked out that the deleted article was an attack on the head of the Church of Rome similar to what the writer had been administering to all who opposed the war. And the foreman of the pressroom took the responsibility of calling up the owner of the paper and quoted to him one paragraph of the article, with the result that the article was ordered killed. At any rate that writer's name never appeared over an article in that paper again and it was reported that his contract was abrogated.

The following resolutions were adopted at the August meeting of Columbia Typographical Union:

Whereas, The International Typographical Union was the first organization, trade union or otherwise, to advocate equal pay for equal work performed by men or women, which action was endorsed by all locals throughout the jurisdiction; and,

Whereas, At the present time women are fast being called upon to take the places of men called into military service, in many instances at less wages than formerly paid men; therefore, be it

Resolved, That Columbia Typographical Union, in regular session assembled, heartily endorses the action of the National American Woman's Suffrage Association in advocating equal pay for men and women; and, be it further

Resolved, That the union, through a special committee of three, to be appointed by the president, co-operate with the above-named association in obtaining equal wages for women called upon to assume duties formerly performed by men; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the International Typographical Union for publicatoin in The Journal, so that other locals may endorse the movement.

George H. Harries, who has been made a major-general in the new draft army, owes his real success in life to being fired from the government printing office, where he was employed as a compositor and was very active in union affairs. He got a start as a reporter on the National Republican, made good from the start, and in a few years was recognized as one of the best newspaper men in the capital. He became active in the national guard, and was made a brigadier-general in the Spanish-American war.

Charles S. Bastian, after an absence of many years, during which he has been foreman and assistant on both Baltimore and Washington newspapers, is again occupying a responsible position on the Congressional Record, where he started in when he came to Washington.

Norman E. Mack, proprietor of the Buffalo Times and one of the big men in New York politics, during a recent visit to the government printing office was greeted by a number of his former employes, some of whom recall the days when it was not at all a certainty that the ghost would walk on his Buffalo paper, his early struggles in the business being history.

Capt. Louis C. Vogt, commanding Battery A, national guard, was presented with a complete officer's outfit, consisting of a sword, belt, spurs, trunk, and all accessories, by his friends in the government printing office on severing his connection with the office to enter the United States service, the occasion being quite an event, the public printer and others making complimentary speeches, and the presentation being capably performed by Capt. Dan V. Chisholm, commander-in-chief of the Spanish-American War Veterans.

The failure of Colonel Roosevelt to gain permission to take an army to France was a great disappointment to Col. Jim Atkinson, of West Virginia, who was desirous of again showing the fighting qualities of a contingent from his native state.

One of the most liberal newspapers to its employes has always been the Washington Evening Star, granting them two weeks' leave of absence with pay each year and many other evidences of good will, and the office is a model for comfortable working conditions in every respect. Last December each employe was given an extra week's pay, the office announcing that owing to the high cost of living something was due to its force of workers and that method was taken to show its appreciation. This act of generosity was repeated on July 30, each envelop containing this note, signed by Frank B. Noyes, president of the Star company:

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE STAR FAMILY:

While, because of the abnormal cost of paper and the heavy taxation due to the war, The Star will not enjoy its usual prosperity this year, still the company can not be unmindful of the heavy increase in living expenses of those engaged in the work of producing the paper, and the executive committee has therefore directed that an additional pay roll be disbursed on August 1.

A distressing tragedy occurred in the family of Leroy D. Brandon, one of Columbia Union's delegates to Colorado Springs, while he was attending the convention, his son's wife, a young woman of 20 years and a bride of but a few months, being brutally murdered at Annapolis, Md., where she lived with her husband, the deed being supposed to have been committed by a negro now in custody.

A very welcome addition was added to the compensation of the government printing office workers on July 1, 10 per cent being granted those receiving under $1,200, and 5 per cent to those between $1,200 and $1,800, which with the Saturday half-holiday—which for a time it was feared would not be granted this year owing to the rush of work incident to the war, but which the public printer has granted wherever possible—will go a good ways in helping out during the hard times.

To Joe M. Johnson, agent of the Union Printers Home, was delegated the task of presenting to the Home through the convention a book compiled by Miss Julia M. Burke, one of Columbia Union's most popular members, being a complete history and union record of Washington printing events covering a period of many years, the work occupying a great deal of Miss Burke's time for three or four years, and will no doubt prove one of the most interesting exhibits of the Home library.

Sam Hinwood, who has been rusticating in Washington for two or three months, on vacation from the printing office at Porto Rico, has accepted a position operating a Merg. in the government printing office, and will not return to the island.

Raleigh S. Black, who evidently can't get over his wild and restless ways, has chucked his job in the government printing office and hit the trail once more, the second time he has performed the act within a year.

The Bliss Medical Company have shown their appreciation of Joseph Easton's services by a very substantial unsolicited increase in salary, which shows they know a good man's worth.

Town-lot gardening was indulged in by some of the printing fraternity here with more or less success, Horace W. Whittaker being one of the most successful, and it is reported that the Speedway club, under the supervision of F. N. Whitehead, with the aid of T. C. Parsons and Tom Fitzwilliam, will harvest quite a respectable crop of potatoes.

George W. Newell, a veteran member of Columbia Union, was struck by an automobile on August 16, while crossing the street near the government printing office, and so seriously injured that it is feared amputation of one of his legs may be necessary.

Miss Minnie Aylward and Miss Mary Connolly, two of the best of our monotype operators, have gone for a month's vacation, Miss Aylward to her home in Milford, Mass., and Miss Connolly to visit her brothers in North Dakota and Montana, being accompanied by her father.

Charles S. Gunn, who gave up a $2,500 position in the government printing office to go on the road for the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, has been spending his vacation here with his family and renewing old friendships among his friends in Columbia Union, of which he is still an active member.

R. Lee Woody, secretary of Richmond Union, and his most estimable wife, were compelled to forego an anticipated visit to friends here in Washington owing to his appointment as a member of the committee on laws.

Marsh A. Bodenhamer is said to have made quite a good impression on the senate committee on civil service reform, in his capacity of president of Columbia Union, in his argument for a government retirement and pension system.

Three deaths occurred during the current month among the membership of Columbia Union—Henry C. Tarlton, aged 76 years; Frederick C. Chase, 55 years; and William F. Ashford, 63 years.

Very little news of the convention has reached us, but I see that Jimmy Crombie was there with the intertype machine, so that there was no lack of good stories, as he is in a class by his lonesome as an A1 entertainer.

The visitors to Colorado Springs from Washington were few in number, but from expressions heard Commodore Walton and his people in Scranton will not be able to complain of a lack of visitors from Washington next year.

GEORGE M. RAMSEY.

DENVER, COLO.

Angelo Noce, one of the oldest members of No. 49, is publishing a book, entitled "The Early History of the Italians In and Around Denver." This is the first book of this nature ever published in America in the English language. The book is complete in every detail, depicting the privations and hardships of the pioneer Italians up until the present time. It also gives a complete history of the Italian newspapers, societies and churches. Angelo is a native of Genoa, Italy, coming over to this country in the early '50s, and it is to that city that his book will be dedicated. He was the originator and founder of Columbus day in this country, which is now celebrated as a holiday in a majority of the states, and the Italians of this city and state owe him a debt of gratitude for his unceasing efforts in their behalf. Angelo numbers his friends by the score, not only by people of his own race, but by everybody who has had the pleasure of meeting him.

This union decided to participate in the Labor day parade and the following committee was appointed: Con Hyland, chairman, Kistler chapel; Neil Fohrquer, News chapel, and Isaac Polowosky, News chapel. It was voted to furnish each member parading with a badge and autos for the older members.

At the last regular meeting of No. 49 President

Pferdesteller appointed the newspaper scale committee, consisting of W. A. Tanner, chairman, Post; Merrill Fish, News; Osceola Koskiscus Chapman, Times; Ed Close, Mining Record; Frank Birdsall, of the secretary's chapel, together with the president. The committee will have a meeting some time soon and expects to have something to report at the next meeting.

The Denver Labor Bulletin, which, by the way, is the best labor paper in the country, got out a special edition the past month, consisting of 115 pages, in commemoration of the state federation of labor convention at Boulder and the sixty-third annual convention of the International Typographical Union at Colorado Springs. The editor, Clint C. Houston, and the business manager, Edward J. Hines, both active members of No. 49, are to be commended upon the excellent appearance and neatness of this special souvenir convention edition, which is the biggest thing that has ever been attempted by a paper of this size.

The delegates and visitors to the Colorado Springs convention were entertained in Denver by the ex-delegates' association on Sunday following the convention. The party was taken for an auto ride through Denver's mountain parks, going up through Bear Creek canyon to Genesee Peak, and returning by way of Lockout Mountain and passing the grave of "Buffalo Bill." About four hundred made the trip and all reported having had the time of their lives. Robert Jones, of the Post chapel, is to be commended for his services as chairman of the transportation committee, as he secured a majority of the machines from members of No. 49 and the printing trade craft to take the party on this trip.

Alfred T. Wolter and Miss Ophelia K. Halden, of Austin, Texas, were married in this city the past month. The bride is a sister of Edgar Halden, formerly a member of this union, and the groom is a very popular member of the Post chapel. After a trip to Colorado Springs and the mountain resorts, "Heinie" and his bride will return to this city, where they will be "at home" to their many friends.

The Colorado State Federation of Labor met in annual convention in Boulder, Colo., the week of August 6. While the meeting was dominated with an internal quarrel of the coal miners' union, nevertheless a great amount of constructive business was transacted. No. 49 was represented by Clint C. Houston, editor of the Labor Bulletin; August Koester and President F. L. Pferdesteller. One of the most important pieces of labor legislation ever enacted by a convention was successfully concluded. Commencing this fall the Colorado State Federation of Labor will finance about twenty students in attending the State University of Colorado each year. As organized labor was the father of the free public schools of America it is now fitting that organized labor initiate what will eventually be a reality—free university education.

Fred Johnson, of the Express chapel, accompanied by Frank Scoggins, office manager of the News-Times, hied themselves to the far recesses of the Rockies on August 19 on a several-weeks' camping, trout-fishing and hunting trip. They will be joined about the first of September by Billy Cunningham, linotype machinist for the News. Johnson says it will be easy pickings for him this time, as Scoggins will have his "flivver" along, and if the trout should receive advance notice and chase over the range to another stream, as the bass did on a recent bass-fishing excursion organized by George Jones, assistant foreman of the News, there will be nothing to it but jump in the "fliv" and chase over after them.

At the present time the new job scale is undecided. The committee from the union has had several conferences with the publishers, but has failed to come to any definite conclusions, the latter not being willing to accede to the union's demand for $30 per week. As the scale takes effect on September 1, which is before the next regular meeting, in all probabilities a special meeting will be called by President Pferdesteller, at which time it will be decided on what course to pursue.

FRED J. ZIMMERMAN.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

If so inclined, one might sit for hours and let the mind riot itself in the possibilities of that most compelling force, "organization." We of the trade unions intuitively ponder this force in its greatest aspect for good, and against its construction for evil. Victor S. Purdy and Delvin V. Markey, president and vice-president, respectively, of No. 283, were instrumental in the organization, in this city, of the West Side Civic Association, the purpose of which is the implanting of civic wholesomeness in that part of the city. Individual petitions long had failed to accomplish the removal of a large, disease-breeding mudhole in the neighborhood, but when the residents organized and voiced their prayer together, the proper city officials gave heed. The association is publishing an official organ, The Tocsin, with Mr. Purdy as editor. However, it may be said that organization is nothing if not worthily militant.

In the appointment of exemption appellate boards for the state of Oklahoma, printers are well represented. Ollie S. Wilson, secretary of the state federation of labor and a member of No. 283, has been appointed to the board for the western district, and M. E. Deming, a member of Muskogee Typographical Union, to the board for one of the eastern districts.

The Rotchstein Oil and Gas Company was incorporated in this city recently with Jake Rotchstein as president; William MacLaren, secretary-treasurer, and a directorate including the two officers named and C. A. Showalter, L. Stanton Nail, John J. Cronin, D. B. Gaines and Frederick Kremer. They have a good lease in the Gotebo field and the company is capitalized for $10,000.

The writer acknowledges receipt of a letter from an old printer friend, Harry L. ("Slats") Watson, of Hutchinson Typographical Union. He includes in the letter, words, music and advertising material for a patriotic song, "Khaki Bill," that he has written. He explains that over $2,000 was spent in advertising the song, that it is having a great run, and is used in fifty-two vaudeville acts. Besides being a highly competent printer, Mr. Watson is a professional arranger of music.

Ned Willett, a former president of No. 283, was in the city during the month, traveling up and down the country as inspector for the Mergenthaler Linotype Company. From the jim-dash intervals in his extolment of the linos we learn that he will make his future home in Chicago.

Another visitor of the month was George Bading, of Dallas, representing the Intertype Corporation. Mr. Bading has a rather matter-of-fact, modest sort of way in admitting the installation of intertypes in three or four places close to Oklahoma City. He explained while here that his company has a new branch depot in Dallas to meet an increasing southwestern patronage.

Don Hicks, former Oklahoman machinist, has accepted a like situation with the Muskogee Phœnix. Paul Stimmell, erstwhile assistant machinist for the Times, succeeds Mr. Hicks. A new machinist's apprentice for the Times is Forrest Dryden, son of D. T. Dryden, of the Times-Journal chapel in this city.

Quite a number of the members of No. 283 who have been in the city for a period of several months have left the city. David H. Gloss is now holding a situation in Ardmore; Glenn R. Ross has resumed the foremanship of the Muskogee Phœnix; Harry Noble has returned to Sioux City; Ralph S. Brown has joined the Coburn minstrels at Akron, Ohio; Otis Geers has drawn his traveler, and Milton Tinney is subbing for Jack Saslavsky over at Pawhuska.

Since Oscar Milhollan has quit work and gone to reading proof he is getting so fat that he purchased a new six-cylinder, sixty-horsepower car in which to transport himself. Recently he tried out the new machine on a fishing excursion, but was rained out, so returned home through the mud.

Cards received: Vernon Mayhall, G. T. Sniggs, W. A. Cockrell, J. R. Robinson, Ed Sharpe, Asa F. Norton, A. R. Tenney, Elmer M. Blacklock, George A. MacNaughton, jr., J. W. Lawton, jr., C. L. Boehm, David Basil, Henry C. Warrach, Walter C. Carter, Irl R. Morgan, R. E. Peyton. Cards issued: C. T. Barnes, Alex J. Plott, G. W. Kennedy, O. G. Geers, Frank B. Keith, Ella J. Metcalf, Asa F. Norton, W. A. Cockrell, David H. Gloss, J. R. Robinson, M. W. Tinney, F. L. Boyd, Ed Sharre, Glenn R. Ross, Irl R. Morgan, Harry Noble P. H. Morgan, George A. MacNaughton, jr., David Basil, Henry C. Warrach, Ben Van Dyke, Ralph S. Brown. A. RAYMOND MORRISON.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

The following employes of the state printing office have been enjoying vacations: Messrs. Heney, Davis, Staiger, Spann, Snyder and Cooper; also, H. L. Dunning, who spent his vacation in Portland and Seattle; Tom Hodgson, who went trout fishing on the Feather river, in Plumas county; Foreman J. W. Bowman and Machinist H. F. Sofge, who went fishing and hunting in the Pit river country in Siskiyou county.

Dave Mathews, now city auditor of Stockton, former foreman of the Stockton Mail, and an old Virginia City (Nev.) printer, passed through Sacramento on his way to the north fork of the American river, on his annual search for the elusive brook and rainbow trout. Dave has been making this trip annually for thirty years, and never fails to get the limit.

C. W. Flodin, at one time a member of No. 46, is now the editor and publisher of the Nevada Federationist at Reno, and is giving organized labor of the sagebrush state an aggressive and interesting organ. Luke E. Alvord, an employe of the Bee for several years, has resigned his position and gone to San Francisco. Chris C. Peterson, who has been conducting a job office in Sacramento for several years, has stored his office and left for the northwest. J. A. Robbins, of the Bee, has returned from an outing at Dillon's Beach. C. E. Spilman, one of No. 46's young members, has enlisted in the marine corps and left Sacramento. Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Tupper, for the last year or two members of No. 46, have drawn their cards and gone to Fresno. W. G. Zoeller has left Sacramento and gone to Lodi.

H. G. Jackson, our delegate to the Colorado Springs convention, has returned home, and reports having an interesting time. He is especially well pleased with the hospitality shown the delegates and visitors to the convention by the Colorado Springs people, and speaks in high terms of the Union Printers Home and its management.

Don K. Stauffer, of Oklahoma City and elsewhere, after a short stay in Sacramento, is now in San Francisco. J. W. CRAWLEY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

The Columbus Reserves, a semi-military organization of twelve companies, is now being recruited and organized in this city by the chamber of commerce. Its purpose is to do patrol and guard duty that has been taken care of by the national guard. All members of the Columbus Reserves are to be approved by a membership committee of the chamber of commerce before they will be allowed to enlist. Major Ward and Colonel Miller, proprietors of two non-union job shops, were hot after the job of colonel of the organization, but through the efforts of the federation of labor they were both turned down. The writer wonders why it would not be a good idea for the Columbus Federation of Labor to organize a "lil ole" home guard all of its own, to be composed of members from the various allied crafts, and officered by its own men. It is doubtful, however, that the chamber of commerce would give this plan its approval.

W. E. Bird, secretary of No. 5, was appointed by Secretary of War Baker as one of the members of the draft exemption board of the southern Ohio district, Division No. 2, and is now acting in that capacity.

The draft caught quite a number of our younger members—several being already certified for the army. It is understood they will mobolize September 1 at the Chillicothe cantonment.

It was decided at the August meeting of No. 5 not to participate in the Labor day parade this year. It was learned that the brewery workers contemplated their usual stunt of "packing" the parade and using it for their own propaganda. The "dry" amendment comes before the Ohio voters again this fall and the printers did not wish to go on record as favoring the various banners, floats, etc., that were in the parade.

"Mike" Nash, who can boast of a membership of many years in the typographical union, was honored by an interesting article in the Ohio State Journal recently. In his time "Mike" has deciphered the copy of such men as Whitelaw Reid, W. D. Howells, Murat Halstead, Horace Greeley, and others of like fame. "Mike" is on the pension roll at present, yet he is still fully able to pick them up "one at a time" and can be found one or two days a week in the composing room of the Ohio State Journal.

Doughty's war market is "doing its bit" in keeping Columbus on the map. This market is the first of its kind in the country, and was originated by Clark C. Doughty, but is now being managed by the farmers themselves. The Pathe company recently filmed the market for its weekly news event. One entire side of the state capitol square is devoted to the market and the farmers for miles around bring their produce here to be sold direct to the consumer, thus eliminating the middleman. The night shifts of the Journal and Dispatch have been taking advantage of the opportunity after quitting work, and are thus enabled to make quite a saving.

Nothing new this month in regard to the job strike in this city. It is still on and the struck shops are still able to keep a few of "Eliot's heroes" on the job. The Champlin Press, one of the principal shops against which the strike was called, makes a specialty of college annuals, and solicits work from colleges and schools all over the United States. Label committees in other cities can help by watching this college printing.

"Rev." T. H. Whipps of the Dispatch chapel is on his circuit again, dispensing peanuts, popcorn and soft drinks. He has contracts with a string of county fairs throughout the state which will keep him busy for some time to come.

The plant of the defunct Daily Monitor went under the hammer August 29. The assets are to be offered singly and thereafter as a whole. The Monitor was a finely equipped newspaper plant, and it is a safe bet that our three dailies will be sporting some new equipment in the near future.

Members of the Columbus Citizen composing room on Tuesday, August 6, presented Arthur Schubert, first apprentice, with a wrist watch, comfort and writing kit. Arthur is a member of Battery C, Third Ohio field artillery, and enlisted before the draft measure became a law. He is a fine chap and merits all the confidence and esteem in which he is held by his fellow workers. Bert C. Brown made the presentation speech.

State of trade at the present time is poor, newspapers all working "short."

Cards received: R. P. Murphy, H. H. Woolpert, L. G. Brown, Roy E. Campbell, W. F. Bowers, George S. Baxter, D. G. Thompson, Willis Cramer. Cards issued: Bert F. Gordon, Charles G. Wright, R. P. Murphy, Charles B. Rolen, E. Minnie Cadley, L. G. Brown, W. F. Bowers, Frank C. Lowing, Willis Cramer, Ayers Evans.

CARLETON BERRY.

PASADENA, CAL.

Louis ("Cowboy") Jones called on friends here recently. He has spent some time in the Union Printers Home receiving treatment for a serious ailment, and not long ago came out of there cured. He left this message in Pasadena: "Tell the boys at your next union meeting that the printers have the best gol darn Home on the face of God's green earth." (Only he didn't say "gol darn.")

The following members have taken, are taking or will take extended vacations at the beaches or in the mountains this summer: Tyson, Shoebridge, Swerdfiger, Huff, Stevens, Hartzell, Medland, Watson, Bramhall, Westring, Winter, Talcott. The other thirty-six members have not yet made their pile and are remaining at home to do sort of home guard duty.

Merritt, Kingan and Rowan are the only members of No. 583 who came within the age period which required them to register for the army draft, and Paul Rowan is the only one who has been given notice to appear for physical examination.

President Swerdfiger and James C. Tyson have just returned from an automobile trip of about six hundred miles, stopping at San Diego and Tia Juana on the way. While in San Diego they called on "Bill" Dennett, superintendent of the mechanical departments of the San Diego Union, the big Spreckles paper, who showed them through that down-to-date plant. Neither Mr. Tyson or Mr. Swerdfiger gave out any information about what kind of a time they had in Tia Juana, Mexico.

W. M. Talcott still spends his idle time whipping the mountain streams for trout. He recently got excited when an unusually large one took the hook, and he gave the line such a yank that the fish was landed high overhead in the limb of a caskara tree. The popular proofreader worked till long after dark to get that beauty out of the tree, finally succeeding, and then had to feel his tortuous way through the mountain fastnesses to his Pasadena home.

C. J. Stevens had charge of the getting out of the official Labor day program, and the little booklet had so many ads that some of them really had to be hung on the outside of the chase.

Up in the Llano socialist colony, which is under our jurisdiction, two members have withdrawn—Thomas M. Butler, formerly of Chicago, and A. E. Brande, who came here from Omaha. Although there are about 1,000 living in the colony, it became too lonesome for the Chicago man. Mr. Brande will return later. Hans Bjarnum, of Copenhagen, has made application for membership to the union and will fill one of these vacancies.

PHILIP G. GAIR.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M.

Roy Kirkpatrick, for the past seven years an operator on the Evening Herald, is the first member of No. 304 to answer the call to the colors, he having enlisted in Battery A, New Mexico field artillery. His name was among the first to show up in the draft drawing, his number being 10, so he took advantage of the opportunity to enlist before being drafted. Two days after his enlistment, it was discovered that a mistake had been made in copying the local list, and in the rearrangement of numbers Roy's would have been 1,941, instead of 10, which would have placed him far beyond the reach of the first draft.

Dennis Stillwell has left the Albright & Anderson job shop to take the agate machine on the Morning Journal. John F. Weisenbach, from Sedalia, Mo., has taken the vacant situation at Albright & Anderson's.

The machine vacancy at the Evening Herald, caused by the enlistment of Roy Kirkpatrick, has been filled by his brother Fred, who has been on the make-up on the same paper. Ray Wilson is the new make-up.

Every one who is fortunate enough to possess the necessary "dinero" has been "vacationing" the past few weeks. L. D. Lowary spent two weeks in Colorado. Oscar Lewis put in his time attempting to line the elusive trout from the waters of the Rio Pecos; J. M. Sylvester visited the old home folks in Iowa, while R. T. Voll "roughed it" for a couple of weeks with a surveying gang in the mountains.

Work has been very good recently, with an unusual scarcity of subs. The Journal chapel broke the record at the August meeting with a report of 253 hours overtime. However, things have quieted down a bit at this time, and the accumulated overtime has about disappeared.

Myron Bates, from Durango, Colo., made application for membership at the August meeting, and is working on the "run-around" at the Morning Journal.

ren R. Murray, Harry W. Conley, Roland McCarty, Myron Bates, John F. Mehers. Departures: W. F. Murray, Oscar Eads.

The Albuquerque high school has established a printing department and will publish its own paper during the coming school year. John F. Mehers, formerly foreman of the Herald job department, and more recently foreman of the Santa Fe New Mexican (a card man, of course), will have charge of the plant. FRANK H. LOWE.

FOND DU LAC, WIS.

Vacations seem to be in vogue among printers. President Burns, L. A. Kinkel and "Art" Martin report having had the time of their lives.

Miss Purcell was elected as secretary-treasurer at our last regular meeting to fill the vacancy occasioned by Clarence Albee being called to serve the colors.

John Worm, of Milwaukee, former president of No. 31, shook hands with the boys (and girls) in the various shops. John has a steady "sit" with the Milwaukee Journal.

No printers were included in the first draft. We have three boys, however, who are serving in the ranks—Leo Moquin, Clarence and Birney Albee.

"Pete" Klassen has resumed work at the Reporter after a two-months' absence at the Manitowoc ship yards, where he was "doing his bit" for Uncle Sam.

J. W. Pelzer, who has been subbing at the Reporter chapel, left on August 18 for Eldorado, Kan., to accept a machine job.

O. G. RORABACHER.

CONCORD, N. H.

North Adams and 5,000 members!

Nat Spead has taken a traveler and gone to Manchester, where he has accepted a position as operator on the night side of the Leader.

Work on the job end here at present is very slack. The newspapers and book end still continue to be very busy.

We have not as yet lost any members by enlistment or the draft.

The Rumford Press closed down on August 2, at 8 A. M., for the day, on account of the intense heat. The employes received their full day's pay.

Thomas F. Killen has been ordered to his home at Clinton, Mass., to take the physical examination for the new army. If he is accepted and goes, he will be the first member of No. 297 to answer the call.

Charles H. Abbott was given the obligation by President Brusa at our August meeting.

We have voted to keep in good standing all members serving in the army or navy.

At our May meeting we abolished our rebate system and since then we have hardly had a quorum to do business with. When this system was in effect we would have about 90 per cent of the entire membership out to our meetings. This goes to show who are really interested in the union and who are simply holding on and keeping their cards. The officers and the few regular attendants at the meetings are certainly doing some work and trying very hard to build up Concord Union, and should certainly have the support and help of the entire membership. If we could have this help we would be able to get into membership some of the forty odd printers here that are non-members. We have had an application at each meeting for three meetings, and we should have four or five every meeting for the next few. If one or two can get one for three meetings, what will be the result if the entire membership get out and hustle? We wish the boys would get out and do a little work and see the results we could show. We could increase our scale, which certainly needs it, and also reduce the hours of labor. Think this over seriously, members of No. 297, and get out and push.

Messrs. Walton, Curry and J. O. W. Phaneuf are on their vacation.

Travelers were issued to Miss Oliva Howe and Charles A. Wilson, who have accepted situations in Manchester.

James M. Cox and George W. Conway were notified to appear before the examining board to take the physical examination for the new army.

In reading over the letters from the various locals, I saw one in the August JOURNAL from Bridgeport, Conn., defining the union slacker. I wish every union man would read this article, and if the shoe fits, wear it. To my mind this is one of the best articles I have seen for some time.

E. B. MCCAULEY.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Seven new members were initiated at the August meeting of the union. The torrid weather was perhaps responsible for a rather small attendance at the meeting, but the business on hand was of an extremely interesting nature, and the manner in which the members present co-operated with the officers in the transaction of the business made up in interest what was lacking in numbers.

That the physical condition of No. 53 is very good was strongly attested by the gratifying report of the sick committee. With a membership of 800, there were only three members reported on the sick list during the month.

Each month brings a report from the label committee that shows a considerable amount of work being done for the good of the label. The strong campaign made by members of the committee during the past year has worked wonders in the way of educating the purchasers of printed matter to recognize the label, and in many instances, when non-labeled printed matter is returned with a sticker appended and a letter notifying the purchaser of the absence of the label, a prompt reply has been received containing the information that it was an oversight and that a repetition would not occur.

On Sunday, July 29, the members and friends of the Printers' club, to the number of 600, hied themselves westward to Herrington's grove, there to revel in the festivities attending an old-fashioned "mulligan." The day was replete with games and sports of all kinds, and although the crowd was somewhat larger than was anticipated, every one was well taken care of and all enjoyed a very pleasant day.

In appreciation of the manner in which the force handled the big news "break" that came with the drawing of the selective service numbers, the management of the Cleveland Press extended an invitation to all its employes to a chicken dinner and dance held at Euclid Beach park on Monday evening, August 6. The dinner, a sumptuous repast, was served in the dining hall on the beach, and after listening to speeches confined to three minutes each from representatives of the various departments, every one repaired to the famous log cabin dancing hall, where the rest of the evening was spent in dancing.

Although the European conflict has necessitated the postponing of the union printers' national baseball tournament, which was to have been held in St. Paul this year, the members and friends of the league insist that some action be taken regarding the future of the tournament, and as a result the commissioners of the league met in Cleveland on Tuesday and Wednesday, August 21 and 22. The business sessions of the commissioners were held at the Statler hotel, after which they were shown the city and entertained with several features by members of the union. Just what action was taken by the commissioners can not be stated at this time, but will probably be published in next month's JOURNAL.

The executive committee of the "Hungry Hounds," consisting of Messrs. Grady, Beihler, Peterson, Harkins, Walsh, Plunkett, McDermott, Hyde and Hogan, spent a sojourning week at their cottage, "A Bit o' Blarney," located on the east shore of Lake Erie, and from reports circulated around the Printers' club, they must have had "some" time. All returned home with a beautiful coat of tan and looking as though the commissary department had been well supplied and generously partaken of, despite the frequent trips to "Old Heidelberg." The only member of the "Hounds" not faring so well was one who insisted on a hot water diet of three days and breaking his fast on the fourth day with an orange, but he survived the ordeal nicely and came out wearing a smile of one who had done justice to a couple of feeds of corned beef and. JOHNNY HOGAN.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

Yes, business is good. Everybody is working.

Eugene Warren is the new manager at the Strong & Co. linotype plant.

L. L. Allen, of No. 11, is the new state factory inspector for Tennessee. Mr. Allen was deputy inspector for west Tennessee at the time of his appointment, and had made a record which entitled him to promotion.

NEWBURGH, N. Y.

About thirty members of the News employes' association attended an outing at Orange Lake, Sunday, July 10, and partook of a beefsteak breakfast and chicken dinner. It was given in honor of the members called in the first draft—J. A. LeFebre, William Tilton and Timothy Higgins.

At the regular meeting of No. 305, held Tuesday evening, August 14, two applications for membership were received. One was acted on favorably, and the other will be voted on at the next meeting.

The following traveling cards have been issued: J. J. Boyd, D. J. Cussin, Fred Hilliker, Charles Wiltsie, George Mulcahy, W. C. Galloway, S. E. Huddelson.

Newburgh will have a new weekly paper, called the Newburgh American. It is understood that the first issue will be September 9.

Notice to members: No union business will be transacted during working hours unless absolutely necessary. The secretary-treasurer can be seen at 101 Carson avenue every day after 5 o'clock, or at the News office after 4:15 P. M.

MILTON K. BARRUS.

JACKSON, MISS.

Our August meeting was attended by all except the women members, and considerable enthusiasm was manifested, notwithstanding that we are short about ten members in consequence of the lockout, which occurred about six months ago.

At this meeting a motion was carried to have the correspondent explain some things to the members at large. The records of this union will show that a special meeting was held February 18, at which it was decided to call for the assistance of an organizer immediately, which was done that same day. Charles S. Brown, representative of the International Typographical Union, arrived only a few days before the lockout. Just at that time the American at New Orleans (rat sheet) succumbed to the sheriff, who closed its doors, which the proprietors here took advantage of and where they got their non-union printers.

Business is poor here now, and will continue so for the balance of the summer. The Tucker shop is laying off men from each department, one day at a time, in order to keep each department intact. This is a new way decided on by the foreman and ex-delegate, Leon V. Brice.

I am sorry to report that owing to the depleted condition of the treasury of this union a proposition to pay the dues of all who join the army or navy was voted down in consequence of not receiving the two-thirds majority. But I am confident their dues will be paid by voluntary contribution. So far only one of our members has joined, Percy McCollum.

The proprietors or representatives of both papers here have made trips to New Orleans lately. Possibly they may be short of printers. We think the time will come when they will beg pardon of the union men and say, "Come on, boys, and go to work." FRANKLIN HEIMBACH.

OTTAWA, CANADA.

The labor parliament of Canada, the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, will hold its annual sessions for the present year in Ottawa. P. M. Draper, president of No. 102, and who has for many years been secretary-treasurer of the congress, has summoned this thirty-third annual session of the congress to meet in the Royal Victoria museum building, Metcalfe street, Ottawa, on Monday, September 17, at 10 A. M. Sessions will continue until the completion of business. The following, from the convention call, is of interest to every one:

Last year the annual meeting of the congress took place in the city of Toronto. There in the cradle of the congress, where thirty odd years ago it was first organized, the meeting was marked by ever increasing evidences of advancement along the highway of usefulness and development. During the past years it has been sought to give a fair opportunity to each part of this Dominion to benefit by the presence of the congress in yearly assembly; thus the east and the west, the large commercial and industrial centers of the two oldest provinces and the rising cities scattered over the Dominion have all had their turns. This year we come to Ottawa, the capital of the country. It is highly befitting that the congress should assemble in Ottawa during this anniversary year of 1917. This is the fiftieth anniversary of confederation, and the capital is the point toward which all eyes turn during these twelve months. Moreover, Ottawa has been since early spring, and especially during the summer of 1917, the center of attraction for all who are interested in the future of this Dominion. Without rehearsing the important political events that have had their storm-center in Ottawa during the past months, it is clear to the least reflecting that the capital has been the stage whereon the various acts in the most momentous drama in the records of Canada have been played. And in some of these a not insignificant part has been taken by the representatives of organized labor. Not only is Ottawa thus afforded, this year, an opportunity of noting the advancement made in the domain of labor, but we might say that the entire country, whose representatives have gathered in the capital during these months of grave deliberation, can learn better than elsewhere the history of the congress and its achievements as well as the needs of the labor world expounded at its meetings. Hence the hope this year's meeting in Ottawa will be fruitful of very important and beneficial results for all interested in the welfare of the workers and in the ever increasing importance of the labor movement in Canada.

The war has run into the third year of its fury, it is about to enter upon a fourth year of general devastation and upheaval. As in the domain of legislation practically every question is laid aside to devote every energy to the mighty task which the gigantic struggle has imposed upon the country, so with the congress, very many matters that would, under other circumstances command special attention, have to be overlooked in order to concentrate all efforts in the study and solution of the exceptional problems that the present state of affairs has necessitated. Like last year we again call attention to one very special subject, namely the means to be adopted to protect resident labor when, after the war, this country will have an influx of foreign labor. We need not have any apprehension as far as the returned soldiers and the incapacitated are concerned; but there will be very probably an immense immigration from the shores of devastated European countries, and this will constitute a situation at once important and menacing as far as Canadian native labor is concerned. There is much in the legislation of this year's federal session that will command attention; and very much also regarding future legislation that is of vital interest to organized labor that should be carefully studied out and reported upon. In fact there has not been, since its very inception, a more momentous meeting of the congress than that of 1917, and it is fervently hoped that the very best ability at the command of labor will be brought into play during the progress of the meeting to fix standards of action for the immediate present and to blaze out the paths that must be followed in the near future.

The oldest member of No. 102, in point of years, has passed to the great beyond, in the person of Joseph Des Roches, who died at Fournierville, Quebec, at the age of 85 years. Mr. Des Roches had for a number of years been on the International Typographical Union pension roll, and had been making him home at Souel, Quebec. He and his wife were on a brief visit, when he was seized with bronchitis, and succumbed after a short illness. He was for upward of forty years a resident of Ottawa, where he was an employe in the government printing bureau. Besides his widow he is survived by three daughters and three sons—Mrs. Darvin, Mrs. Lemon and Mrs. Hayes, of Marshalltown, Iowa; George, Chicago; and Charles and Honore, in New York. The remains were brought to Ottawa, and the funeral took place from the home of his brother-in-law, Mr. Richard, 129 Water street, to the Basilica and Notre Dame cemetery. Many of the members of No. 102 were in the cortege.

The local suffered the loss of another well-known member on July 23, in the death of J. C. Thompson, who had been for a number of years employed as linotype operator at the government printing bureau. About a year ago he suffered a very severe illness, and the attack which proved fatal was a recurrence of the same. The cause of death was stated as paralysis of the throat. The funeral took place from the undertaking parlors of Frank Hamon, Rideau street, interment being made in Beechwood cemetery, where the remains of his wife had been laid. In a letter of appreciation from deceased's brother, John H. Thompson, for many years editor and proprietor of the Thorold Post, he says:

I feel some satisfaction in receiving a letter written by the secretary of No. 102, a position I myself held forty years ago, when employed in the Free Press at the corner of Wellington and Kent streets, with C. W. Mitchell as proprietor and Isadore Brock as editor.

Ottawa job printers are working under the new agreement, extending from July 1, 1917, to June 30, 1919. It is the first occasion where No. 102 has had a flat job scale in many years. The wage provision is for a flat rate of $24 per week for the full two years of the agreement. It is a substantial advance, fully warranted by the steady upward trend of living prices. The scale under the expired agreement was $20 and $21 for hand and machine operators.

Clarence Rice, formerly foreman of the composing room of the Mortimer Printing Company, has returned to Ottawa, and is in charge in the office of the Dominion Printing and Loose Leaf Company.

A. E. SHEPPARD.

WATERBURY, CONN.

While there were several of our members who could not bear the thoughts of the draft, and consequently offered their services to the government as volunteers, it remained for one of our youngest members, Edward C. Scholey, to successfully pass the examinations and be entered as a member of the United States marine corps, and at the present time is at one of the South Carolina training camps. Mr. Scholey formerly worked on the American, the members of which chapel presented him with a handsome toilet case fully equipped for service. At the August meeting of No. 329 it was unanimously voted to keep Mr. Scholey in good standing in the union until his return.

Among the recent visitors in town was James Carr, who formerly worked here, but more recently from the battlefields of France, where he received wounds that caused his discharge from the British army to recuperate.

Charley Laflin and William Tevlin, both of the Hartford Post, stopped to renew old acquaintances while touring the state.

Lacey Coer is on the sick list, having suffered a shock while at work on the Democrat. Omar Brindamoor is also in the Waterbury hospital, where he went for an operation.

Peter Wolff, who tried to enlist in two different branches of the service as a volunteer, but was rejected, has been accepted in the draft and ordered to report. Apprentice Harold Laird has also been drafted and ordered to report.

James P. Nilson, of Lynn, Mass., is the new machinist on the Republican, succeeding G. K. Ashert.

The Thomaston Express has installed a model 14 linotype. Charles F. Kayser will operate the mill.

FRED S. GORHAM.

BEAUMONT, TEXAS.

Beaumont Typographical Union No. 339 has, through its president, brought to life a new standing committee which is doing good work not only for the union but organized labor as well. This is called the publicity committee, and it is their duty to prepare for the press such news about the union and its members that will be of interest to the public and incidentally spread the cause of unionism.

President Fisher took pains to include on this committee one member from each daily newspaper chapel, and it is up to him to see that the union secures the desired publicity through the columns of the paper he is employed on. This results in the stories being different enough to avoid appearing as a rehash and at the same time contain all the essential facts carried by the morning or evening paper, as the case might be.

The Beaumont Daily Journal has inaugurated a system of giving the employes one week's vacation during the summer months. This has been made to include members of the typographical union and pressmen's union. In granting these vacations the Journal has not held the men to the contract scale, but paid them their average weekly earnings, including any bonus they may be receiving.

ROBERT J. WAITE.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

The action taken at the July meeting in deciding not to parade on Labor day was reconsidered and it was voted that the union join in the parade. A committee, headed by President Bading, was instructed to make all arrangements.

E. J. Kiest, of the Times-Herald, in a card of thanks relative to a letter of sympathy from the union over the death of Mrs. Kiest, was received and read.

In the election of officers it might be stated that this makes the thirty-fourth term for Secretary Duckworth, Treasurer Corrett for the thirty-second time and Secretary A. C. Sutherland for the thirty-first.

W. D. Yarrington is now at the Home at Colorado Springs.

Charles F. Johnson, manager of the Egan Printing Company baseball team, who is holding his team in first place in the Metropolitan league, is an old-time printer in Texas and a shrewd, wide-awake baseball man, and has managed some pennant winners in Texas. He is a member of No. 173 and carries the honor of being the only printer in Texas managing a baseball team.

J. M. Gilbert, delegate to the International convention from Austin, stopped off here and spent a couple of days with his many friends in this city during the past month.

J. F. Wright, foreman of the ad alley on the News, took his vacation during the month and went to east Texas, among the rivers and streams that abound with black bass, perch and other game fish, and came back feeling fine. While there he was pressed into military service in the home guards, and carried a shotgun one whole night. He said on his return that he did not know which was the hardest, laying out a page ad or walking the streets watching for a chance to bag a few draft resisters who had threatened to destroy the town.

Ludlow Daniels, an employe of the News, had the misfortune to be injured pretty seriously when his automobile in which he was riding went over an embankment on the Fort Worth pike. However, he is back to work and feeling none the worse by the accident.

Four of the members of the News-Journal force who had enlisted in the army, some of whom are already in the training camps, were presented with wrist watches before their departure by the chapel.

The Dallas printers' benevolent society has been in existence five months and so far has not had a call for benefits or aid of any kind from its members. This is a splendid showing and proves that the printers of today are a healthy bunch compared with those of twenty-five years ago.

R. H. McVey, one of the best-known printers in the southwest and delegate to Los Angeles, has taken up the profession of law and hopes before long to practice at the bar of justice. Mr. McVey's name on the roll of attorneys for Dallas or anywhere else would certainly be an honor to the profession.

Through the courtesy of Messrs. Bading and Breckon, of the Intertype Corporation, Galveston Union No. 28 was given a banquet last month. Messrs. Bading and Breckon are well known in this city, Mr. Bading being a brother of the president of No. 173.

The election of Otto F. Bading as president of Dallas Union No. 173 for the third consecutive time, is without precedent in the history of the union. But how could it have been otherwise, as he has made a splendid officer and every one feels that it was a deserved honor to bestow upon him the office for the third time without a dissenting vote.

With the opening up of White Rock reservoir as a resort some of the printers are agitating the question of leasing a tract of land from the city and building a clubhouse there exclusively for printers.

Milton H. McConnell, who for several years has held down the head machine on the News, is one of those who believes in the future of Lake Worth and has acquired some property at that popular resort, and expects in the near future to improve the same by erecting a beautiful summer home there.

Earl Broaddus, a popular linotype operator of this city, has resigned his position on the News and joined the colors. He expects to be in France in a short time with the rest of the boys.

R. S. Nail, who left this city some months ago and went to Oklahoma, has associated himself with several other gentlemen in the organization of an oil company in that state.

C. M. Seay, foreman of the Journal, spent his vacation in Colorado last month. In his absence Mr. Horn held down the job with satisfaction to all.

Ralph Fisher, who spent a couple of months in this city, has gone to Ardmore, Okla., where he has secured a situation on one of the papers there.

We notice that the San Antonio correspondent in THE JOURNAL says that Clint Tullis, ex-secretary of the allied printing trades council, has joined the colors. While there is probably no more patriotic gentleman in Texas than Mr. Tullis, and who would be more willing to sacrifice everything for the cause of humanity, he has not joined the army, and we trust will be fortunate enough to be left with us, where he is so much needed to fight for the principles that labor stands for.

Col. J. Fred Peske, one of the old-time printers, who has made Dallas his home for the past several years, has gone to Oklahoma City, where he has secured employment.

Messrs. Bewarder, Young and Perry, of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, New Orleans agency, dropped into town during the past month and all report business good. Bewarder and Perry are members of our union, and report business flourishing.

Ernest Montgomery, intertype representative for Oklahoma and Arkansas, paid our city a visit, having with him W. S. Hankins and Mr. Jenkins, of Little Rock, Ark. The former is foreman and the latter machinist of the Arkansas Democrat.

George Bading, known as "Intertype George," dropped into Dallas after a two-months' trip for the Intertype Corporation, erecting machines at Pine Bluff, Stamps, Conway, Fort Smith, Judsonia, Ark., and Shawnee, Ada, Oklahoma City and Pawnee, Okla. He reports intertype business extra good along the line.

C. F. Boyd, who was a candidate for delegate last year, but who withdrew in favor of Clint Tullis, is again in the field for delegate to Scranton, and says he is in to stay. He is running on a bone dry platform, we presume, as he is not in favor of buying drinks for any one that we have ever heard of.

L. K. Wells.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

Ed Wittemore, who several years ago worked here on the Sentinel and later on the Review, now holding a position as linotype machinst in the government printing office in Washington, D. C., spent several days in the resort renewing old acquaintances and making new ones, while recuperating from a recent surgical operation. Ed related one of his experiences in the old days while helping out on the Christmas edition of the Press. He was given a five-column ad late, with the cases empty and no leads or slugs, so he stole up the street to a place where a new house was being erected and appropriated a couple of lath, whittled them down with his pocket-knife, and after using a little of every series of type in the shop, sometimes as many as three in one line, he finished his task. The ad appeared in the issue, but there were no compliments passed about its make-up.

Five employes of the Daily Press have answered the call to the colors, as follows: The editorial staff gave up Aubrey Thomas, who is now in France with the American ambulance corps, and Ellsworth Gruber, who at present writing is in the Allentown (Pa.) camp, with the ambulance corps. The front office sent Russell Truax, also at Allentown. The stereotype foundry sent John R. Williams, first sergeant of Company L, Third New Jersey national guard. The composing room will lose Edward ("Dutch") Hernig, who is in the draft, and passed as physically fit. The Review sent Nelson Patterson, an ad solicitor, who is now at Sparta, Wis., with the field artillery.

William Godfrey, an operator on the Press, took a month off, the greater part of which was spent at the Delaware Water Gap.

Claude MacMoran and Lawrence Reed, both operators on the Press, each enjoyed a week's vacation in August.

Several out-of-town printers have spent short vacations here this summer, and like all local craftsmen, like to go visiting, and so they paid their compliments to the newspapers here.

J. Campbell Murphy, of Johnstown, a former reporter on the Press, came in on a Pittsburgh excursion and renewed acquaintances here. "Murph" always stood well with the boys on the Press.

Evan T. Scheerer.

FITCHBURG-LEOMINSTER, MASS.

At our last meeting a committee was appointed to consider the matter of changing the name of our local to Fitchburg, instead of Fitchburg-Leominster, the name by which it is now officially known. There have been almost at all times more members in other nearby places than there are in Leominster.

The "L-Street Brownies" of Boston, well known by everybody in New England, will have to go some if they can produce a coat of tan that can compare with that of our own genial president, Bert Tiefenthal. Bert hies down to Whalon lake every afternoon, and it's a mighty busy day when he fails to take a swim.

We are now honored by having three women members, Mrs. Charles E. Morse, of the Sentinel; Miss Mary O'Brien, of the H. M. Downs Printing Company, and Miss Mary E. Jaquith, of the News, the last of whom formerly read proof on the Sentinel and is now engaged in the same capacity on the News.

Our system of allowing a rebate for attendance at meetings is fairly successful. However, there are a few who do not avail themselves of the "discount."

We have lost no one yet by the draft.

William R. Byrne.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

About one-fourth of the total membership of No. 200 has been called in the selective draft, ten being called from one chapel, namely, the Telegram. Many who have "felt the draft" will probably be exempted, owing to having dependents. Paul E. Nixon, of the Telegram chapel, was among the first called and accepted. He expects to be sent to the training camp at Chillicothe the early part of September. Nixon will be greatly missed, not alone by the printers, but by every baseball fan in the city. For several years he has played the initial sack for the leading semi-professional baseball team in the city, and his stellar fielding and timely hitting has made a decided hit with local fandom.

No. 200 will keep the dues of its members "at the front" paid up, action to this effect taking place at a recent meeting. This is the proper spirit, since it is no more than right that those who have sacrificed themselves for their country should be provided for by the ones left at home.

Charles W. Loughead, until a few months ago one of our foremost members, now located at Akron, Ohio, was in the city July 30, mingling with his many friends. Charley is well satisfied with his position in the "Rubber City," but still has a warm spot in his heart for Youngstown.

Henry Nidermaier and James Donaghey have recently purchased autos and are using all their spare moments in burning up the wind, as well as gasoline.

Paul J. White and William C. Curtis, until recently employed as apprentices on the Telegram, but now first-class privates in the hospital corps at Columbus barracks, Columbus, Ohio, were at home on a short furlough during the past month.

Samuel P. James has returned from a two-weeks' vacation spent at various points of interest in Michigan, making the trip in his touring car.

H. L. Watson, after a two-years' absence, has returned to this city and is working on the Telegram.

The Vindicator announces that in the near future it will establish a non-distribution system in its adroom, and has placed orders for two monotypes and other necessary equipment.

C. F. McCarty.

REGINA, SASK.

Trade continues fairly brisk in this city, but is gradually quieting down. All members are working steadily.

Preparations are now being made to formulate the new scale to replace the existing one which expires March 31, 1918. A strong committee has the matter in hand and is already getting down to work.

On the night of August 13 there was considerable crowing on the part of "Bones" MacClure, who performs on the linotype at the Leader office. On the previous night he accepted a challenge to row over a course of a mile or so on Wascana lake. His opponents were Oliver Walton, proofreader, and Bill Thompson, stereotyper. The event was pulled off on the afternoon of the 13th and the result was: First, MacClure; second, MacClure; third, MacClure. Walton and Thompson also started. It is probable that a real contest will be organized in the near future, as several would-be "champs" in the art of rowing have expressed an ardent desire to get in on something.

Herbert Johnson.

RICHMOND, VA.

The principal matter of interest at our August meeting was the statement from the chairman of the committee appointed at the July meeting to request all the printing establishments in Richmond —newspaper, book and job and label—for an increase of 10 per cent on salaries being paid. The chairman reported that John Stewart Bryan, proprietor of the News-Leader, an afternoon paper, had put into operation a profit-sharing plan for his employes. The first dividend was an extra week's pay. The members of the News-Leader chapel are delighted and believe that Mr. Bryan's plan will amount to as much or more than a 10 per cent increase in salaries. S. T. Clover, of the Evening Journal, gave the committee to understand that as soon as fall advertising contracts were made he would do the very best he could for the Journal employes. Colonel Hasbrook, of the Times-Dispatch, has the matter under consideration. He sympathized with us in our efforts to meet the abnormal increase in the cost of living. The committee feels sure that he will meet the request in a short while. The Virginian's manager does not seem favorably disposed toward the request. Of the book and job and label firms, the Hermitage Press (union) some time ago voluntarily increased the salaries of their employes 5 and 10 per cent, a total of 15 per cent altogether. J. W. Ferguson & Sons (union) also voluntarily increased the salaries of their employes. The Everett Waddey Company (open shop) some time ago increased the pay of its employes. On August 18 the Baughman Stationery Company (open shop) added 10 per cent to the pay of its employes. The committee feels that the employing printers of Richmond, those who can possibly do so, will meet this very reasonable request, as they realize that those of us who have families to support are experiencing difficulties in doing so on the wages heretofore paid.

At our August meeting an event occurred the like of which some of our oldest members had not witnessed before. A new member, Meade B. Dalton, deaf and dumb, was obligated by one of our older members, A. G. Tucker, also deaf and dumb, he using the sign language in doing so. It was impressively administered, though but few of us could "follow" Mr. Tucker in the obligation. We now have three deaf and dumb members.

Cards received from our delegates, R. Lee Woody and C. P. Harwood, gave us a faint idea of the delightful time they had. They spoke of the entertainment of Colorado Springs and the Home as unsurpassable.

George Stoll, foreman of the Washington Herald, for many years a member of No. 90, paid his old friends in Richmond a visit on August 18. Together with his wife and son, he had been on a vacation trip to his old home in Petersburg. They motored from Washington to Petersburg, stopping at Richmond on their return trip. The writer of this letter had the pleasure of accompanying them on a ride over the city. Mr. Stoll was much impressed with the beauty and wonderful growth of Richmond since he went to Washington about twenty years ago.

Among our fellow-craftsmen who have been enjoying vacations are Jesse Coates, Clyde Arnette, Frank McNeill, Lewis Monroe, Tom Farley and Eugene Gill. Secretary W. B. Freeman and wife were in Atlantic City for a week or ten days. M. R. Pace, accompanied by his two daughters, visited Baltimore the latter part of August.

Charlie Davis, ad machine operator on the Times-Dispatch, who was operated on several weeks ago at the Retreat for the Sick, is recovering very fast. Charlie needed a vacation, but not the kind he had to take. The boys are glad to see him back on the job.

Eugene W. Gill, for a number of years foreman of the Evening Journal of this city, has resigned, much to the regret of the Journal force. He will become foreman of the Ledger-Dispatch, Norfolk, Va., very soon. The members of No. 90 extend congratulations to him.

"Admiral" Jay, machinist on the Times-Dispatch, who was severely injured some time ago, has returned.

Howard T. Colvin, editor of the Square Deal, was defeated in the democratic primary, August 7, for the house of delegates. He made a good run. Secretary W. B. Freeman was elected to the city democratic committee from Claywood.

George A. Jennings.

KICKING AGAINST THE PRICKS.

"Those who work without complaining
Do the holy will of God,"
Said the pastor, in arraigning
Those who kick against the rod.

"You are right," agreed the "shirker,"
Owning stocks and bonds and lands.
"If so," then inquired the worker,
"Why complain at my demands?"

MAILERS' DEPARTMENT

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

Both conventions at Colorado Springs were complete successes from every angle. Every proposition that was submitted by the mailer delegates to the International Typographical Union convention was passed upon favorably, and by resolution it is now conceded that work in connection with stencil and plate-making machines belongs to the mailers exclusively.

There were many subjects of importance acted upon at the Mailers' Trade District Union convention. One of the most important was a proposition to gather by assessment a general fund of $100,000 for the purposes of properly taking care of our organized field. This matter will go to the referendum, as will all others that were passed at the convention which touch upon revenue, and the members will have an opportunity to say for themselves what they think of the propositions. Our convention received more publicity this year than ever before, and this is due, in my opinion, to the activity of the committee on publicity, and I trust that we will be as fortunate in securing as good a committee at the next convention.

I took up the Seattle situation, but was unable to adjust matters, as one of the managers of a paper there insisted on arbitration, although two of the publishers had already agreed to all the terms of the proposition offered by our organization. The subject has been given to a local committee covering arbitration, and no doubt our Seattle correspondent will inform you of the verdict as soon as it is given.

While in San Francisco I was informed that the manager of the Sunset Magazine had decided to employ girls on the mailing of that publication, and on interviewing him, with President Wyatt, he contended that he could have his work done for about $200 less for each issue, and he intended to at least try his theories out. This is just one more instance of the jurisdictional question on single wrapping, and another instance of where the bindery girls offer to do our work at about one-third the rates, and like all other jurisdictions, this question is not going to be easy to adjust.

Our organization in Los Angeles served the proposed scale upon the publishers of that city nineteen months ago, and up to the present date have not had the matter adjusted. While in that city I interviewed the publishers on the subject and found that they had been evading the question and were of the opinion that there was no way our members could force the issue, especially on account of the fact that our arbitration agreement had expired on May 1, and the publishers had refused to sign a new agreement. I took the position that inasmuch as our organization served the scale upon the publishers of Los Angeles while the arbitration agreement was in effect, that therefore the scale negotiations are governed by arbitration. The secretary of the publishers' association, G. G. Young, could not see the matter in this light, so I have been compelled to take up the subject with Commissioner Kellogg. As a precedent has been established by the National Arbitration Board covering similar cases, I feel sure that the publishers of Los Angeles, unless they settle their mailers' scale matter in conciliation, will be compelled to adjust same through arbitration process. I am leaving for that city today (August 18), and expect to adjust the matter before I leave Los Angeles.

Oklahoma City was given attention by members of the International Typographical Union executive council. Our members in that city only receive $12 a week, and the publishers refuse to recognize them and have refused to receive International Representative Gadd in connection with the matter. Although the circulation manager of one of the principal papers of that city had promised our members an increase of from $1.50 to $3 per week, they now deny this and refuse to pay the increases. I have been instructed to take up the situation by the executive council and expect to report something definite on this subject in my next letter.

CHARLES N. SMITH.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

As a delegate from Mailers' Union No. 17 to the sixty-third annual convention of the International Typographical Union and the fifteenth annual convention of the Mailers' Trade District, I wish to thank the members of Kansas City Typographical Union, Colorado Springs Union and the Denver organization for the fine time shown both delegates and visitors while in their midst. I also wish to thank James Casaday, of Denver Mailers' Union, for the many favors shown the mailers while in his fair city. While the convention was not as large as the previous year, I feel safe in saying that there was more business transacted there. I think it is the duty of all locals to have delegates at these conventions.

As to local conditions, will say we have plenty of work to keep our members going. We have taken over all the inserting of the Bill Board, a large theatrical publication.

WALTER J. WEISSMAN.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

The men employed on the Literary Digest and Collier's Weekly are now receiving $1 more per week, which is in accordance with an agreement made last year. Business Representative McArdle, who was our delegate to the state allied printing trades convention, succeeded in having the two most important resolutions passed—one protesting against the increase in postal rates and the other against any increase in the cost of white print paper.

The management of Gentlewoman, a monthly publication, has at last agreed to recognize us, and eight of our men will get twelve days a month, beginning with this issue.

A supplementary agreement has been signed with the publishers' association safeguarding the positions of our members who join the armed forces of the United States. The committee is also using its best endeavors to induce the publishers to grant some compensation to these members. While they may not get the difference between the army pay and the scale, they feel certain that they will get part of it.

Digitized by Google

William Leahy, a member of many years' standing, has taken a withdrawal card. He was employed in the World inserting department for a number of years. On his last day at work the chapel held an impromptu reception and presented him with a handsome French briar pipe and a large quantity of his favorite tobacco; also a beautiful ribbon upon which were the autographs of his fellow workers. He has accumulated enough of this world's goods to provide for his future needs and has purchased a home in Virginia, where he will spend his remaining days.

Ex-President William Francis Flynn has returned from his vacation trip. After visiting the northern part of New York, he journeyed to Philadelphia, where he was royally entertained by M. J. Donovan, circulation manager of the Evening Telegraph. CHARLES A. GALLAGHER.

THE SECRETARY'S LETTER.

Secretary Friburg, of Sacramento Mailers Union No. 50, has sent word that they have given up their charter, as there are only two members left in that local, owing to the enlistment of several of the members, during the period of the war. He states, however, that it is the intention of himself and the other remaining member to keep up their cards through the printers' union of Sacramento until such time as they are able to once more organize a local in that city. Up to date several unions have lost membership through the same course.

There are several unions delinquent for per capita tax and assessments. Among them are Utica, N. Y.; Austin, Texas; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Butte, Mont.; Nashville, Tenn.; Seattle, Wash.; Girard, Kan.; Dayton, Ohio, and Tacoma, Wash.

The following is the financial statement for month of July, 1917:

RECEIPTS.

Respectfully submitted,
JAMES P. MCNICHOLS,
Secretary-Treasurer.

THE MORNING OF JULY 4.

A gallant cock crowed salutation to
The morning stars, and soon departing night
Unveiled a cloudless canopy of blue
Above the eastern streaks of red and white.
A cannon's sudden roar, that shook the ground,
An eagle woke, which screamed and soared on high;
A rocket, hissing at the force that bound
It to the earth, shot off toward the sky.
Around us signs of freedom ev'rywhere
Were plainly printed into Nature's law,
But when we raised Old Glory in the air,
And of its colors sang with much eclat,
The gathered people loud ovations gave
While, looking up, they proudly watched it wave.

OFFICIAL MATTERS

THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL

ISSUED ON THE FIFTH OF EACH MONTH
AT ROOMS 640-650 NEWTON CLAYPOOL BUILDING
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

J. W. HAYS, Editor and Publisher.

Entered at the postoffice, Indianapolis, Ind., as second-class matter.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES—One dollar per annum to any part of the United States or Canada; foreign, $1.50 per annum; single copies, 10 cents each.

To insure prompt insertion, all official matter and communications should reach this office BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF THE MONTH PRECEDING PUBLICATION.

All letters and remittances should be addressed to the editor and publisher.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES AND CORRESPONDENTS.

Items for the official columns of THE JOURNAL should be prepared on a separate sheet, and the style of the paper followed as closely as possible. Such items should not be made a part of a letter dealing with other subjects, for if this is done the items are likely to be overlooked, even though the greatest care be exercised. Write as plainly as possible—especially proper names—using one side of the sheet only. All official matter must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. The observance of the foregoing will tend to insure what is desired by all—promptness and accuracy in the publication of official matter.

Communications for the correspondence department of THE JOURNAL must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. No communication will be published that does not bear the full name of the writer.

THE JOURNAL MAILING LIST.

When a member requests a change in his JOURNAL address, he should give the name and number of the union with which he is affiliated, together with his present and former address.

Additions, corrections or alterations reported by local secretaries should be kept separate from other correspondence. When a member deposits his card, and his name is reported for the subscription list, the secretary should state where the member previously received THE JOURNAL, and give the name and number of the union with which he was affiliated. When a member draws his card, is suspended or expelled, or in any manner ceases to be an active member of the local, the secretary should request that his name be dropped from the mailing list.

A large number of those who take cards and remove to unorganized towns fail to renew their cards. To prevent loss in such instances, it has been decided that members holding cards, and located outside of the jurisdiction of a local union, must either deposit their cards with the nearest union and pay dues each month, or pay International dues in advance, in order to get THE JOURNAL. Where a cardholder pays his dues to the local in advance, a specific report should be made by the secretary upon the case, in order that the name can be placed on the list and the magazine sent to the member for the time for which dues have been paid.

The 20th of each month is the latest date upon which changes for the succeeding issue can be made on our mailing list.

Upon request, secretaries will be furnished with a copy of a list of their members to whom THE JOURNAL is being sent.

All correspondence regarding THE JOURNAL should be addressed to J. W. Hays, Newton Claypool building, Indianapolis, Ind.

DELINQUENT UNIONS.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., August 30, 1917.

Section 1, article ix, of the constitution, requires that "International dues for each month shall be collected by subordinate unions and transferred to the secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union before the twentieth of the succeeding month." Under this law July per capita and July old age pension and mortuary assessments of all unions were due at headquarters not later than August 20. The following Unions were delinquent for per capita, or the old age pension or mortuary assessments August 30, having failed to make their returns.

In this connection attention is directed to section 16, article v, of the by-laws, as follows:

"Section 16. No mortuary benefit claim shall be allowed unless the deceased was possessed of a current working card at the time of his death, nor shall a mortuary benefit claim be allowed if, at the time of death, the union of which deceased was a member was in arrears for per capita tax to the International Union."

THE CRAB.

I've traveled the country over
And seldom found a scab;
The home guards called me a roamer,
But I surely hate a "crab."
Most boys showed some true blue,
But not so with the "crab,"
Who crabbed his day's work through;
At every worker he was mad.
Now the boys are leaving, one by one,
For their "takes" are measured up,
Each starting on their journey home
Where we no more will "sup."
The "crab" alone is left below,
But they have missed him not,
Alas! he now must also go;
He'll surely get it hot.
The chapel was in session
When the "crab" at once arrived,
They all had learned the lesson,
Poor "crab" he was despised.
The "crab" about to enter, a "lockout" was declared,
The chairman's voice accented—the "crab" we know him well,
Turn with your pack and jackass
And go right straight to hell!
Now, boys, let's all be human,
So when we come to die,
Fond memories keep a-bloomin',
And even the "devil" he will cry.

Terre Haute, Ind. JOHN C. PRECHTEL.

THAT LITTLE JUG.

We've cut our rations pretty low,
We can not pay the price—
For food is very high, you know,
And we've to skimp on ice;
We've let our fav'rite cut of roast
Remain upon the cow,
And diet now on tea and toast—
Because we're in this row.

We let the huckster shout his ware—
To us it's no appeal—
We laugh at all his traps and snares,
Just like to hear him squeal;
For he has got the fever, too,
And boosts things right along—
The only thing to let him do
Is sing his little song.

Still there is one thing, I'm afraid,
That will be hard to stand,
For when we get our creel and spade
And reel once in our hand
And saunter to a shady nook
We will feel sad, I fear,
For we can't really "bait" a hook
When prohibition's here.

No one can take a fishing trip
Without a jug of bait;
You know just how a little sip
Helps out you and your mate;
It seems to draw the fishes near—
See how the hook they hug—
We never can succeed, I fear,
Without that little jug.

Worcester, Mass. WILLIAM P. CANTWELL.

REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL BOARD OF AUDITORS.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., August 3, 1917.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—Pursuant to law, the board of auditors met in Indianapolis on the second Monday in July, and herewith presents the following report:

John M. Dugan, the third member of this board, having been called to the service of the federal government as a member of the selective draft board in Cincinnati, the audit in detail was conducted by the undersigned members of the auditing board.

This board has checked all of the bonds, certificates of deposit and bank balances, and found them to correspond with the books of the secretary-treasurer, and the report of the expert accountants, R. K. Smith and G. D. Smith, which is attached hereto.

All items of receipts and expenditures were carefully checked by the board and found to be properly charged on the books of the union. The books of the secretary-treasurer were found to be in excellent condition, the system employed permitting of the easy tracing of each item of receipt and expenditure.

Following is a summary of business transacted since the report of the board on January 31, 1917:

Gross receipts	$556,931 49
Gross expenditures, including cash transferred to the Union Printers Home corporation	524,730 66
Excess of receipts over expenditures	$32,200 83

This surplus of receipts over expenditures is divided as follows:

General	$22,034 95
Prescott memorial	687 70
Mortuary	18,527 96
Total	$41,250 61

The pension fund lost $9,049.78, leaving a net surplus in all funds combined of $32,200.83 for the six months' business.

On July 31, 1917, the total assets of the International Typographical Union in cash, bank deposits and bonds, in the various funds and including the Union Printers Home corporation, were as follows:

Pension fund	$620,962 92
Mortuary fund	301,442 65

Digitized by Google

General fund	$102,356 60
Union Printers Home corporation	24,713 72
Prescott memorial	1,588 70
Total	$1,051,064 59

These assets are held in the following manner:

Bonds	$704,543 10
Fletcher American National Bank	191,139 41
Fletcher Savings and Trust Company, certificates of deposit	50,000 00
National City Bank	98,356 30
Postoffice deposit	300 00
Cash in hands of superintendent of Union Printers Home corporation	6,725 78
Total	$1,051,064 59

PENSION FUND.

The board in its last report called attention to the importance of giving careful consideration to the pension fund and its administration, inasmuch as the receipts from the one-half of 1 per cent assessment for the year had not been sufficient to meet the pension payments. The importance of the subject as it bears on the future of the fund impels us to report at some length on pension matters at this time.

At the close of business January 31, 1917, the balance in the pension fund amounted to $630,012.70. Receipts from all sources, including interest on the reserve for the six months to July 31, 1917, totaled $183,009.71. Expenditures for the same period were $192,059.49, leaving a balance on that date of $620,962.92—a loss of $9,049.78 for the last six months.

The pension expenditures will continue to increase for many years, and the subject is one for most serious consideration at the Colorado Springs convention. While the income to the fund increased since January 31, 1917, $7,319.04 over that of the previous six-month period, the expenditures were $25,439.71 for the same time. The membership should consider the consequences to the pension system if this rate of increase is maintained for a number of years.

Propositions submitted to the convention to strike out the provision which awards a pension to members of ten years' standing who are 70 years of age, and for a modification of the accumulative membership provision of the law, would if adopted tend to halt the increase in the number of pensioners. These propositions bear on the continuous service of the pensioner to the organization and would apply only to those who have been careless or indifferent to the organization while not in need of aid, but who return to the fold when its benefits are forcibly brought to mind by personal needs, and it is the opinion of the board that the first mentioned proposition at least should be adopted.

The attention of pensioners and local union officials is especially drawn to the provisions of the law on the qualifications for pensioners. Members who have sustaining employment outside as well as in the trade are not entitled to the pension and care should be exercised in all cases passed on to ascertain the facts connected with the applications.

MORTUARY FUND.

For the semi-annual period from January 31, 1917, to July 31, 1917, the receipts to the mortuary fund amounted to $176,678.12, and the expenditures $158,150.16, a surplus of $18,527.96, leaving a balance in the fund of $301,442.65. This fund is in a healthy financial condition, but with the entrance of the United States in the European war serious inroads on the fund may be looked for at no distant date.

The bills for the printing of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL and for other printing and stationery expenditures were carefully scrutinized and found to be reasonable and in accord with prices charged other concerns.

Expense accounts of the International Typographical Union representatives were thoroughly gone over and the charges found to be justified, according to locality visited and conditions encountered.

At a meeting of the board of auditors, at which Mr. Dugan was present, it was decided that the chairman of the board should visit the Union Printers Home, and a detailed report of conditions at that institution will be submitted by him in the near future.

The bills and accounts of Superintendent Daley of the Home were carefully gone over and approved by this board.

At the close of business January 31, 1917, the balance to the credit of the Union Printers Home fund was $36,242.25. Receipts for the last six months amounted to $76,044.56, and the expenditures $87,573.09, leaving a balance on hand of $24,713.72.

In conclusion, the members of the board desire to say that they have been given every opportunity to conduct their investigations, and our thanks are extended to officials and employes for assistance given.

ACCOUNTS OF SECRETARY-TREASURER.

Report of Auditors.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., August 3, 1917.

Marsden G. Scott, President International Typographical Union:

DEAR SIR—As the accountants appointed by you to examine the books of the International Typographical Union (J. W. Hays, secretary-treasurer) from February 1, 1917, to July 31, 1917, inclusive, we beg to submit herewith our reports in Exhibits "A," "B," and "C," which are attached hereto and made a part of this report.

Exhibit "A" comprises a summary of the receipts and expenditures from the general fund, mortuary fund, pension fund and Home fund of the International Typographical Union for the period above named.

Exhibit "B" comprises the balance in each fund, the assets of each fund, and shows the total assets of the International Typographical Union.

Exhibit "C" shows the outstanding checks and reconciliation of the bank accounts.

SCOPE OF SERVICE.

In making this audit we have verified all receipts by the duplicates of vouchers issued, checked each and every entry upon all of the books, have proven all division of receipts and all totals, have verified all expenses by the checks issued thereror and the properly approved bills which are on file. All bank balances have been verified by the books of the banks with which money is deposited. The bonds listed herein have been examined and found intact.

We found no misappropriation or misapplication

THE HOME SECRETARY'S ACCOUNTS.

Report of Auditors.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., August 3, 1917.

Marsden G. Scott, President International Typographical Union:

DEAR SIR—As the accountants appointed by you to audit the books of the Union Printers Home (J. W. Hays, secretary-treasurer) from February 1 to July 31, 1917, inclusive, we beg to submit herewith our report. Exhibits "D" and "E" are attached hereto and made a part of the report.

Exhibit "D" comprises a summary of all receipts and expenditures of the Home for the period above named.

Exhibit "E" contains a list of outstanding checks and reconciliation of the bank account.

SCOPE OF AUDIT.

We have verified all receipts by the duplicates of vouchers issued, checked each and every entry upon all books, verified all totals, verified all expenses by the checks issued therefor and the properly approved bills which are on file. The bank balances were verified by the books of the banks with which money is deposited and the amount in the hands of Superintendent Daley by his reports which have been examined and found correct by the resident trustee and the finance committee.

We found no misappropriation or misapplication of funds, all money properly accounted for and the books of the secretary-treasurer correct and in excellent condition and in balance with the assets.

R. K. Smith,
G. D. Smith,
Accountants.

State of Indiana, County of Marion, ss:

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 3rd day of August, 1917. D. M. Larsen, Notary Public.

My commission expires June 13, 1920.

LABOR!

Back in the ages that long have passed,
Back in the time when Time began;
I, with our God, made this world so grand,
I, with God, made His image—Man!
Now I am striving, improving all,
And to me only must credit lay;
For in all times have I done these things—
I made the world what it is today!

Yonder's a plow that tills the soil,
Here are the things I've made to grow.
Wisdom I give you and, in truth,
All of the things you are to know.
Yonder's a palace where great men live,
Here is a house where servants stay;
All have like passions and desires—
I made the world what it is today!

I made the wireless, the submarine,
I made the ships, the cannon, shell;
I made the things men fight for so,
I make the battle roar like hell.
I made the Peace this world has known,
Even the toys for children's play:
I have made joy and sadness, too,—
I made the world what it is today!

I make the iron, the glass—all things—
I do the mining and sow the seed;
I make men rich who don't deserve,
While there are many in great need.
I am the Power that moves the world
Ever upon its endless way:
LABOR'S my name—(and you're my slave)—
I made the world what it is today!

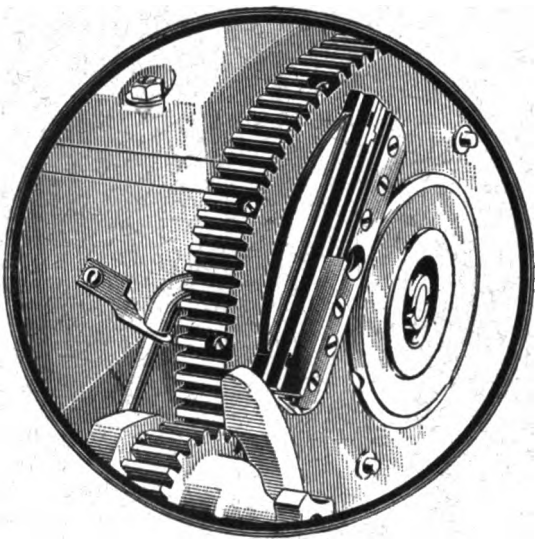
TRADE LINOTYPE MARK



Changing Linotype Mold Liners

By simply loosening three screws in the mold disk the liner is ready for removal.

The new liner is inserted and the screws tightened. The entire operation requires less than 30 seconds.

No loosening of nuts and removal of bolts; no removal of the mold cap; no necessity for working barehanded on a hot mold disk.

Mold simplicity is a Linotype feature which turns minutes into dollars.

THE REFERENDUM PROPOSITIONS

For several years it has been apparent to the thoughtful members of the International Union that steps should be taken to close up the gap between the receipts and expenditures in our old age pension fund. While it is true that the yearly deficit is not at this time particularly alarming, nevertheless this deficit inevitably will increase unless the fund is more carefully safeguarded.

The Colorado Springs convention took a step in the right direction, and the first proposition to be voted on by the referendum on October 17 establishes a minimum assessment of not less than 30 cents per month to be paid by all members to the old age pension and mortuary funds.

Every member holding a traveling card and every old age pensioner is assessed at least 30 cents per month for these funds at the present time. In some jurisdictions it is a regrettable fact that under the existing system many members evade these assessments. In other jurisdictions local unions have established a minimum on the lines of the proposed amendment.

It must be conceded that our pension and mortuary insurance is obtained at a ridiculously low cost, and that this assessment fixing a minimum of 30 cents per month each for the pension and mortuary assessments is extremely modest. No change was made in the assessment on earnings of members, which remains at one-half of 1 per cent for each fund.

If this amendment is adopted, it is not improbable that with one or two other slight changes in our pension laws the gap between the receipts and the expenditures may be closed. Unless these steps are taken, the membership will in the near future be confronted with a situation which will require an increase in the pension assessment.

The first proposition reads as follows:

FIRST PROPOSITION—Amend section 1, article ix, constitution, to read as follows:

ARTICLE IX—REVENUE AND FUNDS.

Section 1. The revenue of the International Typographical Union shall be derived as follows: From dues, which shall be 45 cents per month per member; an additional one-half of 1 per cent assessment on earnings of members for old age pension fund, and an additional one-half of 1 per cent assessment on earnings of members for the mortuary benefit fund: PROVIDED, THAT NOT LESS THAN 30 CENTS EACH PER MONTH SHALL BE COLLECTED FOR THE OLD AGE PENSION AND MORTUARY FUNDS: from charters for subordinate unions; from necessary supplies at prices to be fixed by law. International dues AND ASSESSMENTS for each month shall be collected by subordinate unions and shall be transmitted to the secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union before the twentieth of the succeeding month. Unions failing to comply with this provision shall be considered delinquent and debarred from benefits: Provided, That unions located so far from headquarters as to make it impossible for their dues to reach there within the prescribed time shall not be considered delinquent if their remittances bear postmark date prior to the fifteenth of the succeeding month.

The second proposition on the ballot to be voted on October 17 provides for a graduated increase in the salaries of the president and secretary-treasurer. The writer opposed legislation of this character at the Los Angeles convention, and also advised the laws committee at Colorado Springs to report all propositions of this character unfavorably. The writer also stated in the convention that if he were a delegate he would vote to non-concur in the report of the laws committee.

This proposition requires no extended discussion. The salaries of these officers are $67.31 per week, and since the members of the union repeatedly have defeated propositions to increase the scale established by the constitution, the writer believes that the employers, who in this instance are the members of the union, should not be continually pestered by propositions of this kind.

The second proposition reads as follows:

SECOND PROPOSITION—Amend section 1, article viii, constitution, to read as follows:

ARTICLE VIII—SALARIES AND EXPENSES.

Section 1. The salary of the president, vice-presidents and secretary-treasurer, in full for the services rendered by each of said officers during the term of office, shall be the sums following: For the president, for services rendered as president of the International Typographical Union and as president of the board of trustees of the Union Printers Home, $4,000 PER ANNUM FROM JANUARY 1, 1918, TO DECEMBER 31, 1918; $4,500 PER ANNUM FROM JANUARY 1, 1919, TO DECEMBER 31, 1919; $5,000 PER ANNUM THEREAFTER. First vice-president, $150 and traveling expenses to and from the conventions of the International Typographical Union; second vice-president, $500 per annum; mailer vice-president, $300 per annum; and secretary-treasurer, for services rendered as secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union and as secretary-treasurer of the board of trustees of the Union Printers Home, $4,000 PER ANNUM FROM JANUARY 1, 1918, TO DECEMBER 31, 1918; $4,500 PER ANNUM FROM JANUARY 1, 1919, TO DECEMBER 31, 1919; $5,000 PER ANNUM THEREAFTER.

The third proposition on the ballot increases the number of unions required for the submission of a proposition to a referendum from one hundred to one hundred and fifty, and also requires that the authors of such propositions shall draft them in proper form and shall include therein all sections or articles to be amended or repealed.

Recent experiences with referendum propositions have not been entirely satisfactory even to the authors of such propositions. The so-called Houston amendment still remains in the constitution defying interpretation, and the Duluth amendment, which established a board of auditors, is a clumsy example of underdone legislation. The writer believes that while the International Union continues to hold annual conventions, the delegates to those conventions should be competent to determine what changes shall be made in our laws, subject to constitutional provisions. Legislation by inference has been tried on several occasions, and since the supporters of such legislation have been unable to agree as to the interpretation of their own propositions, there can be no valid objection to the amendment which requires that all such propositions shall be specific in the future.

The amendment which requires 150 endorsements is in no sense prohibitive. Any proposition possessing merit will receive more than 150 endorsements.

The third proposition follows:

THIRD PROPOSITION—Amend section 3, article xvii, constitution, to read as follows:

ARTICLE XVII.

Section 3. Whenever ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY subordinate unions shall petition the executive council for the submission of any proposition or amendment, the endorsements of such petition having been secured within three months, the proposition or amendment shall be submitted to the membership within three months of the receipt of the required number of petitions, and the vote taken and canvassed in the same manner as amendments and propositions referred to the membership by the convention of the International Typographical Union. PROPOSITIONS SUBMITTED TO SUBORDINATE UNIONS FOR ENDORSEMENT OR TO THE MEMBERSHIP FOR ADOPTION AS HEREIN PROVIDED, MUST BE DRAFTED IN PROPER FORM AND SHALL INCLUDE ALL SECTIONS OR ARTICLES AMENDED OR REPEALED BY SUCH PROPOSITION. LAWS OR PARTS OF LAWS TO BE REPEALED SHALL BE PLACED IN BRACKETS, AND AMENDMENTS TO EXISTING LAWS AND NEW LAWS SHALL BE PRINTED IN BOLD-FACE TYPE: Provided, The executive council may submit to referendum vote propositions which require immediate action without petition of [one hundred] local unions. All such propositions and amendments shall be published to the craft a reasonable time before the vote thereon.

The fourth proposition on the ballot will dispose of the question of protecting our members in war service. If it were possible for each subordinate union to protect the membership of its own members in war service, the weight of the argument would perhaps be in favor of Plan A in the fourth proposition. In many instances, however, members in war service have taken traveling cards from their home unions and deposited them with unions in close proximity to military camps.

Since the war has become international in its scope, the writer believes that the expense of keeping these members in good standing should be borne internationally. If Plan A is adopted it is quite probable that some subordinate unions may refuse to pay the dues of such members, except in instances where their membership has covered a period of six months or a year in the local union. If this is done, then it is not improbable that some of our members in war service may be suspended for nonpayment of dues, and their membership and benefits will be lost.

Under Plan B of Proposition No. 4 a member in war service would feel free to deposit his traveling card with any subordinate union, knowing that the secretary thereof would be reimbursed by the International Union.

In the opinion of the writer Plan B of the fourth proposition offers by far the best solution of this problem. The assessment proposed is not a burdensome one, it will be sufficient to meet the situation, and it will place the International Union squarely on record as standing back of its members in war service.

The fourth proposition follows:

FOURTH PROPOSITION—To protect the membership of members in war service.

PLAN A—Shall the question of paying the International per capita tax of 50 cents per month and the old age pension and mortuary assessment of 30 cents each per month for members in war service be referred to subordinate unions with power to act?

PLAN B—Shall an assessment of 10 cents per member per month be levied to provide a fund from which subordinate unions shall be reimbursed for International per capita tax and old age pension and mortuary assessments paid by subordinate unions for members in war service? This assessment to be effective January 1, 1918, and to continue in effect during the war and until peace is declared by the governments under which this union has jurisdiction. Any surplus remaining undisturbed in such fund to be deposited to the credit of the old age pension fund.

Of the four propositions to be voted upon, the first, third and fourth should be adopted. The first will add strength to our pension laws, the third will require explicit referendum propositions, and the fourth will protect our members in war service. The second proposition is committed to the tender mercies of the conscientious objectors and the politicians. As employers, the members of the union will have another opportunity to say that the time is not opportune for an increase in the scale. The stupid injunction, "If the wages don't suit, why don't you hunt another job," does not fit in this instance. The employes are not the authors of the proposition.

Yours fraternally,
MARSDEN G. SCOTT.

San Francisco Has a Real Mayor.

James Rolph, jr., has proved himself one of the best friends of organized labor that ever occupied the mayor's office in San Francisco. He maintained his equilibrium in the street car strike and refused to be made a catspaw by the local chamber of commerce, which has declared that trade unionism must be put out of business in that community, and has shown his friendship on other occasions. Mayor Rolph also has a habit of recognizing ability in making appointments. This will be admitted in his selection of George A. Tracy as civil service commissioner of the city and county of San Francisco for a term of six years. The position pays $1,200 per year, and will not interfere with Mr. Tracy's regular vocation in any way. For a number of years he has been president of Typographical Union No. 21, and was also first vice-president of the International Typographical Union. George Tracy has numerous friends throughout the country who will be glad to know of his new honors.

Conciliation Wins in Denver.

Some conception of the successful results accruing through the policies pursued by the executive council of the International Typographical Union may be gleaned by considering events occurring recently in the city of Denver, Colo.

The wage scale for the book and job branch in Denver, under an agreement dated September 1, 1917, and to be in effect for the ensuing three years, will be $28.50 per week for day work and $31.50 for night work. This is an increase of $2.50 per week. The original demand of the union was for an advance of $4 per week.

Before the matter had been finally settled, Typographical Union No. 49 and the International Typographical Union became involved with the Industrial Commission of Colorado, through being served with the following notice of hearing:

THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION OF COLORADO.

NOTICE OF HEARING.

To Whom It May Concern:

GREETING—In the matter of the controversies between members of Denver Typographical Union No. 49, of Denver, Colo., employes, and the Brock-Haffner Press, Charles M. Welch, secretary of the employing printers' association, et al., arising out of demands of said employes for an increased wage and changes in working conditions.

Notice is hereby given that the Industrial Commission of Colorado hereby takes jurisdiction in the matter of said controversies and demands, and at 10 o'clock A. M. on Wednesday, September 5, 1917, will begin a hearing and investigation at the offices of said commission in the capitol building at Denver, Colo. Said hearing to be continued from day to day at the offices of said commission and at such other places as may hereafter be designated.

Section 29 of the industrial commission law provides that "Where a dispute has been made the subject of an investigation, hearing or arbitration by the commission or the board, until the dispute has been finally dealt with by such commission or board neither of the parties nor the employes affected shall alter the conditions of employment with respect to wages or hours on account of the dispute, do, or be concerned in doing, directly or indirectly, anything in the nature of a lockout or strike, or a suspension or discontinuance of work or employment; but the relationship of the employer and employe shall continue uninterrupted by the dispute or anything arising out of the dispute."

The act further provides penalties in sections 32 and 33, as follows: "Any employer declaring or causing a lockout contrary to the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars ($100) nor more than one thousand dollars ($1,000) for each day or part of day that such lockout exists.

"Any employe who goes on strike contrary to the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than ten dollars ($10) nor more than fifty dollars ($50) for each day or part of day that such employe is on strike."

Section 33: "Any person who incites, encourages, or aids in any manner any employer to declare or continue a lockout, or any employe to go or continue to strike, contrary to the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than fifty dollars ($50) nor more than one thousand dollars ($1,000), or by imprisonment in the county jail for a term of not more than six months, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

Very truly yours,

THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION OF COLORADO,

(Signed) HIRAM E. HILTS, Chairman.

Denver, Colo., August 27, 1917.

Readers of THE JOURNAL will remember that Denver Typographical Union No. 49, when the matter of scale negotiation in the book and job branch was first considered last March, adopted resolutions which were an open challenge to the Industrial Commission of Colorado, and which it was believed by our International officials at the time would not be ignored by that body. Developments later proved this to be true.

During the latter part of August the negotiations with the Denver Master Printers' Association came to a deadlock. The employers had offered a scale of $28 per week—an increase of $2—and this had been rejected by the union. A special meeting of No. 49 asked the executive council of the International Union to authorize a strike to enforce its original demands, and it was at this time that the industrial commission served the notice which appears in this article. While the executive council believes the law under which the commission operates is a most vicious and obnoxious measure, nevertheless it is a duly-enacted statute and should be complied with until repealed or declared unconstitutional. This was the reason the request for strike sanction was not granted. It should also be remembered that the International Union has an investment of approximately a million and a half dollars in the state of Colorado, and this was an additional reason for not wishing to incur legal entanglements. The action of the executive council does not mean that the "involuntary servitude" section of the industrial commission act is endorsed, as has been alleged in certain quarters.

During the negotiations, after the matter had been placed in the hands of Representative Pulver, an offer was made to arbitrate, through a local board of five members, the basis to be on a scale of $30 per week asked by the union, and $28 offered by the employers. The latter refused to consider the proposition. Then Representative Pulver submitted the figures as finally agreed to, and on September 5 signatures of the members of the Denver Master Printers' Association were attached to the contract. At a meeting of No. 49 the scale as suggested by Mr. Pulver and agreed to by the employers was adopted by a vote of 124 for to 31 against. It means an increase of $68,000 in earnings for the members of No. 49 during the three years covered by the agreement.

As shown above, September 5 was the date set by the Industrial Commission of Colorado for considering the controversy. On September 1 Representative Pulver notified the commission that the matter had been adjusted to the satisfaction of all concerned.

A Pioneer Printer Gone.

The dean of the Colorado pioneer printers and "father of Denver Typographical Union No. 49" passed away September 5, when Charles S. Semper succumbed to the infirmities of age at his home in Denver, age 87 years. Mr. Semper went to Colorado from New Orleans in 1859 and set type for the first issue of the Rocky Mountain News, the equipment for which had been brought by ox-team from Omaha. At the outbreak of the civil war he joined the confederate army and served throughout the war with General Lee. He returned to Colorado and took up a homestead in Jefferson county, a few miles north of Denver, where the town of Semper is now located.

Mr. Semper was born in England, July 31, 1830. In 1832 his father was sent to South America by the Church of England and four years later went to the Isle of Trinidad. Here Mr. Semper was married. He served seven years' apprenticeship in a printing office on the island, then left for the United States, and, after being shipwrecked, landed at Halifax, Nova Scotia, going thence to Boston, Chicago, St. Paul, St. Louis and New Orleans. Then he became imbued with the gold fever and traveled to the Pikes Peak region, arriving in Denver April 20, 1859. The next day he applied for and secured work in getting out the first issue of the Rocky Mountain News. Later Mr. Semper went to Idaho Springs and engaged in mining, returning to Denver, which was then Auraria, and accepted a permanent situation on the News.

On Saturday, April 7, 1860, a meeting of the few printers then in Denver was held at the home of Mr. Semper, where Denver Typographical Union No. 49 was organized.

A Correction.

Owing to the necessary haste in preparing the copy for the September JOURNAL, and revising the proceedings of the Colorado Springs convention, which were printed as a supplement to that number, an error occurred in compiling the changes in the laws as printed in the editorial section.

Section 6, article v, of the by-laws, as amended, reads as follows:

Section 6. Any member of the International Typographical Union who has reached the age of 60 years, and who has been in continuous good standing for a period of twenty years, and who finds it impossible to secure sustaining employment, or any member having a continuous membership of twenty years who, by reason of his affliction, is totally incapacitated for work, and whose application for admission to the Union Printers Home has been rejected by the trustees thereof, may receive the sum of $5 per week, subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth.

As printed in the September JOURNAL, page 217, the word "continuous" was omitted in the third line of the section. In the convention proceedings the amended section was printed correctly.

Fighting the Child Labor Law.

On September 1 the new federal child labor law went into effect. It provides that no child under 14 years of age may be employed in any factory, mill, workshop or cannery in the United States whose products are to be shipped in interstate commerce, and no child under 16 years in any mine or quarry, while the working day of children 14 and 15 years of age in factories may not be longer than eight hours and they may not be employed between 7 P. M. and 6 A. M.

This statute was drawn up by some of the ablest lawyers of the country, but it remained for a minor judge to declare it unconstitutional and issue an injunction against its enforcement. No one was surprised that the law was challenged in the south, in a section where child labor in the cotton mills has been a stench in the nostrils of every one who has a spark of humanity in his make-up. The staying of the statute's enforcement. which will probably last only until the case reaches the supreme court, will only give the blood-sucking cotton mill operators and others of their kind more time to exploit the children in their employ.

Digitized by Google

Our Enviable Record.

The statement in the reports of officers for the past year, that the International Typographical Union expended only $4,600 for strikes during that period, received much attention from various publications, as did the announcement that the net increase in wages of the members was approximately $4,000,000. This can be ascribed to the thoroughness and unity of the organization. The absence of strikes is due to the fact that we have reached the state where we are sufficiently powerful to force employers to the conclusion that there could be no peace in the printing industry until they were willing to accept the principle of collective bargaining. The Garment Worker gives some good advice to the needle trades in reviewing the activities of the International Typographical Union, as shown in the officers' reports, and closes by saying:

> From the day the apprentice obtains his card from the union his rights are protected. This protection follows him through life. As a journeyman he must be treated justly as to industrial conditions, and when his working days are over he is tenderly cared for, and he has the satisfaction of knowing that when his eyes close for the last time his body will not be consigned to the pauper's grave.
> This all goes to show what can be accomplished when the members of a trade union are united in a common purpose, and what the printers have secured might be obtained by the garment workers were they as united as the printers and not weakened by discord and secession. The study of the success of the union printers in organization might well afford a valuable guide to the inexperienced in trade union organization.

South Bend Printers the Right Stuff.

All honor to the members of Typographical Union No. 128, of South Bend, Ind.! The local trades council turned down a request to form a local body of the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy, and this action led the members of No. 128 to adopt the following resolutions:

> Whereas, The leaders of the labor movement in the United States have recently organized an association known as the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy; and,
>
> Whereas, The efforts of Samuel Gompers to form a branch alliance in South Bend have met with failure; therefore, be it
>
> Resolved, That South Bend Typographical Union No. 128 hereby expresses its approval of the movement; and, be it further
> Resolved, That the officers of this union, under seal, tender their services to Samuel Gompers to the end that a branch alliance may be formed in South Bend.

The union printers of South Bend are not in favor of pro-German peace movements or encouraging so-called "peace councils" which may ultimately end in serious trouble for the government. They realize that the nation is at war, and those who are not for the government are against it, and, being against it, are traitors.

Appreciation From the South.

While organized labor has a secure foothold in the southern states, the movement has never gained the strength that it enjoys in other sections of the country. This is accounted for partly owing to the workingmen in that section being apathetic toward organization, but mainly as a result of the bitter opposition of the textile barons. The south is notoriously lax in enacting legislation to protect its children who slave in the cotton factories, and there is great room for improvement in making laws to protect the adults. The International Typographical Union has recognized this condition and is doing its share—and more—to remedy the situation. Probably the weakest spots in our jurisdiction are in the southeastern section of the country.

The Southern Labor Congress held its annual convention in Charleston, S. C., last month, and had a very successful session, with about 150 delegates present. Resolutions were introduced by Delegate C. L. Wilson, of Charleston Typographical Union No. 43, commending the efforts of the executive council of the International Union in behalf of the workers of the south. Delegates expressed the opinion that the conservative policies of the organization were responsible in a large measure for the gains being made in organized labor circles in that section. Following are the resolutions:

Whereas, At the last annual convention of the Southern Labor Congress the committee of the national and international representatives appointed at the Chattanooga convention recommended, among other things, that th officers of the Southern Labor Congress appeal to the executive heads of all national and international trade unions to place and keep organizers in this field, they to work in co-operation with the American Federation of Labor representatives in organizing unions and city central bodies; and,

Whereas, The executive council of the International Typographical Union, composed of Marsden G. Scott, president; Walter W. Barrett, Hugo Miller and Charles N. Smith, vice-presidents, and John W. Hays, secretary-treasurer, respectively, of that organization, has placed three International representatives in this territory; and,

Whereas, These representatives have accomplished very material results in forming local unions in cities where organized labor was an unknown quantity, and have blazed the trail for other labor unions to make progress, and have materially strengthened the labor movement in southern cities where it was weak; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Southern Labor Congress extends to Messrs. Scott, Barrett, Miller, Smith and Hays, constituting the executive council of the International Typographical Union, our thanks and appreciation for their efforts in behalf of the organized workers of the south, and trust they may be spared many years to the labor movement, and that their efforts may continue as successfully in the future as in the past; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, signed by the president and secretary-treasurer, be forwarded to J. W. Hays, Indianapolis, Ind., secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union.

The convention also endorsed the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy, declared for conscription of wealth to help finance the war, heavy tax on incomes, excess profits, government control of industry involving labor disputes, anti-speculation measures, equal suffrage and soldiers' insurance. The congress pledged its support to "President Wilson in his avowed purpose to defeat autocracy at home as well as abroad, and to promote a democracy that shall extend its beneficial influence alike in political and economic activities of the nations."

No Slackers in the I. T. U.

The International Typographical Union was one of the first trade unions to subscribe for the first issue of Liberty bonds. In the allotment of these bonds the union's subscription was cut from $50,000 to $30,000. Subordinate local typographical unions reporting to headquarters subscribed to the amount of $54,850, while the subscriptions of individual members and the purchases made through chapel organizations amounted to $1,130,300, bringing the total subscriptions made by members of the International Typographical Union up to $1,215,000. In order that the organization may obtain bonds to the full extent of its subscription on the second Liberty Loan, the executive council of the International Typographical Union contemplates dividing its second subscription between a number of cities.

This subscription of nearly a million and a quarter dollars does not by any means represent the total purchase of Liberty Loan bonds by members of the International Union. Many chapel chairmen and local secretaries failed to respond for the requested information from headquarters, and there is no doubt that the total amount subscribed would be shown to be greatly in excess of the above-mentioned figures had all the data been received.

Educating Foreigners.

An organized movement has been launched in New York city which causes one to wonder why it was not instituted long ago. In connection with the mayor's committee on national defense, the merchants' association is co-operating in a city-wide educational campaign of Americanization among foreign-born citizens. Of course, the fact that a large number of the people of the Empire State are illiterate has long been known. This illiteracy is due largely to the presence of adult immigrants who have never had the advantage of education. Of the six million inhabitants in New York city, 80 per cent were either born abroad or are children of parents who were born abroad, and it is estimated that about 500,000 can not read or understand the English language. Since the declaration of war between the United States and Germany it has been found that a large number of the foreign-born residents of the city, especially those who are illiterate, do not understand the principles at stake or why this country is at war. The present Americanization movement is designed to give them a clear realization of the principles of government in this country and to create a spirit of patriotism among them. Chicago might follow New York's example, and begin by "educating" its mayor.

THE minutes of the annual session of the board of trustees of the Union Printers Home appear elsewhere in this issue of THE JOURNAL. Much business of importance was transacted which is of especial interest to the membership. The report of Secretary-Treasurer Hays on the Home day celebration during convention week does not appear in the minutes of the board meeting, as it was published in the convention proceedings of the third day's session in the supplement to the September JOURNAL.

A. C. WRIGHT, president of Austin (Texas) Typographical Union No. 138, has joined the officers' training camp at Leon Springs, in that state, and as he says, he "is too busy hiking, digging trenches, crawling through barbed wire, etc., hardly to think of anything else," he was compelled to resign his office. Out of all the members of the International Typographical Union who have joined the army we see no reason why at least one should not attain the rank of major-general, and THE JOURNAL is "pulling" for Wright.

POSTMASTER COLIN M. SELPH, of St. Louis, Mo., has shown that he has a warm spot in his heart for Typographical Union No. 8. When he took charge of the postoffice in that city he found only two card members in the printing department, but there are now seven members, and the office is solid union.

INCREASES IN SCALES

AN increase of $4 per week for hand compositors and $3 for machine operators in the book and job branch has been agreed to in contracts signed by the employers of Toronto, Can., and Typographical Union No. 91. This makes the scale $24 per week, and was secured through local arbitration.

• • •

THE book and job scale at Seattle, Wash., has been increased $1.50 per week. The contract is for one year from September 4, 1917, and can be opened on the request of either the union or the employers at the end of each one-year period. This makes the present scale for No. 202 in the book and job branch $28.50 per week.

• • •

WITH the assistance of Representative Charles T. Scott a new newspaper scale has been negotiated at El Paso, Texas. An increase of 50 cents a day over the old scale was granted, the agreement to be in force for five years. This makes the pay of printers employed on the two El Paso daily papers $34.50 per week for night work and $31.50 for day work.

• • •

UNDER date of September 18, Secretary Linsley, of Santa Rosa (Cal.) Union No. 577, writes headquarters as follows: "It is my pleasure and duty to inform you that we have secured an increase in the scale in Santa Rosa whereby floormen receive 50 cents a day more. This makes the scale as follows: Foremen, $24; operators, day, $24, night, $27; job and ad men, $21."

• • •

AFTER his successful work in Portland, Ore., Representative Baker journeyed to Miles City, Mont., where the members of No. 631 had asked for an increase of approximately $6 per week over the old wage. After several days of negotiations with the publishers, Mr. Baker obtained their consent to an increase of approximately $3 per week, and the settlement was made on that basis.

• • •

IN a letter from Secretary Giffin, of Fresno (Cal.) Union No. 144, dated September 12, the following appears: "I am glad to report that Fresno Union No. 144 has been granted an increase of 50 cents per day for every one, all signed up from August 1, 1917, to December 31, 1918. We have all received our back pay and all seem to be contented, even the boss printers."

• • •

AN average increase of wages of 10 per cent for all employes, skilled and unskilled, in the state printing office at Sacramento, Cal., has been put in force. Under the new schedule hand compositors will receive $30 per week, and machine operators employed at night $37.50, and those working daytime $34.50 per week. Employes of this office are also allowed an annual vacation of fifteen days with full pay.

No. 191, Winnipeg, Man., in a contract to be in force for one year has secured an increase of $3 per week for the book and job printers, making the scale $25 per week.

* * *

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN BAKER, of Helena, Mont., late in August was given an assignment by President Scott to proceed to Portland, Ore., and endeavor to secure a settlement of the newspaper scale controversy in that city, which the scale committee of No. 58 had been trying to negotiate for a couple of months or so and had not been successful. Besides other concessions, the union had asked an increase of $2.25 per week. Representative Baker was successful in his work, the agreements with the four daily papers finally being signed on a basis of $35.70 per week for night work and $32.70 for day work. This is an increase of $1.95 per week over the old scale. The book of laws of the International Union for 1917 was incorporated in the agreements, thus applying the present six-day law and the priority law in the newspaper composing rooms of Portland. The working week is based on a seven-and-one-half-hour day, with the privilege of two eight-hour days. The Portland newspaper scale now equals that of any of the large cities of our jurisdiction. Only in one or two mining communities, where unusual conditions prevail, is there a higher scale.

SOME THINGS LEARNED.

In perusing the reports of the officers of the International Typographical Union to the Colorado Springs convention of 1917 we find:

That the gross earnings of members were $66,652,431—an increase of $3,940,625 over the year 1916.

That the old age pensioners were paid $351,505.

That mortuary benefits were paid to the amount of $298,476.88.

That the Union Printers Home received $156,726.69.

That the strike expenses were only $4,684.50 for the year 1917.

That the strike expenses for the year 1907 were $1,531,496.07.

That for strike benefits and special assistance $12,281.35 were paid for the year 1917.

That the amounts paid for strike expenses, strike benefits and special assistance "are the last word in the argument in favor of the principles of arbitration as a method of adjusting disputes between the union and the publishers."

That the receipts for the year were $1,090,362.87 and the expenditures $1,022,982.34.

That the increase in earnings in 1917 over the gain in 1916 was $2,384,106.

That the average earnings per member for 1917 was $1,086.43.

That the interest on the various funds amounted to $35,086.34.

That the balances of the various funds total $1,064,349.85.

That the subscriptions to the Liberty Loan of the International and the various local unions, so far reported, were $108,150, which does not include the subscriptions of individual members amounting to many thousand dollars.

That the average paying membership shows a gain of 1,119 over 1916, the present membership being 61,350.

That 214 unions negotiated scales with increases.

That of the enormous receipts totaling $1,090,362.87, the sum of $812,099.72 were returned to the members and beneficiaries in the form of mortuary benefits, strike benefits, special assistance, old age pensions and the Union Printers Home.

That the death rate was thirteen per 1,000 members.

That the average age at death was 50.42.

That the state of Ohio has the largest number of unions, 53; Illinois second, 51; New York and Pennsylvania tied for third place, each having 45.

That the largest union is New York (No. 6), with a membership of 7,625; Chicago (No. 16), 4,573, second; Boston (No. 13), 1,877, third, and Washington (No. 101), 1,808, fourth.

That the smallest union is Red Lodge No. 273, with a membership of 3.

That the International Union must be put in the bond-holding class, having funds invested in gilt-edge government, state, county and municipal bonds to the amount of $674,466.98.

That Philadelphia Union has the largest number in arrears, 197, with Montreal second, 158, and Washington City, third, 123.

That the International Union is a business organization, doing business at a cost of less than one-third of 1 per cent on a total sale of the labor of its members, $66,652,431.

That the ability of the International Typographical Union officers would in any of the "big business" concerns of the country be recognized by salaries three times or more than received by them from the unions.

That legislative, judicial and executive ability of the highest order is demanded of the International Typographical Union officers to successfully carry forward the multifarious interests confided to their care.

That a great many other things could be profitably learned if our members would only read, digest and analyze the reports of its International officers. S. M. SHREWSBURY.

Nashville, Tenn.

THE FOURTH PROPOSITION.

The laws committee of the sixty-third convention of the International Union at Colorado Springs recommended that the following proposition be submitted to a referendum vote; and—the recommendation of the committee was unanimously concurred in:

PLAN A—Shall the question of paying the International per capita tax of 50 cents per month and the old age pension and mortuary assessments of 30 cents each per month for members in war service be referred to subordinate unions with power to act?

PLAN B—Shall an assessment of 10 cents per member per month be levied to provide a fund from which subordinate unions shall be reimbursed for International per capita tax and old age pension and mortuary assessments paid by subordinate unions for members in war service? This assessment to be effective January 1, 1918, and to continue in effect during the war and until peace is declared by the governments under which this union has jurisdiction. Any surplus remaining undisbursed in such fund to be deposited to the credit of the old age pension fund.

I dare to express the hope (and belief) that the vote will show a large majority for Plan A.

It seems to me that the members should take care of this matter of dues paying; but, if this is impracticable, the local union should look after it for the members, said members to reimburse the subordinate unions after their return from the war, or out of said member's mortuary benefits in case of death.

The second plan seems to me to be unreasonable and unjust and unfair and uncalled for, viewed from any angle. It places a double burden upon the union whose members go to war. For instance, a small union of thirty members has three members to go to the army. In the first place, they would have to pay $1.10 per member for those who went to war, or $3.30. In the second place, they would pay into the International Typographical Union treasury $2.70—10 cents per member for those who stay at home. Thus the burden is doubled to the subordinate union. They pay $3.30 dues and $2.70 tax into the International Typographical Union treasury for the purpose of reimbursing themselves. The thing is preposterous and ridiculous. Why not keep the money at home, Think of it! The subordinate union pays the dues of its members who go to war. Then they add to their burden a tax of 10 cents per member per month to be paid into the International treasury for the purpose of reimbursing themselves for the money expended in paying the dues of their members who go to war. It is unthinkable.

I can think of only one feature in its favor, and maybe that will prove to be a boomerang. In the case of many small unions from among whose membership no man goes to the army, such unions will be made to contribute to the fund for the reimbursement of those unions who do send men to the army. Otherwise, only those who send men to the army would be subject to the 10 cents per member per month tax, for the reason that having spent no money in paying dues of their members in the army, they would have nothing for which to be reimbursed.

Furthermore, there would be the added and unnecessary expense to the subordinate union of sending these moneys to headquarters; and the untold expense of handling and disbursing these funds by the International Typographical Union in reimbursing the subordinate unions with their own funds for the moneys expended in paying the dues of their own members who went to the army.

In the last place, if we need more money in the pension fund, let us go to it in direct fashion. Let us not put money in the International Typographical Union treasury ostensibly for the purpose of paying dues of men who go to war by way of reimbursing local unions, if the real object is piling up money in the old age pension fund.

Roanoke, Va. C. S. Gookin.

APPLY THE GOLDEN RULE.

In reading the proceedings of the Colorado Springs convention we notice that the proposition to increase the salaries of the president and secretary was passed, allowing an increase yearly until $5,000 per annum is reached.

We also observed that some of our strongest members supported the proposition, which shows there is merit in it and that it was passed over the objection of President Scott, who was of the opinion that it was not a wise move and does not meet the approval of our membership at large. Judging by the action of our members of the past, he had good grounds for his contention, but time brings changes and our members keep up with the times. The "wise man" changes his mind—the fool never—and our members are of the former.

The first time we had the privilege of voting for an increase in the salaries of the president and secretary-treasurer we voted with a great deal of pleasure against the proposition. That was the first year of our membership in the International Typographical Union, but after we learned more about the duties of these officers we have never voted against a raise, but have contended for a $5,000 per annum salary ever since.

Just think of paying our officers only $3,500 per year to successfully manage or foremanize our great organization, with its 75,000 membership and its 750 and more locals, when there is to our mind foremen or superintendents who make that much or more, and have only one chapel and from twenty-five to one hundred members to satisfy.

The question will no doubt be raised by those who object to the proposed increase that if our officers are not satisfied with the salary they are now receiving they can retire and seek something else. We will admit that that is true. But have these members ever thought that when they ask the office they are employed in to grant an increase in a new contract that the proprietor or manager could say the same thing to them, and when it is so stated does the local heed the suggestion? We think not, but they appoint the strongest committee possible to do their utmost to convince the proprietor or manager that it is to their advantage as well as to the local's to comply with the request. But if the committee is unsuccessful the local appeals to the officers of the International Typographical Union for assistance, which generally results in the increase and a satisfied proprietor.

We don't suppose there is a bank with a capital of $100,000 or over that doesn't pay its important officers as much or more than $3,500 per year, while the International Typographical Union has more than one million dollars invested and handles more than that amount annually, and we think we are doing the right thing by allowing our important officers that amount. Let's raise the salaries of these members in keeping with those of other organizations of the magnitude of the International Typographical Union.

We noticed recently where the foreman of a small paper in one of the western states receives about $45 per week, which is some $20 less than the president of the International Typographical Union receives. Doesn't it make us appear to be very niggardly with our high officers when there is only about $20 a week between their salaries and the salary of a foreman of a small paper.

We point with pride to other crafts what revenue our membership is enjoying even in the very small locals, but when it comes to mentioning the salaries of our high officers we have to hesitate before we tell what we are paying them. This shouldn't be thus, and in order to overcome it let's vote for the increase to a man, so that we can tell the world with pride what our high officials are worth to us, and that their salaries are in keeping with the positions they hold.

The officers of the International Typographical Union have assisted many locals to secure not only an increase but better working conditions, which should be appreciated by us all, and we are sure they stand ready and willing to continue their efforts whether the vote is for or against the proposed raise. Since they haven't sought the increase, but it comes from the membership, we should be more desirous than ever to "put it over."

When you go to vote on this proposition give the Golden Rule due consideration and then cast your vote accordingly. Stuart Shaw.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE HOME BOARD

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., August 14, 1917.

The board of trustees of the Union Printers Home met Tuesday, August 14, 1917, at 10 A. M., at the Union Printers Home in the board room of the main building.

There were present at the session President Marsden G. Scott, Vice-President Thomas McCaffery, Secretary-Treasurer J. W. Hays, Trustees Malcomb A. Knock, Miss Anna C. Wilson, George P. Nichols and William Mounce. Mr. Joe M. Johnson, agent of the Home, was also in attendance.

On motion of Secretary-Treasurer Hays, Thomas Turner was appointed doorkeeper for this session of the board.

On motion of Secretary-Treasurer Hays, the secretary was instructed to post notices notifying the residents that the board will hear any complaints or suggestions on Monday afternoon, August 20, at 2 o'clock.

On motion of Secretary-Treasurer Hays, the superintendent was instructed to invite the specialists who visit the Home to appear before the board on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, if they had any matters they desired to present.

The following communication was received from Mrs. G. L. White, a resident of the Home:

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., August 14, 1917.

MEMBERS OF THE BOARD, MISS WILSON AND GENTLEMEN—I respectfully request a hearing of my complaints this morning, and shall await your call.

Fraternally,
MRS. G. L. WHITE,
Resident.

The secretary was instructed to notify Mrs. White that her case would be heard on Monday afternoon next at 2 o'clock.

The secretary-treasurer was instructed to introduce a resolution in the convention on Wednesday morning that a summary of the ceremonies on Wednesday afternoon be included in the proceedings of the convention.

The following committees were appointed by the president:

Committee on finance—Messrs. McCaffery, Hays and Scott.

Committee on rules—Messrs. Nichols, Mounce and McCaffery.

Committee on inspection of buildings, grounds and cemetery—Messrs. Knock, Nichols and Mounce.

Committee to visit residents in hospital—Miss Wilson, Messrs. McCaffery and Knock.

President Scott presented to the board a communication from the printing firm of S. Rosenthal & Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio, accompanied by a check of $100 for the Union Printers Home. In acknowledging receipt of the check, President Scott stated that he would direct that the contribution be deposited to the credit of the Union Printers Home endowment fund.

The board by unanimous vote endorsed the position taken by President Scott.

The following communication was read and the matter referred to the finance committee:

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., July 17, 1917.

John C. Daley, Superintendent Union Printers Home, City:

DEAR SIR—In accordance with the understanding had with you and Mr. McCaffery yesterday morning, the right and privilege is hereby given the Union Printers Home Association to purchase that certain strip or tract of land bounded by Huerfano street on the north; by the Printers Home site on the east; by Prospect Lake Park on the south, and by the county road (being the extension southward of Main street, Colorado Springs, in a straight line) on the west.

The price to be paid this company is at the rate of $300 per acre for the land contained in said strip or tract, provided said right and privilege to purchase is accepted within a reasonable time.

Yours very truly,
THE COLORADO SPRINGS COMPANY,
By GEORGE A. KRAUSE, President.

On motion the meeting adjourned until Monday, August 20, 1917, at 10 A. M.

MONDAY, AUGUST 20, 1917.

The board of trustees met at 10 A. M. as per adjournment, with all members present and President Scott in the chair.

Mr. Bobo, whose application had been favorably acted upon for admission to the Home, appeared in Colorado Springs with a traveling card from Nashville Typographical Union No. 20. The secretary was instructed to return the card to the Nashville Union, with a letter saying that the action of No. 20 would not be tolerated.

In the case of Mrs. Gowdy, from Wichita, Kan., the superintendent agreed to meet the train and have her taken to a local hospital if this was found necessary, and recommended that the charge be transferred to the local union in Wichita.

The secretary read several communications addressed to President Scott, Superintendent Daley and President Rouse of New York Typographical Union No. 6, signed by ex-resident Thomas J. O'Gorman.

This matter was referred to Trustees Knock, Mounce and McCaffery, to take the letters and affidavits submitted, make any further investigation they may think advisable, and to make a written report to the board covering the controversy.

The secretary read an appeal from Alexander Gordon against his expulsion from the Home by Superintendent Daley.

On motion of Trustee Nichols the appeal was dismissed.

The following report of Superintendent Daley of the Union Printers Home was read:

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., August 20, 1917.

To the Board of Trustees, Union Printers Home:

MISS WILSON AND GENTLEMEN—Herewith I submit for your consideration the following report of the business transactions of the Home since the meeting of the finance committee in May, 1917, together with recommendations:

Following instructions of the board of trustees, Resident Trustee McCaffery and the superintendent of the Home made all arrangements for the celebration of the silver jubilee of the Union Printers Home on Wednesday, August 15. Notwithstanding the inclement weather, the "Home day" celebration was a pronounced success and was the feature of the entertainment during convention week. The barbecue has caused much favorable comment by the delegates and visitors to the convention, as well as the citizens of Colorado Springs.

Invitations to attend the Home day celebration were sent to all national and international officers of the various trades unions of the United States and Canada, the presidents and secretaries of local unions affiliated with the International Typographical Union, and to those who do business with the Home, as well as to the citizens of Colorado Springs who take an interest in the Home.

Digitized by Google

As authorized by the finance committee, the customary tourist advertisements were inserted in the Gazette and Telegraph at a cost of $40 per month. The advertisements run for a period of three months.

An agreement has been entered into with the Hub Clothing Company for suits at $13.50, an advance of one dollar, and $2.25 for hats, an advance of 25 cents.

The superintendent's office has been replastered and redecorated at a cost of $291.45. This work was authorized by the finance committee.

The main dining room floor has been covered with inlaid linoleum at a cost of $475.41.

The finance committee authorized the building of a new summer house, also a root or vegetable cellar. Because of the delay in completing the extension to the main building, it was deemed advisable to postpone the building of the summer house and root cellar until after the International Typographical Union convention. This work will be started as soon as possible.

The wiring in the old portion of the main building will be placed in conduit in the near future. This work was also postponed until after the convention.

Practically all of the work on the new addition to the main building has been completed. The painters are putting on the finishing touches and it is expected that their work will be completed within a week. Thus far $34,978.63 has been spent on this addition. At the present time there are nineteen patients occupying rooms in the new building.

As directed by the finance committee, a bronze tablet has been placed on one of the stone piers at the south end of the new dining room. This tablet bears the names of the trustees, the agent and the superintendent of the Home.

The finance committee instructed the resident trustee and the superintendent to place concrete foundations under the tents. These instructions will be carried out as rapidly as possible.

The city council voted to vacate the land adjoining the Home grounds on the west and the Home has acquired the property. The land has been graded and trees will be planted in the fall. In the spring grass seed will be sowed and the plot parked to conform with the rest of the Home grounds.

In accordance with instructions, the resident trustee and the superintendent took up with Charles T. Fertig the placing of more insurance on the Home buildings. The insurance was placed on the 80 per cent basis. Mr. Fertig has been requested to appear before the board to explain the matter in detail.

Resident Trustee McCaffery and the superintendent have secured an option on the balance of the strip of land lying west of the Home grounds and south of the main entrance, the full width of the Home property. This land can be purchased for $300 an acre. I believe it would be advisable for the board of trustees to purchase this land at this time in order to prevent it from falling into the hands of speculators.

Resident P. J. Donahue's request to be allowed to take sulphur baths was granted.

All necessary repairs and painting to put the buildings in first class condition has been taken care of.

The billiard room and barber shop floors have been re-covered with inlaid linoleum and both billiard tables have been re-covered and are now in good condition.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

1. The Home spends a considerable sum of money for ice for refrigerating purposes yearly, and it is my opinion that we can erect a refrigerating plant that will manufacture all the ice we need and in addition will be more satisfactory for coolers, milk house, etc., at a moderate cost. Trustee McCaffery and myself have looked into the matter of installing a plant and believe that a plant such as we need would cost approximately $4,200. I recommend that the board install a refrigeration plant at an estimated cost of $4,200.

2. I recommend that moving picture entertainments be given in the library for the residents of the Home from the first Sunday in October, 1917, to the last Sunday in March, 1918, and that the superintendent be authorized to use his discretion in arranging for concerts and shows during the winter season.

3. Dr. W. H. Cryer was appointed to fill the position of Home physician by the finance committee up to the time of the meeting of the board of trustees. I recommend that the employment of the Home physician for the coming year be taken up and definitely decided upon at this meeting.

4. Mrs. G. L. White, of Chicago Union No. 16, was admitted to the Home on October 4, 1916, as a tubercular patient. After keeping her under observation for some time the medical director reported that he was unable to discover bacilli in her sputum and she was transferred to the main building. Mrs. White had a continuous membership in the union of but one year and six months at the time of her admission to the Home. Our rules provide that applicants seeking admission to the main building must have an accumulated membership of at least ten years; three years antedating admission to the Home being continuous. Mrs. White's membership in the union does not meet the requirements of the law. The Home physicians are unable to give any reasons for Mrs. White staying at the Home longer, and I recommend that she be discharged.

Respectfully submitted,
JOHN C. DALEY, Superintendent.

Recommendation No. 1 was referred to the finance committee, the balance to be considered by the board at a later session.

The following resolution was presented to the board:

Resolved, That effective from August 1, 1917, the salary of the superintendent of the Union Printers Home shall be $200 per month, or $2,400 per annum.

Resolved, That effective from August 1, 1917, the salary of the matron of the Union Printers Home shall be $100 per month, or $1,200 per year.

This was referred to the finance committee, and reported upon favorably by them.

It was moved that the recommendations of the finance committee be concurred in. A yea and nay vote was called for, the members of the board voting as follows: Trustee Nichols, yes; Trustee Knock, yes; Trustee Wilson, yes; Trustee Mounce, yes; Trustee McCaffery, yes; President Scott, yes; Secretary Hays, yes.

Digitized by Google

The vote was unanimous in favor of the adoption of the findings of the finance committee.

The board adjourned to inspect the land in front of the Home grounds that they contemplate purchasing from the Colorado Springs Company.

MONDAY AFTERNOON.

The board reconvened at 2 o'clock, with all members present.

It was moved that the officers of the corporation be instructed to notify the Colorado Springs Company that they will accept their proposition for the purchase of the land inspected by the board this morning, and that their attorney be instructed to prepare the necessary papers to complete the transaction.

This motion was unanimously adopted.

Resident John H. Mathers, a member of Detroit Typographical Union No. 18, appeared before the board and stated that he desired to vacate the Home and be placed on the old age pension list. As Mr. Mathers is not 60 years of age it would be necessary that an application for admission to the Home be rejected in order to entitle this resident to the pension. He desires some assurance that if he vacates and makes application for readmission that the application will be rejected, so that he may make application for the old age pension.

Mrs. G. L. White appeared before the board with a number of complaints and extended arguments on each one. After giving her all the time desired for making the complaints, she was dismissed with the statement that the board would consider her complaints later.

Miss Gariepy appeared before the board and made a request on behalf of the female residents that a sewing machine be furnished them for the making and repairing of clothing. The board decided it would take action upon this request after ascertaining from the superintendent and matron what opportunity there would be for these residents in the sewing-room to be provided in the changes.

A request was read from resident Jabez G. Ayers that residents of the Home be granted a pro rata allowance for wearing apparel, and that they be granted the privilege of purchasing such apparel from merchants with whom they can obtain the highest satisfaction.

It was moved and seconded that the request of resident Ayers regarding allowance for clothing be not granted. This motion was unanimously adopted.

It was moved, seconded and carried that resident John H. Mathers be informed that this board can not give him any guarantee of his being rejected on a second application for admission to the Home, nor any assurance as to receiving a pension.

The board called Superintendent Daley before it and asked him to reply to the complaints made by Mrs. White, which he did in an extended manner, covering all the points except those on which it would be necessary to call the matron.

The following committee was appointed to call on the residents named in the complaint and report to the board the result of their investigations: Trustees Mounce, Knock and Wilson.

The board adjourned subject to call during the afternoon to meet the city engineer.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 21, 1917.

The board met at 10 A. M., as per adjournment, at the call of President Scott, with all members present.

The report of the committee to visit the sick was presented to the board and read by the secretary-treasurer. The committee reported on thirty-six patients.

Charles T. Fertig, of the Fertig Insurance and Investment Company, appeared before the board with information as to the valuation of the Home property for insurance purposes and the following documents were presented by Mr. Fertig:

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., August 6, 1917.

John C. Daley, Superintendent Union Printers Home, City:

DEAR MR. DALEY—We beg to hand you herewith policies aggregating $226,200 covering your property under new general form.

Of this amount $93,000 has just been issued for periods of two and three years at a total premium of $1,878.07 as per statement attached. In this statement you will note an original charge of $2,640 with a rebate of $762.47, due to the fact that we obtained a further reduction in rate after the policies were originally written. The only existing policies which were affected by this reduction were three policies written last November under the new term rule by the Colorado Investment and Realty Company. These we had endorsed as per memorandum on statement and for which we enclose their check in the amount of $76.10.

We also beg to hand you insurance register with all policies listed and which shows the following expirations for the various years:

In 1917	$41,200
In 1918	58,500
In 1919	36,000
In 1920	75,500
In 1921	15,000
Total	$226,200

We would recommend that this line be readjusted so that the total insurance might be approximately divided equally over a three-year period; that is to say that after an adjustment is made all policies to be issued for terms of three years rather than five years as heretofore. This would make one-third of the amount fall due each year.

This suggestion is made after going carefully into the matter of three- and five-year term insurance. We find that the saving effected by taking out five-year policies is more than offset by interest on the premium which would have been invested, and therefore recommend three-year term insurance.

Your line might be adjusted in the following manner:

Renew the line of $41,200 expiring in 1917 for a two-year period. This will result in a total line for the year 1919	$77,200
You already have expiring in the year 1920	75,500
Renew the line of $58,500 expiring in 1918 for a three-year period. This will result in a total line for the year 1921	73,500 and bring about an approximate equal division of the total	$226,200

You will note upon going through the expiration register that there are a great many duplicates of companies, that is to say policies have been written in the same companies at different times. This makes an unwieldy number of policies, and we would urgently suggest that as the policies expire they be combined to the end that the same amount of insurance may be written in a greatly reduced number of policies.

In the event of a small loss of which you have had two in the past year, the work of making up the proofs of loss is very great compared with the amount received from each company. If the policies were larger this work would be materially reduced, and would necessarily hasten the settlement of losses of this kind.

While on this subject, I beg to say that the loss of a week ago when a cow was killed by lightning was not covered under the previous form of insurance but is covered under the present form, so that I feel some good has been accomplished already by the adoption of the new form.

In order that the Home may have a perfect record of the readjustment of this insurance at this time, I am attaching hereto a statement showing just how the present insurance was arrived at. You will recall that when this matter was referred to the finance committee, the chairman of that committee expressed the opinion that insurance should be carried to an amount equal to not less than two-thirds of the present value of buildings and contents as shown by the replacement values for buildings and the inventory of contents.

I worked out the values on the same principle as would be employed in the adjustment of a loss and then placed the insurance on a basis of 80 per cent to value. Using the two-thirds rule, suggested by the chairman, on the main building the amount of insurance carried would have been $147,136, while by our rule of taking the new cost less depreciation and insuring for 80 per cent of the difference it amounts to $145,000, in other words the figures for which you are now insured work out approximately the same as if the flat two-thirds of the present gross value had been adopted.

As already shown, we succeeded in getting a reduction in rate after the present new insurance was placed. It may be possible to get other small reductions and we still have this in mind for future action.

In closing this report I beg to say that it would have been impossible to readjust this insurance had it not been for the painstaking figures furnished me as to the value of the buildings and the very careful way in which the inventory of contents was made. I beg to thank you for this very complete information and also extend congratulations to the institution for the broad and understanding way in which both the board and finance committee have viewed this very important subject. As you know, very material assistance was rendered by Mr. McCaffery, whose knowledge of the early history of the buildings and contents and their approximate cost was of great value in arriving at the results shown.

Respectfully submitted,
CHARLES T. FERTIG.

STATEMENT OF THE ADJUSTMENT OF INSURANCE ON THE MAIN BUILDING, UNION PRINTERS HOME, JUNE, 1917.

In case of its destruction by fire and a consequent adjustment of loss being necessary, the following statement is made so that such adjustment might be facilitated, with a clearer understanding of the method by which the amount of insurance placed on the main building was arrived at:

Original main building cost approximately		$70,000 00
Deduct depreciation 25 per cent		17,500 00
Net value original main building		$52,500 00
Total value present main building of which original main building is now a part as per Portner estimate	$150,000
Deduct original main building as above	70,000
Value of main building exclusive of present new addition not completed and hospital annex	80,000
Deduct depreciation	5,000
		75,000 00
Add new addition		40,000 00
Total		$167,500 00
Cost of hospital annex approximately	18,000
Less depreciation 25 per cent	4,500
Net value hospital annex		13,500 00
Total value main building as now constituted		$181,000 00
Insured for 80 per cent ($144,800)		145,000 00

The value of the contents of this building is taken from the inventory of this date and insurance placed at approximately eighty per cent of the inventory value. This was done for the reason that the inventory was not taken on a basis of cost to replace, but on a basis of new cost, less depreciation, consequently no depreciation from inventory value is shown.

This rule was applied also in placing insurance on the contents of the other buildings and for the same reason.

Attached hereto is a statement showing previous insurance as compared to value both on buildings and contents, also showing the insurance as now carried. Attention is called to the fact that the single exception to approximately 80 per cent of insurance to value is in the case of the greenhouse, where account was taken of the fact that the building would likely be remodeled shortly, while the contents are only at the value shown during certain periods of the year, and it was considered that the amount of insurance on these contents would be sufficient to cover the average value thereof. Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES F. FERTIG.

THE UNION PRINTERS HOME.

Secretary-Treasurer Hays moved that the superintendent be instructed to rent a safe deposit vault in which to deposit the insurance papers, etc.

This motion was unanimously adopted.

Secretary-Treasurer Hays moved that the request of resident Wallace H. Jacques that the tents be boarded up be not complied with.

This motion was unanimously adopted.

The board authorized the superintendent to have a truss made for resident Charles Collins, if this met with the approval of the Home physician.

The request of resident Samuel Galperin, that the door to his room be repaired, was referred to Superintendent Daley.

It was moved that the request of the female residents that a sewing machine, electric iron and pressing board be procured was referred to the superintendent and the matron, with the recommendation that the request be complied with.

This motion was unanimously adopted.

The following communication was read by the secretary-treasurer:

NEW YORK, July 18, 1917.

John C. Daley, Superintendent Union Printers Home, Colorado Springs, Colo.:

MY DEAR MR. DALEY—In a few days you will receive by express a full set (sixteen volumes) of the "Catholic Encyclopedia." These volumes are presented to the Union Printers Home by members of New York Typographical Union No. 6. It is a great pleasure to note the non-denominational character of the subscribers, a great number of whom were not of the Catholic faith.

That this stupendous work may be a source of comfort and solace and instruction to the resident members of the Home is my most earnest wish.

Fraternally yours,
JAMES J. MURPHY.

Trustee Mounce moved that the secretary be directed to acknowledge the receipt of the books and accept the same, expressing the appreciation of the board for them.

The following communication was presented to the board:

NEW YORK, August 7, 1917.

John C. Daley, Superintendent Union Printers Home, Colorado Springs, Colo.:

MY DEAR MR. DALEY—In preparing for the trip to the convention at Colorado Springs, I recollected that Mrs. Prescott had given me two sets of volumes belonging to our friend W. B. Prescott.

It appeared to me that the proper place for these would be in the Home library, and I am sending you these two sets of books by express today, prepaid.

If you had a little inscription put inside each of the volumes, stating that they were the property of W. B. Prescott, it would add, I think, to the sentimental value of the books.

Trusting that it will be satisfactory, and that you will be able to find a place for these volumes, which I am anxious to have preserved in perpetuity, I remain, Yours fraternally,
A. H. MCQUILKIN.

The board instructed the secretary to accept the same in behalf of the Union Printers Home and express the appreciation of the board for this gift. The superintendent was instructed to have the suggested inscription placed in the books.

Vice-President McCaffery brought to the attention of the board the following document regarding the vacation of a portion of Main street:

of section seventeen (17), township fourteen (14) south, range sixty-six (66) west of the sixth principal meridian; thence north along said section line two hundred and seventy (270) feet, more or less, to the quarter corner; thence west along the center line of section seventeen (17) sixty-three (63) feet, more or less, to the intersection of a line running parallel to, and one hundred (100) feet east from, the west line of Main street; thence southerly along the last-described line two hundred sixty-five (265) feet, more or less, to a point where the north line of Huerfano street intersects same; thence easterly along the north line of Huerfano street produced seventy-two (72) feet, more or less, to the point of beginning; be and the same hereby is vacated.

Section 2. This ordinance shall be in force and take effect from and after ten days after its passage and publication as required by the charter.

Passed June 20, 1917.

————, President of the Council.

Approved ————, 1917.

————, Mayor.

The secretary was instructed to write a letter to the mayor thanking him for the action that council took in vacating the street, and also a letter to Mrs. Julia H. Dakens acknowledging receipt of the documents and thanking her for her work in the matter.

The committee appointed to take testimony on the complaints of Mrs. G. L. White made a report, which was unanimously adopted.

Secretary-Treasurer Hays made the following statement:

In the case of Mrs. White, when her application for admission to the Home was made, it showed but eighteen months' membership in the organization, this being about two years ago. The doctor's certificate accompanying the application showed that the applicant was afflicted with tuberculosis, and that being the case eighteen months' membership was sufficient to entitle the applicant to admission to the Home, it requiring ten years' membership, three of which must be continuous, to entitle members not afflicted with tuberculosis to admission to the Home.

The doctor reports that when Mrs. White reached the Home no evidence of tuberculosis could be found, and it is my opinion that her admission to the Home was obtained through statements and a physician's certificate that were not entirely correct, and that she was not at that time entitled to admission to the Home.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That resident Mrs. G. L. White, having obtained admission to the Home on statements not substantiated as to her having tuberculosis, and her continued presence being detrimental to the interests of the institution and other residents, the board hereby directs resident White to vacate within forty-eight hours.

The board adjourned until 2 P. M.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

The board reconvened at 2 o'clock with all members present and President Scott in the chair.

Drs. Robinson and Stevens appeared before the board and made statements as to the medical department.

Doctor Stevens made the request that he be appointed a member of the medical staff of the Union Printers Home.

At the last meeting of the finance committee, Superintendent Daley in recommendation No. 3 to the committee recommended the building of new greenhouses at an estimated cost of $4,000. The finance committee decided that this should be carried over until the regular meeting of the board of trustees.

On motion the board decided this should be recommitted to the finance committee.

In his recommendations presented to the finance committee, at its last meeting, Superintendent Daley referred to the committee the question of building an addition to the present laundry, to provide facilities for doing all of the Home laundry work in this laundry. The finance committee decided that the building of an extension to the laundry would not be a profitable investment at that time, and therefore declined to authorize such extension. The board of trustees endorsed the position taken by the finance committee in this matter, and again referred the question to the finance committee.

In his report to the finance committee the superintendent made certain recommendations and statements regarding the rewiring of the main building and the annex. The committee authorized the rewiring in accordance with the estimate submitted by Superintendent Daley in the main building, but referred the recommendation regarding the annex to the full board.

The board decided that the same instructions should be given to Superintendent Daley regarding the wiring of the annex as were given by the committee regarding the wiring of the main building, and that the rewiring of the annex should be done according to the recommendations of Superintendent Daley at an estimated cost of $820.

The following statement was made by Secretary-Treasurer Hays:

We have a case where a resident of the Home died and had some money in a bank in Colorado Springs. In his blank he filled out when he came to the Home he asked that this money be given to the Union Printers Home. When we tried to get the money we ran up against the laws of Colorado. Our attorney informed us that we had no claim on the money under the laws because the blank would not be recognized as a will by the courts of Colorado. Any document purporting to be a will and leaving money or property must contain the statement that it is their last will and testament, which this document did not.

The attorney drew up a document which he said would be satisfactory to the bank here for President Scott and myself to fill out, under which we will probably get the money. We then directed the attorney to draft a form of a blank that when signed would allow us to get what the residents desired we should have, to cover the law. He drew a form and presented it to the committee, but the committee did not believe that it was a proper blank and did not take any action except to pass it along. The form of the blank is this:

(The secretary read the blank.)

At this time the board adjourned to inspect with the agent of the land, the land in front of the Home and the cemetery plots.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The meeting was called to order at 10 A. M. with President Scott in the chair, and all members present.

Medical Director Doctor Giese appeared before the board in response to an invitation issued at a previous meeting.

Secretary-Treasurer Hays read the following communication from Albuquerque Typographical Union No. 304:

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., July 12, 1917.

To the Officers and Members of Local Typographical Unions:

DEAR BROTHERS—At the regular July meeting of Albuquerque Typographical Union No. 304, the following resolution was adopted without a dissenting vote:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this union that our delegate to the International Typographical Union convention at Colorado Springs, Colo., is instructed to use his best efforts to have the convention legislate in favor of directing the board of trustees of the Union Printers Home to adopt the plaster treatment for tuberculosis now in use at the Read, Dolph & Co. sanatorium at Albuquerque, N. M."

The members of Albuquerque Typographical Union hope the members of your local will see the wisdom of following the lead of Albuquerque Union and that you will instruct your delegate to co-operate with our delegate, Thomas Hughes, to get this legislation through. In case you are not sending a delegate kindly write the convention a letter urging that they adopt this treatment for use in the Union Printers Home.

We have two members who are taking this treatment, both having recently left the Home without beneficial results and who are stanch supporters of this treatment.

We are enclosing a booklet which will fully explain what this treatment is and what is claimed for the treatment.

Thanking you in advance for your support in this matter, we are respectfully yours,

ALBUQUERQUE TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION No. 304,
FRANK H. LOWE, President;
J. B. HARRIS, Secretary-Treasurer.

President Scott reported to the board that after these resolutions were received Doctor Giese was instructed to make an investigation of the Read, Dolph & Co. sanatorium at Albuquerque. Doctor Giese made a report upon the investigation.

Doctor Giese submitted the following:

To the Board of Trustees, Union Printers Home,
Colorado Springs, Colo.:

As medical director, I wish to make the following suggestions in regard to the medical department. I think I can conscientiously say that I am familiar with the cost and with the equipment of many of the larger sanatoria of this country and particularly of those of the west and middle west. I feel that the number of patients in the sanatorium has increased without the proper amount of money being spent for equipment and additional medical help. Knowing that your board would prefer that I put these things in concrete form, I would make the following suggestions:

1. The present physician, Doctor Cryer, is becoming more efficient and of more value to the institution, and in my opinion his salary should be increased $25 per month, it being understood that he is to devote his entire time to the institution.

2. The medical director suggests that an assistant resident physician be employed at a salary not to exceed $100 per month and maintenance; that this physician be one especially interested in laboratory work and that he devote part of his time to laboratory work under the direction of the medical work; that he not, however, be an exclusive laboratory man, but be capable of handling a certain amount of clinical work.

3. The medical director recommends that Dr. John R. Robinson, who has served this institution so faithfully for so many years, be relieved of part of the work pertaining to the ear, nose and throat, but that he retain the work being properly under the department of the eye, and for this service that his salary be $50 per month, as at the present time.

4. The medical director suggests that Dr. W. V. Mullin, of Colorado Springs, be appointed as specialist in charge of the ear, nose and throat department; that he be required to do all operative work on the ear, nose and throat, etc., here or at any hospital to which patients may be sent; that he spend at least two hours per week at the institution examining patients and advising as to the line of treatment that should be carried out by the medical director and by the resident physician. His salary to be $50 per month.

5. It is the opinion of the medical director that instead of calling in expert neurologists in certain cases that the neurologist, Dr. Frank B. Stevens, be placed on a salary of $25 per month and that he be expected to examine such patients as shall be referred to him by the medical director once each week at the institution or at his office.

6. That a reasonable amount be appropriated for equipment of a nose and throat room, the cost of the equipment to be submitted to the board prior to its being bought, and not to exceed $200.

7. That the board have in mind the employment of a resident dentist.

8. The medical director requests that a complete X-ray outfit be installed in this institution, of such a character and nature as the board and medical director shall see fit. I respectfully call your attention to the fact that all institutions of note, both private and public, either have installed in their own places X-ray equipment or have easy access, and unlimited access, to such equipment.

9. That some provision should be made for porches for the lady residents.

10. That the use of tobacco be prohibited among sanatorium residents without the written permission of the house physician and the medical director.

11. That Doctor McKenne be continued as consulting surgeon at no fixed salary.

12. That the medical director be expected and supposed to spend at least two hours per day at the sanatorium; that if it is impossible for him to be at the sanatorium that his associate, Dr. H. C. Goodson, be in attendance during that time. For this service the medical director requests the salary of $250 per month.

13. The medical director respectfully asks that representatives of this institution be allowed to attend at least two medical conventions during the year, resolutions similar to those passed by the board at the last meeting.

The board adjourned until 1:15, when an inspection of the Home grounds and buildings will be made.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

The board reconvened at 3 P. M. with all members present and President Scott in the chair.

Secretary-Treasurer Hays presented the report of the Home day celebration.

The secretary-treasurer was instructed to write letters of thanks to each of the speakers at the Home day celebration, to the manager of the glee club, to the band, and to Mark Raftry, for his services in connection with the barbecue.

Doctor Giese reported that he had made a thorough investigation of the Read, Dolph & Co. sanatorium at Albuquerque, and as a result of the above report the board decided that it did not care to consider the proposition.

The finance committee made the following report:

1. The finance committee recommends that Doctor Cryer be employed for the coming year under the same conditions as agreed with the committee in May, with an increase in salary of $25 per month.

This recommendation was concurred in.

2. The finance committee recommends that action on the suggestion of Medical Director Doctor Giese in regard to the employment of an assistant resident physician at a salary of $100 per month and maintenance be deferred and referred to the finance committee.

This recommendation was concurred in.

3. The finance committee recommends that the suggestion of the medical director in regard to Doctor Robinson be concurred in.

This recommendation was unanimously adopted

Digitized by Google

4. The finance committee recommends that the suggestion of Medical Director Doctor Giese in regard to Dr. W. V. Mullin be concurred in.

This recommendation was unanimously adopted.

5. The finance committee recommends that the suggestion of Medical Director Doctor Giese regarding the employment of Dr. Frank B. Stevens, at a salary of $25 per month be endorsed.

This recommendation was concurred in.

6. The finance committee recommends that Superintendent Daley and Resident Trustee McCaffery be authorized to expend the sum of $200 for the equipment of a nose and throat room as suggested by Medical Director Doctor Giese.

This recommendation was concurred in.

7. The finance committee recommends that the suggestion of Medical Director Doctor Giese that a resident dentist be employed be not concurred in at this time.

This recommendation was unanimously adopted.

8. The finance committee recommends that the request of Medical Director Doctor Giese, that an X-ray outfit be installed, be denied at the present time.

This recommendation was concurred in.

9. The finance committee recommends that the suggestion of Medical Director Doctor Giese, regarding sleeping porches for the lady residents, be referred to Superintendent Daley to see if he can arrange for them.

This recommendation was concurred in.

10. The suggestion of Medical Director Doctor Giese, that Doctor McKenne be continued as consulting surgeon, is concurred in.

This recommendation was unanimously adopted.

11. The finance committee recommends that Medical Director Doctor Giese be authorized to attend not more than two medical conventions during the year at the expense of the institution.

This recommendation was concurred in.

12. The finance committee recommends that the salary of Medical Director Doctor Giese be made $2,500 per year.

This recommendation was concurred in.

13. The finance committee recommends that the superintendent and resident trustee be instructed to go on and complete the negotiations for the land to the west of the Home grounds, get a survey if necessary, have fences built, etc.

This recommendation was concurred in.

14. The finance committee recommends that the superintendent and resident trustee be authorized to install an ice refrigerating plant at an estimated cost of not to exceed $4,200, they to determine the particular plant to be purchased.

This recommendation was concurred in.

15. The finance committee recommends that the building of a root cellar authorized by the committee in May be deferred, and that Superintendent Daley and Trustee McCaffery be instructed to have the architect prepare plans for a cellar with a vault above in connection and a story for other purposes above the vault to be presented to the finance committee meeting next spring.

This recommendation was concurred in.

The report of the committee as a whole was concurred in.

It was moved and seconded that the thanks of the board of trustees be extended to Superintendent and Mrs. Daley for the magnificent manner in which the exercises and entertainment in connection with the silver anniversary jubilee of the Union Printers Home was arranged and carried out.

This motion was adopted unanimously.

The committee on rules made the following report:

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., August 22, 1917.

To the Members of the Board of Trustees, Union Printers Home:

GENTLEMEN—The members of the committee on rules herewith submit some proposed amendments to the rules:

Amend section 4 to read as follows:

Complaints of any nature whatsoever must be made to the superintendent. Should he fail to give consideration to any complaint within a reasonable time, the complainant may file his grievance with the president of the board of trustees.

The recommendation of the amendment of section 4 was concurred in.

Amend section 8 to read as follows:

Pensions (both local and International) shall be withheld during consideration of appeals. If decision is adverse to appellant, no pension will be paid. If decision is favorable to appellant, he shall receive back pension. Local unions giving pensions to residents of the Home, must remit it to the superintendent, who will disburse the same, and receipt for it.

This recommendation was non-concurred in and the matter was referred to the executive committee of the board.

Amend section 9 to read as follows:

Residents granted a furlough by the board for a period exceeding one week will not be entitled to the International Typographical Union pension during such absence.

The recommendation of the amendment of section 9 was concurred in.

Amend section 11 to read as follows:

Accusations or charges against the superintendent, matron or other official of the Union Printers Home must be of a specific nature, and made in the following manner: They must be in writing, accompanied by an affidavit that the complainant has personal knowledge of the truth of the charges, and copies of the same forwarded to the president of the board of trustees and to the local union of which the accuser is a member. Should said local union endorse the charges, it shall notify the president of the board of trustees and he shall immediately notify the other members of the board of such accusations or charges, and their endorsement by the local union. If a majority of the board decides an investigation necessary, the president shall call a meeting of said board within thirty days, at such place as the board shall direct.

The recommendation of the amendment of section 11 was concurred in.

Amend section 22 to read as follows:

Meals will be served in the main dining room during the following hours: Breakfast, from 7:15 to 8:15; dinner, from 11:45 to 12:45, and supper from 5:45 to 6:45. Sundays and holidays, supper will be served from 5 to 6. New Year's day, I. T. U. Memorial day, Decoration day, Fourth of July, Labor day, Thanksgiving and Christmas will be observed as holidays. No meals will be served except during the hours mentioned. A bell will be rung fifteen minutes before each meal, and each meal will be announced by the second ringing of the bell. All who are able must attend the general table. Suitable meals will be prepared and sent to the rooms of the sick. Lunches shall not be prepared for outings other than those arranged by the superintendent or matron.

The recommendation to amend section 22 was concurred in.

Amend section 33 to read as follows:

Residents are required to deliver soiled clothing to the laundry and to call for laundered clothes. All clothing must be accompanied by laundry list properly filled out. Clothing must be delivered to laundry on Saturday between 8 and 9 A. M. Residents will call at the sewing-room for their laundered clothing on Friday between the hours of 2 and 5 P. M. The furnishing room will be opened at 9 o'clock every Saturday morning.

The recommendation to amend section 33 was concurred in.

Add the following new section:

The use of tobacco in any form by sanatorium patients is forbidden except by permission of the Home physician.

This recommendation was concurred in.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE P. NICHOLS,
WILLIAM MOUNCE,
THOMAS MCCAFFERY.

The report of the committee was adopted.

The committee appointed to submit a report on the charges filed by Thomas O'Gorman against Superintendent Daley presented the following:

To the Board of Trustees of the Union Printers Home:

MISS WILSON AND GENTLEMEN—Your committee begs leave to submit the report which follows:

This matter has reduced itself to a question of veracity between Mr. O'Gorman and Mr. Daley. The committee has interviewed Mr. Moran, a resident of the Home, around whom much of the details of this cause center. Mr. Moran substantiates Mr. Daley's version of the incident in which Mr. Moran figures, and clearly convicts Mr. O'Gorman of violation of the rule applying to conversing with tubercular patients at rest. The violation of this rule, however, was not the cause of Mr. Daley's fining O'Gorman. The incident just referred to would have passed off without further comment had not Mr. O'Gorman sought out Mr. Daley in his office and roundly upbraided him for cautioning him not to interfere with patients at rest. That this was a flagrant violation of rule 3 your committee is convinced, and it believes Mr. Daley was fully justified in taking the action he did. Lax discipline in an institution such as the Union Printers Home, made up of men and women of a variety of temperaments and conflicting views, would be a death blow to the usefulness of the Home and the contentment of its residents; and on the question of veracity between Mr. Daley's version of the affair and Mr. O'Gorman's, your committee, from all the evidence in sight, is satisfied Mr. Daley was right and Mr. O'Gorman was wrong. Mr. O'Gorman left the Home on his own initiative, and if things were unpleasant for him he has no one to blame but himself.

Your committee recommends that the case be dismissed. Respectfully submitted,

MALCOLM A. KNOCK,
WILLIAM MOUNCE,
THOMAS MCCAFFERY.

The report of the committee was adopted.

The committee on the inspection of buildings and cemetery plot submitted the following report:

The trustee to whom was assigned the duty of making the report for this committee, which comprised the entire board, has the honor of submitting the following:

The main building, familiar for years to residents and visitors alike, we find to be in excellent repair. A new kitchen, a model of practical utility, where the culinary art so essential to the creature comforts of the residents is pursued with the minimum of effort and the maximum of results, has just been installed, and is a noteworthy exhibition of the most modern domesticana.

The addition to the main building, just completed, we find spick and span in the budding glory of its newness. It is a notable acquisition, worthy of the intimate association it maintains with its older relative, and should be the pride of every union printer in the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union. The dining room in this new building was a very necessary improvement, and is filling its mission to the satisfaction of all.

The library is expanding with a wholesome growth, steadily acquiring what is new in the world of literature. It is to the intellect what the kitchen is to the stomach, and is one of the most important features of the Home. The librarian is doing his work well, and is a credit to the institution.

The laundry resembles one of the commercial variety, and is performing its important work well, while the boiler-room bristles with the brightness of a man-of-war.

We find the hospital, pavilions and tent colony standing the tests of time and performing their functions uncomplainingly.

One of the most interesting exhibits of the Home is its barn and live stock. It is a lesson in the sanitary housing of cattle, and fifty full-blooded Holsteins are found there chewing their cuds to the eminent satisfaction of themselves and to the edification of those whose needs demand the cow's chief product. Four horses, also in good condition, are found in the barn, while nearly 350 chickens cackle in the mere joy of supplying the Home with as many eggs as the fickle hen disposes.

Probably never before did the grounds reflect more credit on the head gardener. Flower beds of pleasing design and almost dark with vari-hued color, deck the greensward right and left, while the grass is vernal in its freshness and beauty.

The three plots wherein lie the printer dead were fairly joyous in the August sunshine. When life's work is done, what better place for eternal sleep than this beautiful spot under the shadow of Colorado's majestic peaks?

We congratulate the superintendent, John C. Daley, on the condition of the Home and its surroundings; we thank the matron for the painstaking care with which she has performed her exacting and perplexing duties, and we also thank those residents who help to make the Union Printers Home a utilitarian and economic success.

Respectfully submitted,

MALCOLM A. KNOCK,
WILLIAM MOUNCE,
GEORGE P. NICHOLS.

The report of the committee was adopted.

It was moved that the rules as amended be reprinted.

This motion was unanimously adopted.

Secretary-Treasurer Hays moved that the doorkeeper, Thomas Turner, of Typographical Union No. 16, be paid the sum of $3 for his services during the session of the board.

This motion was adopted.

Secretary-Treasurer Hays moved that Trustee McCaffery be allowed the sum of $300 for his services during the year in connection with the Home.

This motion was unanimously adopted.

The superintendent and master mechanic were authorized to examine and repair the tents in accordance with the instructions of the finance committee at the May meeting, although the cost may be somewhat larger than anticipated.

Regarding the form of will which the finance committee had drawn by Attorney Kinsley, and which was submitted to the board at a previous session, the board instructed the secretary-treasurer to have copies printed, leaving blank that portion referring to all the property of the signer, so that any part of the property might be left to the Home if the resident so desired. It was ordered that this form should be printed in a blank separately from the form at present used, the present form to be given a member coming to the Home to be filled out as at present, the new form to be used only in case a resident expresses a desire to leave all or a portion of his belongings to the institution.

Trustee Knock moved that the secretary cast the ballot of the board for president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer, the present incumbents to continue in office for the next year.

This motion was unanimously adopted, and the following officers were declared elected:

President, Marsden G. Scott; vice-president, Thomas McCaffery; secretary-treasurer, J. W. Hays.

Agent of the Home, Joe M. Johnson, expressed his pleasure at having been privileged to attend the meetings of the board, and gratification at the progress made in the Home during the past year, after which Mr. Johnson addressed the board as follows:

I am the bearer of a gift from a member of Columbia Union to the Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs. The gift is a scrapbook prepared by Miss Julia M. Burke, of Columbia Union.

Miss Burke requested me to say to the board that the book was prompted by a desire to present something to the Home library that would be a source of reminiscent pleasure to the residents of the Union Printers Home. It consists of a collection of portraits, prose and poetical writings of printers, dating back to 1899; also a bit of typographical union and government printing office history. Miss Burke also acknowledges with grateful appreciation her indebtedness to many friends who assisted her in the compilation of this work. It represents the patience and painstaking care of many odd hours of the past sixteen years. Many printers have visited Washington; a few have stopped there; many have regarded it as a way station, finally coming to the Home. She has played no favorites. On the same page in many places she has placed all factions.

Miss Burke wanted me to say to you that she is aware of the fact that where a few printers are gathered together there is apt to be a great deal of reminiscing, and she hopes this book will afford an opportunity for many pleasing reminiscences of the printers who are at the Home and who are to come in the future.

Let me on my behalf say that Miss Burke is a noble-hearted woman, and she has compiled this work out of love for her kind—men and women who are printers, and union printers.

Trustee Knock moved that the gift be accepted, and that the secretary-treasurer be instructed to send an appropriate letter of appreciation to Miss Burke.

This motion was unanimously adopted.

The meeting adjourned until Thursday morning at 11 o'clock.

THURSDAY MORNING.

The board met at 11 A. M. as per adjournment, with Vice-President McCaffery in the chair.

At a previous meeting of the board the request made by John H. Mathers, that he be given some assurance that if he vacated the Home and again made application for admission he would be rejected, was adversely acted upon. After consultation with Medical Director Doctor Giese, the board rescinded its former action and instructed the secretary to notify Mr. Mathers that if he vacated the Home at this time his condition was such that the finance committee would necessarily reject any application he might make for readmission.

Doctor Cryer appeared before the board and stated he did not feel he could agree to remain here on the proposition offered by the board, but if they would make the same proposition with meals for himself and wife, that is, $150 a month and meals for the two, he would give it favorable consideration. He further stated that he and Doctor Giese had talked over the recommendations that had been made to the board, and as Doctor Giese had presented them he had nothing further to offer.

The board instructed Superintendent Daley to call Doctor Giese, the medical director of the institution, and tell him what action the board had taken on his request for an increase in salary. When the superintendent called the doctor he asked as to what had been done regarding the laboratory work in the institution, and the result was that he was invited to appear before the board, which he did. Doctor Giese set forth at some length the importance to the institution of having laboratory work done, and a number of suggestions were made as to how provision might be made for necessary work of this character, pending action by the finance committee. Doctor Giese finally stated to the board that his particular interest was in having the medical work of the institution properly done, and that he hoped the board would make some provision for taking care of the laboratory work that was necessary, and with the idea that the board would do something of this kind he agreed to accept a compromise on salary, being $2,500 per year.

After Doctor Giese left the board gave considerable discussion to the laboratory proposition, and the following motion was unanimously adopted:

That the superintendent be authorized to expend not more than $50 per month for laboratory work, under the best arrangements that can be made.

Trustee Knock moved that the board stand by the proposal it made to Doctor Cryer, and that it decline to make the change requested by him.

This motion was unanimously adopted.

There being no further business to come before the board, it was on motion adjourned.

J. W. HAYS, Secretary-Treasurer.

FROM LOCAL UNIONS

SCRANTON, PA.

"The Electric City, 1918."

During convention week at Colorado Springs the writer was approached by many delegates and visitors who intend to make the trip to the next convention city. They inquired as to the railroad facilities for entering and leaving Scranton. As it is important to first find your "bearings" when contemplating a trip, for the benefit of those who inquire, and hundreds of other printers, their wives, sisters and sweethearts throughout the United States and Canada, the following information in regard to railroads should prove useful: The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western and the Delaware and Hudson railroads are two large trunk lines entering Scranton. It is the northern terminal of the Central Railroad of New Jersey and the western terminal of the Scranton division of the Ontario and Western railroad and of the Wyoming division of the Erie railroad. This gives Scranton five long-distance railroad connections. The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western runs eight trains east to New York and nine west to Buffalo daily. All trains are solid vestibule, with parlor, dining and sleeping car service. This railroad has a division called the Bloomsburg, the terminal being at Sunbury, Pa., where it connects with all trains going south, east and west. The Delaware and Hudson railroad has five passenger stations within the city limits of Scranton. This railroad extends from Wilkes-Barre, Pa., to Albany, Troy and Rouses' Point, N. Y.; through its connected lines to Lake Champlain and all the Adirondack mountain resorts in New York, and finally through to Canada. The Central Railroad of New Jersey runs three trains (each way) daily to Philadelphia. Two of these are solid trains to Philadelphia with New York connection, the other being a solid train to New York with Philadelphia connection. There are ten through trains on this road daily, five leaving and five arriving in the city. The New York, Ontario and Western road operates two through trains between Scranton and Cadosia, N. Y., where connections are made with its main line north and south. The Erie railroad's Scranton branch connects at Lackawaxen, Pa., with the main line. This city is also the central point for operation of the Lackawanna and Wyoming Valley railroad ("Laurel Line"), a nineteen-mile, double-track, third-rail electric road to Wilkes-Barre, Pa. This road makes direct connection with the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western at Scranton, with the Lehigh Valley and Pennsylvania railroad at Wilkes-Barre, and with the Erie at Pittston, Pa. Scranton is only three and one-quarter hours' ride from New York, four and one-half hours from Philadelphia, six and one-half hours from Buffalo, eight hours from Boston or Washington, and twelve hours from Pittsburgh. There's the railroad "dope" for your guidance to the next convention city. Cut it out for future reference. Form your Scranton clubs now, come singly or in groups, for what promises to be the largest convention in the history of the International Typographical Union. The Scranton convention committee is getting right down to business, and from now on will leave nothing undone to arrange for your every comfort while our guests next August.

A. J. O'Malley, of the proof desk in the Times, spent his vacation in New York city. C. L. Auer, of the same office, while on his vacation, had the misfortune to sprain his ankle, which compelled him to keep to his room for a few weeks.

William C. Trump, delegate from Boston to the Colorado Springs convention, stopped off in Scranton on his return home from the convention city. "Shorty" Trump is an enthusiast for the next convention city, and promised, without fail, to be among the early arrivals convention week. He predicts a large attendance from the New England states.

Echoes of the Colorado Springs convention: For a union small in numbers, the convention was a "humdinger." But look at the size of the chairman and secretary of the committee, W. I. Reilly and E. D. Woodworth. Tall, dignified, and courteous, with over six feet of hustling qualities, they are a great team to make any affair a success. But at that, the treasurer of the committee, Stephen O'Donnell, has to be remembered when any bouquets anent the convention are being passed around. The same applies to the manager of that fine souvenir, W. J. Snider. We felt like shaking the hand of every member of the committee before leaving, congratulating them on their splendid work during convention week, but "Col." R. E. Darnaby, of Indianapolis, performed the honors so nobly just previous to adjournment of the convention that nothing remained for those present but to vote "aye" to everything the "Colonel" said. Home day was the big event of the convention. Our affable superintendent, John C. Daley, handled himself like a prince of entertainers. He did his utmost to make everybody he came in contact with feel welcome at the largest gathering of printers ever assembled on the Home grounds. It was a great convention, well managed, presided over by an impartial president, and I am positive everybody left for their respective homes well pleased with the hospitality of the Colorado Springs printers and the people in general of that thriving city.

Ed S. Troth, of the I. C. S. printery, sojourned during his vacation at his old home in Mount Holly, N. J. George Schoen, of the same chapel, spent a few weeks during the month at Brooklyn, Pa.

Two live-wire boys—John A. Remmert and Frank J. Ryan, of St. Louis. Ask those who accompanied the St. Louis printers' special to Colorado Springs. They will certify that they showed 100 per cent efficiency in looking after their every need while in St. Louis and again on the special train to the convention city.

John J. Lally, of the Times chapel, has lifted his traveler and left for New York. Mr. Lally is a clean-cut young man, a good operator, and should have no trouble in prospering in his new home.

The first thing that attracts the attention of the visitor in Denver on leaving the Union Station is the big arch which contains the words, "Welcome." The Scranton party to the Colorado Springs convention during their sojourn in Denver had a taste of the meaning of this word when they met George C. McCormick, foreman of the Denver Post, and his amiable wife. Mr. and Mrs. McCormick did their utmost to make the visit of our party to Denver a pleasant and enjoyable one. They showed us the many points of interest in their city, having at our disposal the high-power automobile of Mr. McCormick. The Post, of which Mr. McCormick is foreman, contains sev enty-five cards in its composing room, and is a finely equipped newspaper plant.

F. O. Martin, of St. Joseph, Mo., well known to the printing fraternity, served notice on the writer, while in that city, that he wanted reservations for the Martin family during convention week in Scranton. Will take care of you, Mr. Martin, and all our other friends throughout the country who will be our guests at the next convention.

The Ex-Delegates' Association of Denver is to be congratulated on the fine automobile trip arranged for the visitors to that city on Sunday following the adjournment of the Colorado Springs convention. The Scranton party is indebted to Representative Frank J. Pulver for many courtesies shown during its stay in Denver.

The nominating speech of "Commodore" Walton in placing Scranton in nomination for the 1918 convention was an effort worthy of our well-known member. Come and visit the "Commodore" in his home town next August. He knows your wants from attending past conventions, and he guarantees absolutely—and without fail—to see that the committee will have an abundance of everything to supply the every wish of our guests.

Make up your mind now to be with us in August. We will do the rest.

Keep your eye on Wilke-Barre, our neighbor sister union. The best entertaining "bunch" in the east. Wilkes-Barre day will be the best of the convention.

A. J. LANGAN.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

While it has been several months since No. 1 was represented in the columns of THE JOURNAL, the readers perhaps have not missed a great deal of an entertaining or instructive nature, as affairs in local typographical circles have been very quiet during the summer. With the coming of the cooler days of autumn, however, things have begun to hum in several directions. The September meeting saw a better attendance than has been in evidence for many months.

The Indianapolis book and job scale expires with the current year and a scale committee, composed of George P. Ruth, Robert A. Taylor, Herman Hendren, Frank Beadle and President Hinch, was appointed at the September meeting and instructed to open negotiations for a new scale agreement. At the October meeting the committee reported that the employers had been notified and steps had been taken to arrange a conference. A tentative draft of a new contract was discussed and the committee given full power and instructed to proceed, and it is believed that the local job printers are in a fair way to obtain a wage rate that will place them more nearly on a par with other cities of like size in the middle west.

The apprentice committee reported at the October meeting that it had made encouraging progress in the direction of better training and control of apprentices along the lines suggested by the International apprentice committee in its annual report. An apprentice association is in process of organization and negotiations are under way with local school authorities looking to the provision of extra-shop training for the apprentices already in the trade and to the regulation of admission of students in the printing branch of the prevocational training departments of the public schools.

Strong resolutions, addressed to the members of the city council, were adopted at the September meeting of the union denouncing certain practices of the police band, an organization composed of members of the Indianapolis police force, which has been a thorn in the side of the musicians' union here for some time by reason of the fact that it made a practice of accepting professional engagements in competition with the union musicians. This organization has, it seems, since been put definitely out of business as a menace to the musicians; at least, that is expected to be the effect of a rider to an ordinance recently passed by the city council awarding an increase of pay to the policemen which provides that salaries shall be paid for police duty only. The ordinance was fathered by Councilman E. P. Barry, a member of No. 1.

Labor day was observed here much the same as in former years, a parade in the morning, followed by a season of speech-making at Riverside park in the afternoon, being the features. Although No. 1 did not finally determine to march until the day before the parade, a band was procured and the printer turnout was quite up to its usual size.

Early in the present year No. 1 withdrew its delegates from the central labor union and dropped its per capita tax to the minimum of fifty members because of dissatisfaction with the conduct of affairs in the central body, the apparent control of that body by so-called labor politicians being particularly obnoxious to the membership of the union. That, in the main, the objections were well founded at that time no one who is familiar with conditions in the central body in the recent past will deny. With the election of a new set of officers in that organization, however, a general housecleaning is said to have taken place, with the result that a change of sentiment is apparent in No. 1, the membership evincing a disposition to let bygones be bygones, and action has been taken which probably will result in this union being represented by a full delegation in the central labor union in future.

For the first time in its history No. 1 this year sent its full quota of twelve paid delegates to a regular session of the state federation of labor, which met September 26 at Anderson. This action was born of a determination on the part of the local union to participate in state labor affairs to a greater extent than has been the custom of the organization in the past. This no doubt was a wise move under the circumstances and probably will be productive of great good, although it is too early as yet for any tangible results to be evident.

The Mercer-Caldwell Printing Company, operating one of the best-equipped small shops in the city, has been thrown into the hands of a receiver as a result of dissension in the directorate. The plant has been ordered sold as a unit, and, according to the receiver, Charles A. ("Zeke") Elliott, negotiations are under way which are expected to result in the continued operation of the plant under other management.

The National Enquirer, a weekly newspaper of the prohibition faith, has installed a plant of its own in the old Wood-Weaver building on East

Digitized by Google

Ohio street. The plant has a new and very complete equipment, including a web press, two linotypes and a label contract. James A. Parker, formerly of the News adroom, is foreman of the new shop.

A printing trades bowling league was organized here recently with Jack Shea as impresario, and a complete schedule of games culminating in a tri-city tournament between the champs of Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Louisville has been arranged.

George Dabney, a charter member and for many years president of Pittsburgh Union, has removed to this city and expects to make it his permanent home, although, for sentimental reasons, retaining his membership in No. 7.

George A. Tracy and Leo Michelson, president and secretary, respectively, of San Francisco Typographical Union No. 21, have been in the city the past month on business in connection with a newspaper scale for that city. Both gentlemen have many friends among the members of No. 1. Michelson worked here—his home town—for a number of years before migrating to the Pacific coast.

William Shaler, for many years linotype machinist on the Sentinel here and now mechanical superintendent of the News-Scimitar at Memphis, Tenn., spent a week in this city polishing up old friendships—and mahogany. "Bill" has taken unto himself a wife since going to Memphis and expects to spend his declining years in the peaceful tranquillity of the bluff city toning down the lurid lights of other days, but he admits the drought is rather trying at times.

Madison R. ("Colonel") Griggsby, of Nashville and everywhere, has been seriously ill in a local hospital for several months, but is improving rapidly and is almost ready to hit the trail again. Oscar Snyder, an old-time member of No. 1, has been admitted to the Home.

Work in both the newspaper and book and job branches has held up exceptionally well throughout the summer, although no noticeable shortage of help has been experienced. It is as yet too early to estimate the effect on the trade of the exodus of printers to the government service. Over two dozen journeymen and apprentices went with the various volunteer organizations, while the number taken in the draft will probably run into scores.

Clyde Loomis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Loomis, is a late enlistment from our ranks to beat the draft.

W. F. ("Dutch") Schultz, of Pittsburgh, is with us again after a camp-away of twenty-three years.

Mart Tietema and his 144-pound string of finny tribe are back from Spring Lake. Walter Droske was there, too, but makes no claims.

John Wygmans and Mart Tietema are our delegates to the Michigan state federation meet at Grand Haven.

The local subscribed for tickets to the trades council raffle. No. 39's committee is searching for new meeting quarters for the local.

Delegate Waddell gave a most concise report of the Colorado Springs convention.

Samuel Jubal Early Comfort, of Columbus, O., visited his big brother Ozias Breckenridge recently.

"Big Bill" Kelly is a new arrival and is subbing on the Press.

Through the efforts of Commissioner Kelley, No. 39's president, Grand Rapids policemen and firemen were granted salary increases.

Blue Line traffic has been heavy, as note: Departed—"Shorty" Kirk, "Shorty" Davis, W. S. Kelly, S. Rieger, S. T. Foster, W. S. Freimuth, T. S. Connelly, F. Donnelly, Dick Hartman, Henry Shalmo, "Foxy" Smith.

State of trade fair; dull season about over.

"Senator" McMullen is showing on the Herald.

GEORGE P. KOCH.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

Owing to the fact that the undersigned was in the west attending the meeting of the board of trustees of the Union Printers Home, he was unable to write the New York letter for September, but the matter was ably attended to by Horace W. Mason, of the secretary's office. The writer also attended the sixty-third annual convention of the International Typographical Union at Colorado Springs. I might also add that I found the western people just as hospitable as on two previous occasions, straining every nerve in an endeavor to show the visitors a good time. In Colorado Springs, "Bill" Reilly, "Steve" O'Donnell and the rest of the committee that had the convention in charge, certainly did themselves proud. The Omaha members made great preparations to entertain those coming in on the Chicago excursion, but were disappointed on account of the lateness of the train. Dinner was all prepared and on the tables, but the excursionists had not time to partake. When this was realized boxes of lunch were secured and each member of the party was provided with food enough to keep hunger away. A trolley trip was provided, which was enjoyed by all present. In Denver, on the Sunday following the closing of the convention, western hospitality was again demonstrated. Seventy-odd automobiles were present to take the visitors on a mountain trip, which covered sixty-nine miles, with lunch at a grove en route. Among the places of interest visited was the grave of William F. Cody ("Buffalo Bill"). August Koester, Frank Pulver and the rest of the Denver committee were on the job at all times in an endeavor to make everybody enjoy their visit to Denver. As to my first meeting as a member of the board of trustees I will endeavor to give an outline in a later letter, as time will not permit me to do justice to the subject now.

Newark (N. J.) Branch No. 38, National Association of Letter Carriers, on Wednesday, September 19, dedicated and unveiled a bronze tablet to the late Congressman Amos J. Cummings, at Clinton cemetery, Irvington, N. J. The ceremonies were participated in by Congressman Frederick R. Lehlbach, Mayor Edward R. Folsom, of Irvington; John F. Sinnott, postmaster of Newark; Rev. Karl K. Quimby and Willis Holly, of New York, and E. J. VanNess, of Connecticut, executive of the Cummings estate. The ceremonies took place at the Cummings family plot, about which the letter carriers and their band gathered after a parade from Springfield avenue and the speedway. The Newark carriers were represented by their full band and about 200 members in uniform. The tablet was erected as a tribute to the late congressman to his labors for the enactment of an eight-hour law for the postal men. Mr. Cummings, who was for many years a member of New York Typographical Union No. 6, sat in the house of representatives for fifteen years. Assistant Secretary George McKay represented New York Typographical Union No. 6 at the ceremonies. United States Senator John Sharp Williams, who was invited to make the dedication address, wrote Louis Levi, chairman of the committee, as follows:

Amos J. Cummings and I were very warm friends. I am very glad to hear of the tablet to be erected in his memory. Not only the letter carriers, but the printers and a great many other of the guild of workingmen owe a great debt of gratitude to him. I wish I could be with you upon the date you state, September 19, but it will be impossible. I feel myself honored much by the selection as the man for the particular task of making the address of dedication. I have served with very many men of very many molds in the house and senate of the United States. It has now been a quarter of a century since I entered public service. In all that time I have never met a man whose heart beat more responsive to the rightful demands of the needy and the industrious than did Amos Cummings.

W. J. Chambers, jr., formerly with Little & Ives, is now connected with the Lanston Monotype Machine Company. His territory is New York city and New Jersey. His many friends will wish him success in his new undertaking.

The drawing recently for a $50 Liberty bond for the benefit of an old couple in needy circumstances was won by Thomas Corbett, of the World chapel. The affair netted the old member of No. 6 and his wife $330.

Secretary and Mrs. John S. O'Connell accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Nate Newman, spent a short vacation in Boston and Portland recently, making the trip by water. The party was entertained by Norman McPhail at Boston for two days. After the party returned to New York Mr. and Mrs. McPhail and Mr. and Mrs. William Masson paid a visit to this city and were in turn entertained by the O'Connells and Newmans.

On Friday, August 17, Charles C. Delahunt, the oldest apprentice employed in the office of Rogers & Co., Inc., resigned to join the colors. The members of the chapel and members of the firm decided to show their appreciation and respect for Mr. Delahunt by presenting him with a handsome wrist watch. At the call of "time" in the evening Mr. Lester, with a few chosen remarks, made the presentation. Mr. Delahunt was taken by surprise and by his countenance showed that he appreciated the act of those he had been associated with. There are others in this office to follow the steps of Mr. Delahunt.

The Sphinxes held their annual outing on Sunday, September 2, at Donnelly's grove, College Point, L. I. It proved the most pleasant of any held by this social organization. The weather looked somewhat threatening in the morning, but nary a drop of water fell, and finally the sun won in its contest with the clouds. More than 300 were present and took part in the merry-making. The first part of the program of the day was breakfast at 11:30, when 262 sat down and partook heartily of fried eels, baked blue fish, tomato sauce, lyonnaise potatoes, broiled sirloin steak, cold slaw, potato salad, cucumbers, home-made biscuits, coffee and cigars. After breakfast was over an invitation was extended to all who had not been initiated into the Turkeys to present themselves and be shown the mysteries of this most popular organization. Grand Gobbler Norman McPhail, of Boston, was present, and about 125 candidates went through the initiation. The ball game was the next on the program, and proved a very classy affair, resulting in a decision of 8 to 7 in favor of the Live Wires over the Fast Asleeps. The next were: One-hundred-yard dash, won by Mr. Lehy; fat man's race, Charles C. Pugh; potato race, L. H. Harms; three-legged race, Messrs. Hawkes and Pugh; shoe race, Mr. Cook; shot-put, Mr. Kelly. Dinner was then called and it is doubtful if ever a hungrier outing gathering sat down to a meal, and the eats could hardly have been improved on for such an occasion. Both the quality and quantity were placed before the gathering, and not a murmur of displeasure was heard. The next day being Labor day, all could go the limit in their pleasures, and to all appearances every one was thoroughly enjoying himself.

Walter J. Shaffer, of the Technical Press, shows what perseverance will do. He was ambitious to join the aviation corps in this country, but was rejected. He then offered his services to the Lafayette flying squadron in France, and after much investigation was accepted. It is now Eleve Pilot Walter J. Shaffer, Camp D'Aviation Militaire, Avord, Cher, France. Before his departure for his new field of labor the Technical Press chapel presented him with a ring with a United States seal inlaid in colors.

The newspaper scale committee recently appointed by President Rouse has been holding sessions every Wednesday to receive suggestions and endeavor to mold a wage that will be satisfactory to members of the newspaper branch. This is going to be a tremendous task, for the printers feel the pinch of the high cost of living, and all realize that in the past increase has been so meager and raises have been few and far distant, that the wages have not near kept pace with the cost of living. Therefore, the membership has become thoroughly aroused. Some are demanding a substantial increase with the lessening of the hours at the same time. At the September meeting of No. 6 a suggestion of the scale committee was adopted that a special meeting of the union be held on the second Sunday in October to talk over the scale situation. The committee is composed of Daniel A. Dooley, E. H. Edwards, L. M. Grummond, George W. Morris, Louis V. S. Seifac, Chester B. Fox, secretary; S. Oppenheimer, chairman.

William McCabe, jr., son of "Bill" McCabe, one of the old war-horses of the typographical union, and the labor movement in general, enlisted in the aviation corps. He is attached to the Ninety-fifth aero squadron, which is training at Camp Kelly, San Antonio, Texas.

Thomas J. Robinson passed away on September 10. It apparently was just a sleep, he being found dead in his bed in the morning. The Friday previous he went to headquarters and, during a conversation with Assistant Secretary George McKay, he said he was nearly "all in." Mr. Robinson was about 73 years old. He first became prominent back in 1878. He was appointed by Charles W. Colburn that year as sergeant-at-arms, and continued to be appointed to the position by several succeeding presidents. The office was finally merged into the assistant secretaryship and "Tommy Rob," as he was familiarly known, continued to perform the duties. Later the office was made elective and on two different occasions he was defeated, only to return a winner for the office the following year. Mr. Robinson continued in office until September 1, 1910, when he resigned and was given a special pension by No. 6. Funeral services were held on the evening of Wednesday, September 11, at the undertaking establishment of David Ryan. President Rouse delivered the International Typographical Union burial service and gave a glowing tribute to the departed member. On the following day his body was cremated, which was a request made by Mr. Robinson while alive.

Other deaths were: Jacob F. Tutz, Charles A. Turvis, Charles A. Hannaford, August Reith, F. P. McLaughlin, William H. Kelly, A. L. Bory, Thomas H. Homes, R. H. Hooper, James E. Beatty and George Bamford.

Typographical Union No. 6 has 100 members in the national army with their cards on deposit at union headquarters. There are also thirty-six apprentices that are enlisted. No. 6 is taking care of the cards of those who enlist and will keep them in good standing from the union treasury.

Sam Murray, of globe trotting fame, recently received an interesting letter from William J. Wells, who left New York about eleven years ago and is now employed on the Paris Herald. Mr. Wells recites the many hardships undergone by those living across the water, the high cost of the necessities of life, and how they are restricted in the amount each person is to consume.
